Bro. Grant:—I saw in the Crisis a short article on religion at home. I have thought much on that subject since, and have felt impressed to speak a few words to the children of God through your valuable paper. The question arose in my mind like this: If we cannot live religion at home, where can we live it? I have been a professor of religion over forty-five years, and my experience has taught me that we must have religion at home, and live it out before our families. True, those that are or have been mothers know that there is much to try them. Is it not the trial of our faith? I have many times thought that this promise had been verified to me; "As thy days are so shall thy strength be." Sister, are you yoked with an irreligious companion? Is it not then very important that you have religion at home? Who will teach those little ones to pray, but mother? Who will lead those infant minds to Christ? It is the mother that is a christian at home. How comforting to enjoy the religion of Jesus at home with our little ones, when we can bow [illegible] with and pray for them. [illegible] While I am writing, the words of my little son, who is sleeping in death, are fresh in my mind: "Mother, I love to hear you pray. Does God hear folks pray?" "Yes, my son, God hears prayer," was my answer.

I find that in these last days family religion is very much neglected, even by Advent christians. I am sorry to say it, but it is even so. The family altar is broken down, or it was never set up. I believe that every christian at the head of a family ought to have family prayer,—the morning and evening sacrifice; it sweetens life through the day.

Finally, let us try to live religion at home and abroad, or wherever we are, so that we may know from day to day that our ways please God. May God help us to let our light so shine, that others may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. May the Lord sanctify us, and enable us as a people to discharge our duty in the fear of God, having our lamps trimmed and burning, with oil in our vessels with our lamps, that we may be ready to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb. For the World's Crisis.

HYMN.

All hail that day of peaceful rest,
When the redeemed shall come
From every nation and be blest,
In our Redeemer's home.

O! sacred day! to thee I look
With anxious heart and mind;
For oft we read in God's pure book
We there shall treasures find.

This earth is but a wilderness,
For weary saints to roam,
To toil and labor in distress,
And wait their promised home.

E'er let my faith be staid on One
Who bled and died for me,
That when he comes he'll say, Well done,
Come, join the ransomed free.

Oh God; I pray to haste that day,
When the new earth shall bloom;
Then we shall go no more astray,
Nor dread the dreary tomb.

ADVICE TO A CONTRIBUTOR.

Be sure you are master of your subject before you begin to write upon it. Do not sit down and throw off two or three paragraphs of random frothy thought before you can determine the point of your theme. Carefully plan your article, if possible, before committing it to paper; or if this is not practicable, write out your ideas in rough, and then go over the work, reducing the dimensions, and straightening the crooks, smoothing the asperities, and dovetailing the clumsy joints. On no account leave this duty to the editor. He cannot feel as much interest in the offspring of your pen as you do; he can not understand your points of argument as well as yourself; nor as fully appreciate your peculiarities of style. So that his alterations, made with the best of intentions, may prove ruinous to your most prized thoughts, and only gain him the name of being an unscrupulous garbler.

Deal in facts, and avoid expressing your feelings. There is no market for emotion in the cold literary world. Make as few apologies and explanations as possible. Aim to write for edification, comfort, or needed rebuke; and let a sincerity and christian kindliness of temper characterize your production, which shall be its sufficient introduction and recommendation. Do not commence a letter by saying, "I thought I would write,"—because everybody knows you thought before you acted; nor preface a story by remarking, "I am going to tell you a story,"—your reader will learn that fact himself. Use the most elegant, yet always the most simple, English you can command. And keep in mind that language is not thought itself, but the medium which conveys thought, the garment which clothes and adorns ideas. So much for the moral condition of your contributions. Now for the physical.

Study neatness first of all. You are involuntarily more drawn to the cleanly, tastily dressed child you chance to meet on the street, than to the dirty-faced, uncombed urchin by his side. A slovenly manuscript so repels an editor, that even before he reads it he finds himself passing upon it the judgment of condemnation. Would you secure an editor's favor, make your manuscript so tidy and attractive in its appearance, that he shall take it up to read with that good nature which will end in approval and acceptance.

Use bright ink, and plenty of paper, and write a plain hand, taking special pains to make all proper names legible. Short articles may be written on both sides of a leaf, but it is usually best to leave the second page of each leaf blank. Then there is room for notes, and if necessary the copy may be cut into portions, and put into the hands of several compositors. Write out every "and" in full, and employ no other abbreviations which are not to appear on the printed sheet. And after your article is finished, carefully review it, and see that it is properly paged; that every t is crossed, and every i is dotted; that every ill-shaped letter is re-formed; and every addition and interlineation marked for its place of insertion by a caret. Punctuate your manuscript with great care; correctly divide it into paragraphs; and underline once, twice, or three times, such words as are to be printed in italics, SMALL CAPITALS, or CAPITALS. In short, let every minutia of your written copy be just what you wish the printed page to be. And if you do not feel yourself competent to this task, I would advise you to make yourself sufficiently acquainted with English grammar and typography, before you again write for the press.

I would kindly urge this matter upon the consideration of every contributor for the Crisis, inasmuch as it is enjoined upon us as a christian duty to bear our own burdens, and help others bear theirs also. Your time is only that of one person; and the ten minutes you would spend in correcting your own article, or the half hour you might devote to re-writing and revising it, would be but a light task for you. But when this work, multiplied twenty fold, is all laid upon the shoulders of an editor, it becomes an Herculean labor. An editor can not re-write all the manuscript which comes into his hands, though he sometimes thinks it would be the easier way of dispatching it. But he must correct, since the author has not, and so the copy, pointed, and underscored, and erased, looking as sorry and "dirty," and bloody, as if it had been engaged in mortal combat and got pierced through with many arrows, is passed over to the compositor. [illegible]

But if the editor's patience has been tried, the type-setter's will be more so. [illegible] him is to be reproduced in his types. Instead of having a "clean," well-prepared copy to facilitate the work, he finds himself constantly hindered, sometimes brought to a dead halt, to deliberate on something which escaped the eye of the editor, or to waste his time and puzzle his brains over some unreadable word. And what makes this part of a compositor's labor especially irksome is, that he receives no remuneration for it. Necessity compels him to discharge such duties; but he is only paid for type setting, and there is no justice in laying on him authors' and editors' work.

The writer of the "Sacred History of the World" prepared his manuscript so wretchedly, that one of his compositors sent to him that he could not earn enough upon it to pay his rent, while he had seven mouths beside his own to feed.

Dear reader, have you been remiss in this direction? I trust you will be so no more. Nor can I think you will regard amendment in this thing as of little consequence, when you remember that in God's sight nothing is insignificant which helps to lighten toil, lift responsibility, or in any degree fulfill the golden rule of doing unto others as we would be done by. E. A. Annable.

CONDITION OF THE JEWS.

The Twenty-Seventh Report of the Episcopal Jews' Chapel Abrahamic Society, for visiting, corresponding with, and relieving the temporal wants of believing and inquiring Israelites. London, 1863. We insert the Report of this Society as containing information which will be interesting to our readers:

At the present moment there are about 20,000 Jews residing in the Holy Land. From the commencement of this century an unquenchable thirst after knowledge has manifested itself on the Continent amongst the Jewish people, which has no parallel in the history of any nation. Colleges, universities, and higher schools are attended proportionately by a much larger number of Jewish than Christian students throughout Germany, Austria, and France. In Prussia seven times more Jews than Gentiles devote themselves to the higher branches of knowledge, arts, and sciences. The fields of polite literature, journalistic, arts, and science, are filled with Jewish aspirants. Some of the best literary, political, and scientific periodicals have been, and still are edited by Jews. Some of Germany's most conspicuous poets are Jews. Several of its most celebrated painters, engravers, medallists, musicians, and composers are Jews, while there is scarcely a university but one or more chairs are occupied by Jews; and, we thankfully add, many more by believing Jews. . . .

In England, in France, in Belgium, in Holland, in the kingdom of Italy, and in some minor states of Germany, the Jews have been entirely emancipated. In France and Belgium, all the officers of the synagogue are paid by government. The Jews in Poland, who have hitherto groaned under much oppression, have obtained great privileges. They are permitted to buy real estates all through the kingdom; they may live in any part of the country; their testimony is received in every court; Jewish children are admitted to all schools, and the Jews are allowed to open schools of their own. Then those countries and towns from which the Jews have hitherto been excluded, even to our days, open now the gates to them.

BE KIND TO THE AGED.

Honored age, when whitening for the tomb, is an object of sublimity. The passions have ceased—hopes of self have ceased. They linger with the young, and pray for the young—and oh, how careful should the young be to reward the aged with their hearts, to diminish the chill of ebbing life! The Spartans look at a reverential respect for old age as a beautiful trait of character.

Be kind to those who are in the autumn of life, for thou knowest not what suffering they may have endured, or how much of it may still be their portion. Do they seem unreasonable to find fault or murmur? Allow not thine anger to kindle against them; rebuke them not, for doubtless many have been the crosses and trials of earlier years, and perhaps their dispositions, while in the spring time of life, were less flexible than thine own. Do they require aid of thee? Then render it cheerfully, forget not that the time may come when thou mayest desire the same assistance from others that thou renderest unto them.

Do all that is needful for the old, and do it with alacrity, and think it not hard if much is required at thy hands, lest thou, too, at last, come to feel the bitterness of favors received from cold and unloving hands and hearts, in thy helpless age.

A MODEL FAMILY.

About twenty-five years ago, two brothers, then and now residing in Kennebunk, married. Their wives never saw each other until they were married. These two brothers are blacksmiths and work together, occupying the same shop that their father and grandfather occupied. But the most remarkable and commendable feature in reference to the matter is that these two families have lived together as one family ever since they were married, all eating at the same table, and all in perfect harmony.

A few years ago these two men left home for California. While waiting on the Isthmus for a steamer, one of them was taken sick, and it was agreed that the well brother should proceed to California, and that the other should return home as soon as he was able, which he did. The California brother remained in the golden State, working at his trade, until he accumulated $3600, when he returned home. After the congratulations were over, the California brother brought out his treasure, and said, "Here, brother, is $1800, your half of my earnings!" The wives took turns in presiding at the table—alternating weekly; the one off duty taking no more interest in matters than if she was a boarder.

We gather the above facts from a gentleman of this city, who recently made a short call at the home of these brothers. We set these people down as bona-fide christians.

Morning Prayer.—Let the heart be given to God in the early light, before the noise and cares of the day disturb its serenity. Placing the heart thus early in the Creator's hands is a source of pleasure all the day, and a sure defense against the temptations we may meet. St. Origen going to comfort a martyr, who was to be tormented, was himself apprehended by the officers, and compelled either to offer to the idols, or to have his body tormented and his life sacrificed; and, to save himself he bowed unto the idol. Afterward, he made a sad confession of his guilt; and said he went forth that morning without making his prayers unto God, which he knew was the cause of his falling into evil. God's people would many times be delivered from evil, and kept from temptation, by devoting the first breath of morning in retired devotion, with their heavenly Father.

Care of Dahlia Roots.—The roots should be dug up as soon as the first hard frost has spoiled their foliage. Cut the stem about six inches above the tubers, then lay them up to dry. After they have become dry, pack them in the cellar, there to remain until they begin to grow in the spring; then plant [illegible] out in the borders, [illegible] —Scientific American.

SPRING OR FALL TO TRANSPLANT DECIDUOUS TREES.

This subject recently came before a committee of the Alton Horticultural Society, and was reported upon, through the chairman, Mr. Huggins, as follows:

The committee on the "best time and method of planting" beg leave to report that they regard the autumn, commencing about the last of October, as the best time in this latitude to plant out most deciduous trees and plants. All hardy trees, if in good order, we believe are best moved in the fall. The apple may be moved with safety at any time through the winter, when the frost and condition of the soil will admit. The strawberry, if planted in September, ordinarily will give a moderate crop of fruit the following season. The black-berry, currant, gooseberry, and pie-plant should always be moved in the fall and never late in the spring. Evergreens we would move in the spring just as the buds begin to swell. All other trees and plants, if not moved in the fall, should be early in the spring, indeed just as soon as the frost is out of the ground, and the soil in working order.

Let the soil of the plat of ground intended for your tree or plants be deeply stirred with plow or spade—say twelve to fourteen inches deep. The holes for your trees in prairie soil thus prepared, need not be larger than sufficient to contain the roots in their natural position. In sandy soil larger holes may be dug and filled with rich top soil before planting the tree.

Let all broken parts of roots be cut off, and the top of the tree reduced to correspond with the loss of roots. The tree or plant being placed in position, every root should be straightened out in its natural order. See that every root is surrounded by good moist earth, then tread the soil gently over the roots. Now raise the earth around the tree or plant a little above the surrounding soil and tread firmly. In fall planting a mound of earth should be raised around all trees, say ten to twelve inches high, and firmly trod as a protection to the trees. This mound should be removed in spring.

All small plants should be well mulched as a protection from the frost. We would plant all trees except evergreens a little deeper than they stood in the nursery. The planter following these hints and general directions, and ever remembering that the secret of success lies in stirring the soil often while the trees are young, pruning and destroying the borer and worms, may reasonably expect, in due time, to reap the fruit of his labor. All of which is respectfully submitted.—Prairie Farmer.

Correct Speaking.—We advise all young people to acquire, in early life, the habit of correct speaking and writing, and to abandon as early as possible, any use of slang words and phrases. The longer you live, the more difficult the acquisition of correct language will be; and if the golden age of youth, the proper season for the acquisition of language be passed in its abuse, the unfortunate victim of neglected education is, very properly, doomed to talk slang for life. Money is not necessary to procure his education. Every man has it in his power. He has merely to use the language which he reads, instead of the slang which he hears; to form his taste from the best speakers and poets in the country.

Storing Potatoes.—Dig the potatoes in fair weather, sort out such as are desired for table use next season, and put them in boxes or barrels, filled in among the potatoes with dry sand or fine dirt. Keep them in a dry cellar where they will not freeze, and in the spring when they start their sprouts, turn them out, take off the sprouts, and then put them back in the boxes.—Scientific American.

HUSKS VERSUS FEATHERS.

Reader, did you ever sleep on a husk bed? No? Then let me say to you confidentially, that a husk bed is, according to my experience and judgment for many years, just the nicest and cleanest thing in the world to sleep upon. For my own use, I put the husks into two ticks, the upper one not quite as full as the under one, making it much easier to adjust or even up when the bed is made. The under tick can be filled quite full, making it elastic, requiring no daily adjustment, but will remain for months as even as a hair mattress. Once, and sometimes twice a year, I have them taken out and emptied from the ticks upon a clean grass-plot where they are raked open and stirred up, shaking the fine dust from them that naturally accumulates from the friction they undergo in daily use. A sprinkling of water upon them while thus spread out will cause them to curl, making them almost as light as feathers. They should be shaken up several times a day, that the action of the sun and air may thoroughly penetrate them. If allowed to remain out of doors over night a heavy dew answers all the purposes of watering them. When thoroughly dried and aired, return them to the ticks—which you have probably washed—and you have a bed as good as new once in six months or Fletcher, have appeared with a tobacco-box in his pocket, or a cigar in his mouth? or a year, as sweet as new-mown grass, as comfortable as any feather bed, and decidedly more agreeable, to those who appreciate good air in a sleeping room. In making up the bed, a thick comfortable, or something equivalent, should be placed over the bed before the sheets are put on, for the benefit of those whose skin is tender from ill health or other causes. The husks should be entirely freed from hard substances. Husk beds, thus managed, will last for years, by occasionally adding a few pounds to keep the quantity good.

I have used nearly all kinds of materials that have been proposed as substitutes for feathers, and must render my verdict in favor of husks. The cost of good clean husks is about one-eighth of the cost of feathers; and, as to sweetness and healthiness, there is no comparison. The animal odor attached to feathers is very offensive to many.

TO MY DYSPEPTIC FRIENDS.

hand, a potato, two or three spoonfuls of other

You have asked me to prescribe for you. You expect medicine. Perhaps you hope for whiskey, just now the rage for chronic maladies. But I shall give you nothing to swallow. You swallow too much already.

Of all the maladies dyspepsia is the most distressing. To get rid of its horrors you would part with your right arm. I believe you. But will you part with a portion of your table luxuries? I fear not. But presuming you are in earnest, I will prescribe for you.

RULES.

1. Rise early, dress warm, and go out. If strong, walk; if weak, saunter. Drink cold water three times. Of all cold baths, this is the best for the dyspeptic. After a half hour or more, come in for breakfast.

2. For breakfast eat a piece of good steak half as large as your hand, a slice of coarse bread, and a baked apple. Eat very slowly. Talk pleasantly with your neighbors. Read the cheerful comments of loyal journals. Avoid hot biscuits and strong coffee. Drink nothing.

3. Digest [illegible] your work. [illegible] Work hard [illegible] mind [illegible] dinner. Sleep a little. Drink water [illegible]

[illegible] vegetables, and a slice of coarse bread. Avoid tomatoes. For desert, an apple. Give more than half an hour to this meal. Use no drink.

5. After dinner play anaconda for an hour. Now for the social, for pleasant games—a good time.

6. No supper. A little toast and tea even, for supper, will make your recovery very slow.

7. In a warm room, bathe your skin with cold water, hastily, and go to bed in a well-ventilated room, before nine o'clock.

Follow this prescription for three months, and your stomach will so far recover that you can indulge for some time in all sorts of irregular and gluttonous eating. Or, if you have resolved, in the fear of Heaven, to "present your bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable unto God," and will continue to eat and work like a christian, your distressing malady will soon be forgotten.—Dio Lewis, M. D.

THE USE OF TOBACCO.

Are there objections to the habit of chewing, smoking, and snuffing tobacco? There are, and I present the following:

1st. We are divinely commanded to "deny ourselves," to "keep the body under," to "abstain from all appearance of evil," and "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." The christian's body is a "temple of the Holy Ghost," and he has no right to pollute it with anything filthy or poisonous.

2d. It is an unseemly, uncleanly, unnatural, unnecessary, unhealthy, offensive, and unpleasant habit. It pollutes the very earth and atmosphere of America, habituating our young men early and effectually to bow down their necks to the grievous yoke of the world, the flesh, and the devil.

3d. Its general accompaniments are anything but good. It is generally associated with whiskey bottles, low groggeries, profanity, and all manner of rowdyism. Only think! to see ministers of the holy gospel of God going into a low, infectious dram-shop, or up to a tavern-bar, to fill an odoriferous tobacco-box, or to purchase cigars! How would the holy Jesus, or the apostle Paul, or Wesley,

4th. The general voice of the deeply pious have ever been against it as a filthy, low, degrading, wicked, habit or practice. The following is from the pen of that great and good man, Adam Clarke:

"1st. Every medical man knows well that the saliva which is so copiously drained off by the infamous quid, and the scandalous pipe, is the first and greatest agent which nature employs in digesting food.

A single drop of the chemical oil of tobacco being put on the tongue of a cat produced violent convulsions, and killed her in the space of one minute. A thread dipped in the same oil, and drawn through a wound made by a needle in an animal, killed it in the space of seven minutes.

3. That it is sinful to use it as most do, I have no doubt. If destroying the constitution, and vilely squandering away the time and money which God has given for other and nobler purposes, may be termed sinful. Can any who call themselves christians vindicate their conduct in this respect?"

SENSIBLE TALK.

I have been asked, sometimes, how I could perform so large an amount of work with apparently so little diminution of strength. I attribute my power of endurance to a long formed habit of observing, every day of my life, the simple laws of health, and none more than those of eating. It ceases any longer to be a matter of self-denial. It is almost like an instinct. If I have a severe tax on my brain in the morning, I cannot eat heartily at breakfast. If the whole day is to be one of exertion, I eat very little till the exertion is over. I know that two forces cannot be concentrated in activity at the same time in the body. I know that when the stomach works the brain must rest, and when the brain works, the stomach must rest.

If I am going to be moving about out of doors a great deal, I can give a full swing to my appetite, which is never exceedingly bad. But if I am engaged actively, and necessarily in mental labor, I cannot eat much. And I have made eating with regularity and with reference to what I have to do a habit so long, that it ceases any longer to be a subject of thought. It almost takes care of itself. I attribute much of my ability to endure work, to good habits of eating, constant attention to the laws of sleep, physical exercise, and general cheerfulness.

There is one thing more to be said in this connection. It is not a matter of epicureanism that a man should be dainty concerning the food he eats. On the contrary, I hold that a civilized man ought to be civilized in his cookery. I suppose one of the infallible signs of the millennium will be a better regulated kitchen—a kitchen that sends out food that will not make christian men sick.—Beecher.

THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE LORD'S COMING.

The world is growing gray and old,
And scoffers at the judgment bold,
And yet Thou art not here.
Thy chariot-wheels, O when shall they appear?
We only know, as deeps each evil year,
Thy coming draweth near!

Some in Thine absence watch and weep,
Most of the would-be watchers sleep;
Few hearts there are that yearn,
O Lord, for Thee! few loving hearts that burn
And break for thy return!

The pale and clouded light of day
Still shows the wretched same array
Of glorious vanity!
The painted hues which hide deformity,
The hollow smile of secret misery;
The rival joys which men would have to be,
O Lord, instead of Thee.

Some hazy eyes are looking for a time
Of peace and righteousness in every clime;
Some ears are listening for a universal chime
Which shall precede Thy coming—but the wail
Still rises to a gale,
And pity weeps, and purity turns pale—
While moans of suffering, songs of revelry,
Clangor of war, and shouts of ribaldry,
Alone, with their delightsome melody,
Answer these baseless hopes in bitter mockery.
The darkness deepens: through the tenfold gloom
Stream on earth's millions, to the day of doom
While ever and anon, the fearful cry
Of human passion tells the struggle nigh,
The last uplifting of the ocean swell;
The last proud effort of triumphant hell;
The last defiant roar
Of all Thy haters, who the light before
Of thine appearing, Lord! with horror sore
Shall, overwhelmed, sink to rise no more!

It is the midnight hour; the careless lie
Wrapped in the slumbers of security.
O blinding light!
O rending sky!
O form of swift descending majesty!
O shout of joy!
O horrid cry!
O thrilling shriek of wildest agony!
O angel legions, dazzling white!
O dead, arising at the sight!
O voice above the loudest trumpet blown!
O Christ, thy thunder tone!
Calling thy myriad myriads from the grave.
We rise, we soar, we cleave
The clouds beneath thy feet,
And, mounting, greet
With ecstasy
And hallelujahs sweet,
O Savior, Thee!

From every voice, with one accord,
It is the Lord! It is the Lord!
And full in every raptured eye
His image shines resplendently!
O long-believed-in, seen at length,
Outshining in thy sunlike strength,
Thy glory mingling with thy grace,
We see thee, Jesus, face to face!
With all the armies of the sky
We shout thy glad Epiphany!
Thrice welcome, earth-rejected King!
From every lip thy praises ring!
Thrice welcome to thy rightful throne;
For thou art worthy, Lord, alone!
For thou art He who once was slain.
And we are now to share thy reign,
For thou hast washed us in thy blood,
And made us kings and priests to God!
O silver angel-trumpets clear,
Uplift the joy from sphere to sphere!
O saintly voices, sweet and strong,
Roll through eternity along
The thunder of redemption-song!

ETERNAL LIFE.

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—JOHN 17: 3.

A knowledge of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, is essential to the attainment and enjoyment of eternal life. The importance of this knowledge is clearly stated by the Savior and his apostles.

Peter, in his second general epistle "to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ," prays that "grace and peace be multiplied" unto them, "through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." And he proceeds to show, that it is by means of this knowledge that all the great and precious promises become ours, whereby we are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Satan, being fully aware of the value of this knowledge, of its great power over the human heart, seeks to shut it out from the mind by means of unbelief, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts," for what? "To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4: 4, 6. By means of this light shining forth from the person of Jesus, and illuminating our hearts with the knowledge of his purposes in Christ, we are guided into the way of eternal life; hence the efforts of Satan to blind the minds of those who believe not, so that they may wander on in darkness, and perish at last without hope.

So highly did Paul esteem the acquirement of this knowledge, he cheerfully counts "all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus." In harmony with the text, is the language of John: "We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." 1 John 5: 20.

The unbelieving world are in a state of ignorance, destitute of this essential knowledge; consequently in a condition of death. The apostle Paul describes their condition thus: Walking in the "vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." "Who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. But ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus."—Eph. 4: 17–21. Those who have been taught of God, and have obtained a knowledge of him and his Son Jesus Christ, have put off the old man, which is corrupt, and have put on the new man, which, after the image of God, is created in righteousness and true holiness.

Again, we have another description of the condition of those who remain in a state of ignorance, a fearful description of their awful degeneracy, as the result of their not liking to retain God in their knowledge. For this cause "God gave them over to a reprobate mind, . . . being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful; who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them."—Rom. 1: 28–32. Such are treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds. What will be the retribution of such ungodly deeds as we have enumerated? "Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil." "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed . . . in flaming fire, . . . taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1: 7–9.

How awfully fearful, then, is the doom of those who say to God, "Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." But the question arises, How shall we attain to this knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is essential to eternal life? That the natural man, by his own unaided powers, cannot attain unto this knowledge, is evident from the teaching of the Holy Word. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." "It is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." What then? Are all in a state of ignorance respecting the riches of the inheritance laid up for the righteous? No. The heart of the unrenewed man is here meant, for the apostle goes right on to say, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. . . . Now we (saints) have received . . . the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God."—1 Cor. 2.

Here we have clearly set forth the condition of the unilluminated mind—the benighted understanding—the unrenewed heart. They are without the knowledge of the glorious things laid up for the saints of God. They comprehend not their excellency, and see in them no attractions. By what means, then, shall this knowledge be attained? The prayer offered by the apostle Paul for the Ephesian church affords a clear and comprehensive answer to this question. "Wherefore I also . . . cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places."—Eph. 1: 16–20. Thus we see it is through the illumination of the Spirit of God, that Spirit which "searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," that we attain to the knowledge of the inheritance. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God"; i. e., without the revelation of the Spirit no knowledge can be obtained of divine things, and for this cause we have, says the apostle, "received the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."

When Peter made this confession of faith in reply to our Lord's question, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus said unto him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." A divine revelation was needful to convince Peter of this important fact.

Paul says that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." 1 Cor. 12: 3. It is a truth the Holy Spirit alone has revealed to mankind. By this we do not mean that every man must have it written on his heart by the direct operation of the Spirit. The revelations made to us in the Scriptures are from the Holy Spirit. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." We trace the revelations of the Spirit from the Fall to the closing book of the New Testament. But we do wish to be understood as teaching that those revealings of the Spirit through the written word need to be attended by the illumination of the Spirit to the benighted mind of the natural man, in order for them to be rightly comprehended. This is evident from what we have already quoted, and other testimony might be added.

The Savior told his disciples that when the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, was come, he would guide them into all truth; "For he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he shall show it unto you." It was thus a knowledge of God and Christ was to be acquired. And in this we see the excelling glory of the ministration of the Spirit above all other. That Spirit which searcheth all things, exploring the deep mines of God's wisdom, knowledge and grace, was able to take of those riches and show them unto every one of Christ's disciples. Under the dispensation of the law, a knowledge of God could not be universal. It was manifested only through the Sinaic thunders, lightnings, and earthquakes, and the mystic shadows of the symbolic ritual. How very imperfect and limited were such revelations of God and his Son Jesus Christ!

The manifestations made of Deity under the old dispensation were calculated to impress the mind with a sense of his great abhorrence of sin, and strict justice in vindicating his law, rather than with a view of his exceeding love for a perishing world. By the death-penalty inflicted as the consequence of one transgression, he had shown that the guilty could not escape punishment. By the sin-cursed earth, and all the vast evils resulting from the fall of Adam, sin was manifest as a thing of momentous account in God's sight.

By the deluge, sweeping from the face of the earth the entire race of ungodly men, sparing only eight souls, who alone had faith in God's word, he manifested his hatred of sin, and respect of holiness. By the fiery tempest, destroying the vile inhabitants of the cities of the plain, he gave another exhibition of the same traits. By the plagues sent upon Egypt; by the overthrow of Pharaoh's host; by the fearful punishments that were awarded to the rebellious Israelites—the fiery serpents and pestilence; by the forty years wandering in the wilderness, we see clearly evinced the dreadful character of sin, and the certain doom awaiting the transgressor. The Old Testament Scriptures abound with such illustrations of this fact, yet we can trace mercy's steps all the way, though but dimly seen.

Truly deplorable was the condition of the world when the glad shout broke upon the stillness of night from the angelic host,—"Glory to God in the Highest! Peace on earth, good will toward men!" To the shepherds who were watching their flocks was the glad announcement made—"Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

For centuries God the Father had been working among the nations of earth, and dimly revealing his glorious attributes; and now Christ, the only begotten, the embodiment and impersonation of the Deity, comes in human form, possessed of like passions with us; he comes to suffer and sympathize with humanity, to take upon himself human woes and sins, and pour out his blood as a sacrifice for man's redemption. He comes to reveal the Godhead more clearly to mortals; to present Divinity in a more benign aspect; to assure the perishing sinner of a Father's love for them, his will to save and exalt them to an equal position with his own Son, making them first righteous, then heirs of the kingdom promised to David's successor.

God was now made manifest in the flesh, and adapted himself to the capacity of the poor, lowly, and ignorant sons of men. Says Jesus to one who said to him, "Show us the Father," "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." How? "Believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me." "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also." "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

O! how often has the trembling heart, weighed down with a sense of short-comings and imperfections, feared to approach unto the Father, viewing him as one far distant and disposed to frown upon us with displeasure, while we fled to Christ as a sympathizing friend, who could be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, having been tempted in all points like unto us. But the tender love, the affectionate words of sympathy and comfort spoken by Jesus, the gracious invitations to come to him with all our sorrows and cares, the sweet promises of help; all, all are but the outgushings of the Father's great heart of benevolence, poured forth to us through the medium of his Son.

We see perfectly exemplified in Christ the character of the Eternal Father—his disposition toward his erring creatures. Do we admire the noble spirit manifested by the father of the returning prodigal? That is a revelation of God's disposition toward his repenting ones. If, then, we would know the only true God, we must become acquainted with his Son, whom he hath sent. We must study his character as it is unfolded to us by the Evangelist. But we must not study it unaided by the Spirit's influence. To the third person in the Godhead we are indebted for the true comprehension of Christ. We are living in the dispensation of the Spirit. It is a far more glorious manifestation than the two that preceded it. Through the various manifestations of God in other times, but little was known of him. He was but dimly revealed and comprehended through the mystic symbols, though there were at times bright glimpses vouchsafed of his glory, as it beamed forth from between the cherubim. But oh, how limited! Few, very few were privileged to behold it. And to only one nation was committed the lively oracles.

When Deity became incarnate, the light shone forth more clearly, imparting greater knowledge in the person of Jesus Christ. Still this was limited. Few, comparatively, could gaze upon this impersonation of God, and listen to his words of wisdom. The world was yet in darkness.

Jesus finished the work given him to do, and ascending on high sent forth the Spirit, which, untrammeled by humanity, could go forth on its world-wide mission, illuminating every benighted mind, and imparting knowledge to all. Is not this in harmony with the written word? "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." "He shall reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." John says of Christ, "That was the true light, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." That general illumination could not have been during his personal sojourn upon earth. It is the mission of the Spirit to present Christ to the minds of the world at large, revealing their sins, and directing the attention to him as their sacrifice and Savior. It accompanies the written word; that word, inspired by its influence, is rendered luminous by its teachings, and the preached gospel is made effective unto salvation by its divine power.

Human instrumentality can speak only to the outward ear, but the Spirit of God utters its voice in the heart, and awakens the slumbering conscience, revealing by its searching light the secret sin and hidden depravity. It makes intercession for the saint with groanings unutterable, and helpeth their infirmities. God knoweth the mind of the Spirit, for he maketh intercession in accordance with his will. By its influence the heart is sanctified through the truth, and the love of God shed abroad therein. By it the child of God is assured of his acceptance, and sealed unto the day of redemption. It is the earnest of his inheritance, the pledge of future bliss. The baptism of the Spirit imparts unction and power to the testimony of Christ's witnesses.

This is the well of water springing up in the believer's heart, even unto everlasting life. Eternal life is promised only to such as have that saving knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is acquired by the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, directing to a study of his character as revealed in the Scriptures which are able to make wise unto salvation. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye (think) ye have eternal life," said Christ to the Jews. To the believing heart there is made known the knowledge of eternal life by the word of God, and the only source from whence this everlasting life is derived, viz., Jesus Christ. He says, "I give unto them (his sheep) eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."

When will this eternal life be given to the sheep or true followers of Christ? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." Then "he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Then shall he say also unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Here we have the answer given direct from the lips of Jesus that it is when he comes in glory, and sits upon his throne of glory, he gives unto his sheep eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man, nor Satan even, be able to pluck them out of his hand. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The state of man by nature is one of death. He is alienated from the life of God, dead in trespasses and sins; living in pleasure, they are dead while they live, and they have in them no germ of life; and unless they accept of the life offered to them in Christ, they must forever remain in a state of death; they shall never see life. Not that they shall never be raised up from the grave; that is not the idea; but their condition is unchanged; they remain destitute of spiritual life—still dead in trespasses and sins, while the wrath of God abideth on them forever.

The one who has heard the call of the Spirit of God saying unto him, "Awake! thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light!" and obeyed that call, has passed from death unto life. They have received into their hearts the living word, and being begotten of this incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever, they are heirs of that eternal life which God hath promised unto all them that obey him.

Of this fact they need not be in doubt. "We know," says John, "that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death." And another thing they know: "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is eternal life."—1 John 5: 20.

PRAISE.—There is a commendation which affords me an exquisite satisfaction; I mean a commendation which flows from an unaffected love of goodness, and from a desire to confirm it. Such commendation confers more honor on those who give than on him who receives it, and shows him that he has a place, not in the admiration of a superficial mind, but in the affections of a good and pure heart.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 3.

THE JUBILEES FORTY-NINE YEARS APART,—NOT FIFTY.

Having clearly shown the chronological location of the first jubilee, and having subsequently counted an intervening space of forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, thus proving that A. D. 1868 is a jubilee year, it may be well to notice an erroneous impression imbibed by some, that a space of fifty years intervenes between the jubilees. The scriptural facts are these:

I. "The seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land. . . . And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. THEN shall thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month [in this forty-ninth year]; in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year." (Lev. 25: 4, 8, 9, 10.) Thus it will be seen that the jubilee does not begin with the end of the forty-ninth year, but in the seventh month of the forty-ninth year, on the tenth day of the month, running several months into the fiftieth year.

II. As the jubilee is one year long, and does not begin with the first month, like the other years, but begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, it must take in a part of two ordinary years, and therefore cannot be wholly identical with either the forty-ninth or fiftieth year, but is called "the fiftieth year," as it extends beyond the forty-ninth.

III. The provision "for three years," to be made each sixth year, for the sabbatical year, (that is, to last through the sixth and seventh and till they should "sow the eighth year" and reap the crop), being the same for the seventh sabbatical year as for the previous sabbatical years, (Lev. 25: 20–22), is proof that we are correct, as the ending of the jubilee would be in the seventh month of the year in which they were commanded to "sow," before their sowing time arrived,—thus not infringing upon their sowing time, nor requiring any different arrangement than for the ordinary sixth and seventh years; whereas, if the jubilee had begun with the first month of the fiftieth year, or on the tenth day of the seventh month of the fiftieth year, a four years' supply would have been requisite prior to the seventh sabbatical year, while such an arrangement never was given in the Bible.

IV. The jubilee, embracing a part of two years, allows the ordinary years, beginning with the first month, to proceed uninterrupted; that is, the regular course of the series of seven years is not discontinued till the jubilee is past, for the jubilee is situated between no two years, and therefore belongs to a distinct series.

V. As "the fiftieth year," (beginning on the tenth day of the seventh month), does not begin at the termination of the forty-ninth year, it will not help the matter to assume that it begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, the year after the forty-ninth, for then it would be a part of the fiftieth, and a part of the fifty-first, as really as it was a part of the forty-ninth and a part of the fiftieth in the other case, besides leaving a vacancy uncounted, and placing the jubilees several months over fifty years apart.

VI. Finally, only by allowing forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, as plainly given in the Bible, can we make the "thirtieth year" of a jubilee cycle synchronize with the "fifth year of the captivity," as given in Ezek. 1: 1, 2, where "the thirtieth year" of nothing else can be meant.

All is now clear, and it can no longer be doubted that 1868 is a jubilee year. The jubilee trumpet will "sound throughout all the land," and wake the dead saints, if our reckoning is correct, in 1868.

That every one may clearly see the point, we will give a table of jubilees, locating the first forty-nine years from the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, which required the observance of seven sabbatical years, occurring once in seven years, and also requiring the jubilee to begin in the seventh sabbatical year, on the tenth day of the seventh month, (see Lev. 25th chapter, and Ex. 21: 2, with the preceding chapter); thus, according to our chronology, placing the first jubilee B.C. 1563.

If the jubilee ushers in the deliverance of God's people from death and mortality, as we nearly all believe, the coming of the Lord to raise the "dead in Christ" must take place in 1868, or not till forty-nine years later. But the signs of the times forbid the passing of forty-nine years more; hence, we look to 1868 for the Lord's coming.

The jubilee trumpet will sound "in the day of atonement," when our great High Priest shall come out of the "Holiest" to bless the waiting people, and pronounce the atonement completed, on the tenth day of the seventh month, when the great antitypical "feast of tabernacles" will be joyfully observed by all the saints, in their "chambers" above, for seven prophetic days, "until the indignation be overpast," and the earth be purified, or made "new" from the melting conflagration; thus will the saints of all ages sweetly commemorate their escape from an Egyptian world and the bondage of mortality. Happy jubilee!

"That speaks our trials ended"

in 1868. Our prospective "possessions"—immortality, eternal life, and untold felicity—will then be ours, and the kingdom of Christ be organized, Christ being inaugurated king, and the saints being constituted subjects, there waiting in their chambers "till the indignation be past," and their polluted territory be purified, or "the sanctuary be cleansed" in 1875. Soon—

"The jubilee proclaims us free,
O! hail happy day."

THE TIME QUESTION.

I find much said by Adventists against setting the time for the end of this dispensation. There have been so many failures in the past attempts, they are afraid future attempts will be as the past have been. It may be so, yet God set the time for the first Advent, and it was fulfilled; and Paul said (Eph. 1: 10), "In the dispensation of the fullness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

The evidence to me is conclusive that the time of his glory is as positively foretold as that of his suffering. 1 Pet. 1: 10—12. Those times were given for the benefit of the church. 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17. But the time can be of no benefit unless it can be understood before its fulfillment. Everything in church and State, the world over, agrees with the prophetic description of their character and condition at the end of time.

The fulfillment of God's word in the past shows that he meant what he said, and said what he meant. Therefore it is reasonable to me that God should raise up some man or men to bring out the true chronology of the world, and show where those times begin; thus we can know where they end. If Bro. Thurman is the favored one to do it, Amen. This is the time for some to say, like John the Baptist, The time is fulfilled and the kingdom is at hand. Let us be cautious and not go too fast, but, above all, let us not be too slow.

I have been waiting on the Lord for light on this subject for years, with the assurance that there would be light on this subject soon. Over twenty years some of us have been watching and waiting, and have been often blessed in so doing. God says those are blessed who wait for him. I hope to live to see the end. With the present light it seems that 1868 cannot pass without bringing the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. For this great event let us all live and act, carrying out the spirit of the angelic song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Then when the Master comes he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Peace be with all those that love our Lord Jesus in truth.

For the World's Crisis.

"CHRIST OUR LIFE."

If your views of man's mortality and immortality are correct, then we have a perfect solution of what has been regarded a very difficult class of scriptures.

1. In 1 John 1: 5, we have the birth of this immortal life: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Messiah, is born of God."

2. The testimony of this Life: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the (testimony) in himself. . . . And this is the record, that God hath given to us (christians) eternal life, and this life is IN his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life. . . That ye may know that ye have eternal life." See vers. 9–15.

3. Now we reach the passage that under the old, so called, orthodox view, together with the whole class corresponding with it, has been justly regarded very difficult: "There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it." Ver. 16. This sin unto death is the willful act of one "who has been enlightened" (Heb. 6), a true disciple, a believer in Jesus, as above, deliberately denying "the Lord that bought him," and thus "bringing on himself swift destruction." (2 Pet. 2: 1); "For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more (or other) sacrifice for sin." "Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy WHO HATH TRODDEN UNDER FOOT THE SON OF GOD, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing." Heb. 10. If those enlightened and who afterwards shall have fallen away (Heb. 6; the participles here are all in the past), it shall be impossible to renew them again to repentance; for "they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh." Thus have we the solution to THE "sin unto death," as also seen by the context in the chapter under consideration. For "we know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not" (thus unto death, by denying his Son); but keepeth himself; . . . for we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." Vers. 18–20.

4. Now, Bro. Grant, my mode of argument on this whole connection of thought is this: 1 John 5: 11, 12;—"And this is the (testimony), that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is IN his Son." Ver. 11. . . . If eternal life is IN His Son, it is not out of his Son, consequently it is his Son is nothing distinct from being out of his Son; but the apostle has himself fixed his position immovably. "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." Ver. 12.

5. But where has God given us the testimony referred to in verse 11, that he hath given us christians only life in his Son? Ans. Matt. 16;—"Simon Peter said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus said, "Man hath not revealed it unto you, but my Father which is in heaven. And I also say unto thee, that thou art Peter (compare Rom. 10: 9, 10), and on this rock I will build my church (compare 1 Cor. 3: 11), and the gates of *death shall not prevail against it." (Compare Acts 2: 23, 24.). And see also John 5: 23 and on; "Verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, HATH ETERNAL LIFE (and cometh not to judgment, but passeth from death INTO life)"; and John 11: 25, 26;—"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And WHOSOEVER LIVETH AND BELIEVETH IN ME SHALL NEVER DIE"; and also 1 John 3: 14;—"We know that we have passed from DEATH unto life." See also Rev. 20: 4, 5, where we shall see the consummation of this glorious resurrection life. "And I saw thrones, and they sat on them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them who had been beheaded for (THE TESTIMONY) of Jesus, even (the Greek word having its force of "even" here, must here be so translated) for the word of God; and which had not worshiped the beast, nor his image (which shall now soon be made to speak,—likely a speaking statue of the first Napoleon, by Napoleon III. See Rev. 13: 15); neither had received (ITS) mark on their foreheads, or in their hands; and they LIVED AND REIGNED with the Christ a thousand years. . . . THIS IS THE FIRST RESURRECTION (compare Phil. 3: 11); on SUCH the SECOND DEATH hath no power (and this is the meaning of John 11: 26), but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall REIGN with him a thousand years."

Truly indeed, Blessed and holy is he who hath part in this resurrection! Happy, thrice happy he! Here is the fruition of his passing from death unto life! O, how glorious! How my heart warms with immortal joy! If, then, brethren, ye be risen with the Christ, seek the things that are above,—for ye have died (your old manhood has died; compare Rom. 6: 3–6), and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ OUR LIFE, shall be manifested, then will ye also be manifested with him in glory. Col. 3.

"COMING EVENTS CAST THEIR SHADOWS BEFORE."

This is true to a certain extent. For instance, when the event is a dark one, it first shadows darkness. When the event brings light, of course light precedes it, like the dawning of day before the rising of the sun. So, methinks, will be the dawning of our eternal day; bright gleams of light and truth ere "the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." The light is obscured to us only when some opaque body comes between us and the sun, causing a shadow to fall upon us; so we walk in darkness.

The beloved apostle Paul tells us, that ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. We are all the children of light, and the children of the day. Jesus said, "While ye have light believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light." Now if any are hugging a baneful error to their hearts, and saying, this is new light and new truth, and at the same time do not emit the first ray of light, and hate their brother, who really cannot see any light there, the apostle John says, "he is in darkness, even until now. . . . Darkness hath blinded his eyes." How important, then, that we obey the Savior, and walk while we have the light, lest darkness come upon us. Not only believe the light and walk in it, but hold it up, so that others can see and believe, and receive it, if they will. Freely we have received now; let us as freely give.

How I love to give God the glory for the true light that is now shining on his blessed word. Not act as though by our own power or holiness, we had found it all out; remembering that "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts. I am glad the spirit and power of God attends the preaching of his word, when it comes warm from a heart, made new by the blood of Jesus Christ. I am glad God knows what meat to give and when to give it—in due season, that his children may be fed and "grow" thereby "in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Come, "Children, have ye any meat, due the church down here? If ye have, do not withhold it—as you value eternal life. Let us have it just as God gives it to you, that he may be glorified, you blessed in feeding, we in eating, that we may all soon be glorified together.

PLAIN PREACHING.—Dr. Erasmus Alberus, when departing from Brandenburg, asked Luther how he ought to preach before the Elector. Luther replied, "Your sermons should be addressed, not to princes and nobles, but to the rude, uncultivated commonalty. If in my discourses I were to be thinking about Melancthon and the other doctors, I should do no good at all; but I preach in plain language to the plain, unlearned people, and that pleases all parties. If I know Greek, Hebrew, and Latin languages, I reserve them for our learned meetings, where they are of use; for at these, we deal in such subtleties and such profundities that God himself, I wot, must marvel at us."—Michelet's Life of Luther.

THE LORD'S COMING.

The world is growing gray and old,
And scoffers at the judgment bold,
And yet Thou art not here.
Thy chariot-wheels, O when shall they appear?
We only know, as dies each evil year,
Thy coming draweth near!

Some in Thine absence watch and weep,
Most of the would-be watchers sleep;
Few hearts there are that yearn,
O Lord, for Thee! few loving hearts that burn
And break for thy return!

The pale and clouded light of day
Still shows the wretched same array
Of glorious vanity!
The painted hues which hide deformity,
The hollow smile of secret misery!
The rival joys which men would have to be,
O Lord, instead of Thee.

Some hazy eyes are looking for a time
Of peace and righteousness in every clime;
Some ears are listening for a universal chime
Which shall precede Thy coming—but the wail
Still rises to a gale,
And pity weeps, and purity turns pale—
While moans of suffering, songs of revelry,
Clangor of war, and shouts of ribaldry,
Alone, with their delightsome melody,
Answer these baseless hopes in bitter mockery.
The darkness deepens: through the tenfold gloom
Stream on earth's millions, to the day of doom:
While ever and anon, the fearful cry
Of human passion tells the struggle nigh;
The last uplifting of the ocean swell;
The last proud effort of triumphant hell;
The last defiant roar
Of all Thy haters, who the light before
Of thine appearing, Lord! with horror sore
Shall, overwhelmed, sink to rise no more!

It is the midnight hour; the careless lie
Wrapped in the slumbers of security.
O blinding light!
O rending sky!
O form of swift descending majesty!
O shout of joy!
O horrid cry!
O thrilling shriek of wildest agony!
O angel legions, dazzling white!
O dead, arising at the sight!
O voice above the loudest trumpet blown!
O Christ, thy thunder tone!
Calling thy myriad myriads from the grave.
We rise, we soar, we cleave
The clouds beneath thy feet,
And, mounting, greet
With ecstasy
And hallelujahs sweet,
O Savior, Thee!

From every voice, with one accord,
It is the Lord! It is the Lord!
And full in every raptured eye
His image shines resplendently!
O long-believed-in, seen at length,
Outshining in thy sunlike strength,
Thy glory mingling with thy grace,
We see thee, Jesus, face to face!
With all the armies of the sky
We shout thy glad Epiphany!
Thrice welcome, earth-rejected King!
From every lip thy praises ring!
Thrice welcome to thy rightful throne;
For thou art worthy, Lord, alone!
For thou art He who once was slain.
And we are now to share thy reign,
For thou hast washed us in thy blood,
And made us kings and priests to God!
O silver angel-trumpets clear,
Uplift the joy from sphere to sphere!
O saintly voices, sweet and strong,
Roll through eternity along
The thunder of redemption-song!

ETERNAL LIFE.

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3.

A knowledge of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, is essential to the attainment and enjoyment of eternal life. The importance of this knowledge is clearly stated by the Savior and his apostles.

Peter, in his second general epistle "to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ," prays that "grace and peace be multiplied unto them, "through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus, our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." And he proceeds to show, that it is by means of this knowledge that all the great and precious promises become ours, whereby we are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Satan, being fully aware of the value of this knowledge, of its great power over the human heart, seeks to shut it out from the mind by means of unbelief, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts," for what? "To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4; 4, 6. By means of this light shining forth from the person of Jesus, and illuminating our hearts with the knowledge of his purposes in Christ, we are guided into the way of eternal life; hence the efforts of Satan to blind the minds of those who believe not, so that they may wander on in darkness, and perish at last without hope.

So highly did Paul esteem the acquirement of this knowledge, he cheerfully counts "all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus." In harmony with the text is the language of John: "We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." 1 John 5: 20.

The unbelieving world are in a state of ignorance, destitute of this essential knowledge; consequently in a condition of death. The apostle Paul describes their condition thus: Walking in the "vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." "Who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. But ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus."—Eph. 4: 17–21. Those who have been taught of God, and have obtained a knowledge of him and his Son Jesus Christ, have "put off the old man, which is corrupt, and have put on the new man, which, after the image of God, is created in righteousness and true holiness.

Again, we have another description of the condition of those who remain in a state of ignorance, a fearful description of their awful degeneracy, as the result of their not liking to retain God in their knowledge. For this cause "God gave them over to a reprobate mind, ... being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful; who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them."—Rom. 1: 28–32. Such are treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds. What will be the retribution of such ungodly deeds as we have enumerated? "Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil." "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed . . . in flaming fire, . . . taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1: 7–9.

How awfully fearful, then, is the doom of those who say to God, "Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." But the question arises, How shall we attain to this knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is essential to eternal life? That the natural man, by his own unaided powers, cannot attain unto this knowledge, is evident from the teaching of the Holy Word. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." "It is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." What then? Are all in a state of ignorance respecting the riches of the inheritance laid up for the righteous? No. The heart of the unrenewed man is here meant, for he apostle goes right on to say, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. . . . Now we (saints) have received . . . the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God."—1 Cor. 2.

Here we have clearly set forth the condition of the unilluminated mind—the benighted understanding—the unrenewed heart. They are without the knowledge of the glorious things laid up for the saints of God. They comprehend not their excellency, and see in them no attractions. By what means, then, shall this knowledge be attained? The prayer offered by the apostle Paul for the Ephesian church affords a clear and comprehensive answer to this question. "Wherefore I also . . . . cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places."—Eph. 1: 16–20. Thus we see it is through the illumination of the Spirit of God, that Spirit which "searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," that we attain to the knowledge of the inheritance. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God"; i. e., without the revelation of the Spirit no knowledge can be obtained of divine things, and for this cause we have, says the apostle, "received the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."

When Peter made this confession of faith in reply to our Lord's question, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus said unto him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." A divine revelation was needful to convince Peter of this important fact.

Paul says that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." 1 Cor. 12: 3. It is a truth the Holy Spirit alone has revealed to mankind. By this we do not mean that every man must have it written on his heart by the direct operation of the Spirit. The revelations made to us in the Scriptures are from the Holy Spirit. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." We trace the revelations of the Spirit from the Fall to the closing book of the New Testament. But we do wish to be understood as teaching that those revealings of the Spirit through the written word used to be attended by the illumination of the Spirit to the benighted mind of the natural man, in order for them to be rightly comprehended. This is evident from what we have already quoted, and other testimony might be added.

The Savior told his disciples that when the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, was come, he would guide them into all truth; "For he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he shall show it unto you." It was thus a knowledge of God and Christ was to be acquired. And in this we see the excelling glory of the ministration of the Spirit above all other. That Spirit which searcheth all things, exploring the deep mines of God's wisdom, knowledge and grace, was able to take of those riches and show them unto every one of Christ's disciples. Under the dispensation of the law, a knowledge of God could not be universal. It was manifested only through the Sinaic thunders, lightnings, and earthquakes, and the mystic shadows of the symbolic ritual. How very imperfect and limited were such revelations of God and his Son Jesus Christ!

The manifestations made of Deity under the old dispensation were calculated to impress the mind with a sense of his great abhorrence of sin, and strict justice in vindicating his law, rather than with a view of his exceeding love for a perishing world. By the death-penalty inflicted as the consequence of one transgression, he had shown that the guilty could not escape punishment. By the sin-cursed earth, and all the vast evils resulting from the fall of Adam, sin was manifest as a thing of momentous account in God's sight.

By the deluge, sweeping from the face of the earth the entire race of ungodly men, sparing only eight souls, who alone had faith in God's word, he manifested his hatred of sin, and respect of holiness. By the fiery tempest, destroying the vile inhabitants of the cities of the plain, he gave another exhibition of the same traits. By the plagues sent upon Egypt; by the overthrow of Pharaoh's host; by the fearful punishments that were awarded to the rebellious Israelites—the fiery serpents and pestilence; by the forty years wandering in the wilderness, we see clearly evinced the dreadful character of sin, and the certain doom awaiting the transgressor. The Old Testament Scriptures abound with such illustrations of this fact, yet we can trace mercy's steps all the way, though but dimly seen.

Truly deplorable was the condition of the world when the glad shout broke upon the stillness of night from the angelic host,—"Glory to God in the Highest! Peace on earth, good will toward men!" To the shepherds who were watching their flocks was the glad announcement made—"Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord!"

For centuries God the Father had been working among the nations of earth, and dimly revealing his glorious attributes; and now Christ, the only begotten, the embodiment and impersonation of the Deity, comes in human form, possessed of like passions with us; he comes to suffer and sympathize with humanity, to take upon himself human woes and sins, and pour out his blood as a sacrifice for man's redemption. He comes to reveal the Godhead more clearly to mortals; to present Divinity in a more benign aspect; to assure the perishing sinner of a Father's love for them, his will to save and exalt them to an equal position with his own Son, making them first righteous, then heirs of the kingdom promised to David's successor.

God was now made manifest in the flesh, and adapted himself to the capacity of the poor, lowly, and ignorant sons of men. Says Jesus to one who said to him, "Show us the Father," "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." How? "Believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me." "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also." "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

O! how often has the trembling heart, weighed down with a sense of short-comings and imperfections, feared to approach unto the Father, viewing him as one far distant and disposed to frown upon us with displeasure, while we fled to Christ as a sympathizing friend, who could be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, having been tempted in all points like unto us. But the tender love, the affectionate words of sympathy and comfort spoken by Jesus, the gracious invitations to come to him with all our sorrows and cares, the sweet promises of help; all, all are but the outgushings of the Father's great heart of benevolence, poured forth to us through the medium of his Son.

We see perfectly exemplified in Christ the character of the Eternal Father—his disposition toward his erring creatures. Do we admire the noble spirit manifested by the father of the returning prodigal? That is a revelation of God's disposition toward his repenting ones. If, then, we would know the only true God, we must become acquainted with his Son, whom he hath sent. We must study his character as it is unfolded to us by the Evangelist. But we must not study it unaided by the Spirit's influence. To the third person in the Godhead we are indebted for the true comprehension of Christ. We are living in the dispensation of the Spirit. It is a far more glorious manifestation than the two that preceded it. Through the various manifestations of God in other times, but little was known of him. He was but dimly revealed and comprehended through the mystic symbols, though there were at times bright glimpses vouchsafed of his glory, as it beamed forth from between the cherubims. But oh, how limited! Few, very few were privileged to behold it. And to only one nation was committed the lively oracles.

When Deity became incarnate, the light shone forth more clearly, imparting greater knowledge in the person of Jesus Christ. Still this was limited. Few, comparatively, could gaze upon this impersonation of God, and listen to his words of wisdom. The world was yet in darkness.

Jesus finished the work given him to do, and ascending on high sent forth the Spirit, which, untrammeled by humanity, could go forth on its world-wide mission, illuminating every benighted mind, and imparting knowledge to all. Is not this in harmony with the written word? "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." "He shall reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." John says of Christ, "That was the true light, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." That general illumination could not have been during his personal sojourn upon earth. It is the mission of the Spirit to present Christ to the minds of the world at large, revealing their sins, and directing the attention to him as their sacrifice and Savior. It accompanies the written word; that word, inspired by its influence, is rendered luminous by its teachings, and the preached gospel is made effective unto salvation by its divine power.

Human instrumentality can speak only to the outward ear, but the Spirit of God utters its voice in the heart, and awakens the slumbering conscience, revealing by its searching light the secret sin and hidden depravity. It makes intercession for the saint with groanings unutterable, and helpeth their infirmities. God knoweth the mind of the Spirit, for he maketh intercession in accordance with his will. By its influence the heart is sanctified through the truth, and the love of God shed abroad therein. By it the child of God is assured of his acceptance, and sealed unto the day of redemption. It is the earnest of his inheritance, the pledge of future bliss. The baptism of the Spirit imparts unction and power to the testimony of Christ's witnesses.

This is the well of water springing up in the believer's heart, even unto everlasting life. Eternal life is promised only to such as have that saving knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is acquired by the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, directing to a study of his character as revealed in the Scriptures which are able to make wise unto salvation. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye (think) ye have eternal life," said Christ to the Jews. To the believing heart there is made known the knowledge of eternal life by the word of God, and the only source from whence this everlasting life is derived; viz., Jesus Christ. He says, "I give unto them (his sheep) eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."

When will this eternal life be given to the sheep or true followers of Christ? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." Then "he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Then shall he say also unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Here we have the answer given direct from the lips of Jesus that it is when he comes in glory, and sits upon his throne of glory, he gives unto his sheep eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man, nor Satan even, be able to pluck them out of his hand. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The state of man by nature is one of death. He is alienated from the life of God, dead in trespasses and sins; living in pleasure, they are dead while they live, and they have in them no germ of life; and unless they accept of the life offered to them in Christ, they must forever remain in a state of death; they shall never see life. Not that they shall never be raised up from the grave; that is not the idea; but their condition is unchanged; they remain destitute of spiritual life—still dead in trespasses and sins, while the wrath of God abideth on them forever.

The one who has heard the call of the Spirit of God saying unto him, "Awake! thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light!" and obeyed that call, has passed from death unto life. They have received into their hearts the living word, and being begotten of this incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever, they are heirs of that eternal life which God hath promised unto all them that obey him.

Of this fact they need not be in doubt. "We know," says John, "that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death." And another thing they know: "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is eternal life."—1 John 5: 20.

PRAISE.—There is a commendation which affords me an exquisite satisfaction; I mean a commendation which flows from an unaffected love of goodness, and from a desire to confirm it. Such commendation confers more honor on those who give than on him who receives it, and shows him that he has a place, not in the admiration of a superficial mind, but in the affections of a good and pure heart.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 3.

THE JUBILEES FORTY-NINE YEARS APART,—NOT FIFTY.

Having clearly shown the chronological location of the first jubilee, and having subsequently counted an intervening space of forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, thus proving that A. D. 1868 is a jubilee year, it may be well to notice an erroneous impression imbibed by some, that a space of fifty years intervenes between the jubilees. The scriptural facts are these:

I. "The seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land. . . . And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. THEN shall thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month [in this forty-ninth year]; in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year." (Lev. 25: 4, 8, 9, 10.) Thus it will be seen that the jubilee does not begin with the end of the forty-ninth year, but in the seventh month of the forty-ninth year, on the tenth day of the month, running several months into the fiftieth year.

II. As the jubilee is one year long, and does not begin with the first month, like the other years, but begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, it must take in a part of two ordinary years, and therefore cannot be wholly identical with either the forty-ninth or fiftieth year, but is called "the fiftieth year," as it extends beyond the forty-ninth.

III. The provision "for three years," to be made each sixth year, for the sabbatical year, (that is, to last through the sixth and seventh and till they should "sow the eighth year" and reap the crop), being the same for the seventh sabbatical year as for the previous sabbatical years, (Lev. 25: 20–22), is proof that we are correct, as the ending of the jubilee would be in the seventh month of the year in which they were commanded to "sow," before their sowing time arrived,—thus not infringing upon their sowing time, nor requiring any different arrangement than for the ordinary sixth and seveth years; whereas, if the jubilee had begun with the first month of the fiftieth year, or on the tenth day of the seventh month of the fiftieth year, a four years' supply would have been requisite prior to the seventh sabbatical year, while such an arrangement never was given in the Bible.

IV. The jubilee, embracing a part of two years, allows the ordinary years, beginning with the first month, to proceed uninterrupted; that is, the regular course of the series of seven years is not discontinued till the jubilee is past, for the jubilee is situated between no two years, and therefore belongs to a distinct series.

V. As "the fiftieth year," (beginning on the tenth day of the seventh month), does not begin at the termination of the forty-ninth year, it will not help the matter to assume that it begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, the year after the forty-ninth, for then it would be a part of the fiftieth, and a part of the fifty-first, as really as it was a part of the forty-ninth and a part of the fiftieth in the other case, besides leaving a vacancy uncounted, and placing the jubilees several months over fifty years apart.

VI. Finally, only by allowing forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, as plainly given in the Bible, can we make the "thirtieth year" of a jubilee cycle synchronize with the "fifth year of the captivity," as given in Ezek. 1: 1, 2, where "the thirtieth year" of nothing else can be meant.

All is now clear, and it can no longer be doubted that 1868 is a jubilee year. The jubilee trumpet will "sound throughout all the land," and wake the dead saints, if our reckoning is correct, in 1868.

That every one may clearly see the point, we will give a table of jubilees, locating the first forty-nine years from the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, which required the observance of seven sabbatical years, occurring once in seven years, and also requiring the jubilee to begin in the seventh sabbatical year, on the tenth day of the seventh month, (see Lev. 25th chapter, and Ex. 21: 2, with the preceding chapter); thus, according to our chronology, placing the first jubilee B.C. 1563.

If the jubilee ushers in the deliverance of God's people from death and mortality, as we nearly all believe, the coming of the Lord to raise the "dead in Christ" must take place in 1868, or not till forty-nine years later. But the signs of the times forbid the passing of forty-nine years more; hence, we look to 1868 for the Lord's coming.

The jubilee trumpet will sound "in the day of atonement," when our great High Priest shall come out of the "Holiest" to bless the waiting people, and pronounce the atonement completed, on the tenth day of the seventh month, when the great antitypical "feast of tabernacles" will be joyfully observed by all the saints, in their "chambers" above, for seven prophetic days, "until the indignation be overpast," and the earth be purified, or made "new" from the melting conflagration; thus will the saints of all ages sweetly commemorate their escape from an Egyptian world and the bondage of mortality. Happy jubilee!

"That speaks the trials ended"

in 1868. Our prospective "possessions"—immortality, eternal life, and untold felicity—will then be ours, and the kingdom of Christ be organized, Christ being inaugurated king, and the saints being constituted subjects, there waiting in their chambers "till the indignation be past," and their polluted territory be purified, or "the sanctuary be cleansed" in 1875. Soon—

"The jubilee proclaims us free,
O! hail happy day."

THE TIME QUESTION.

I find much said by Adventists against setting the time for the end of this dispensation. There have been so many failures in the past attempts, they are afraid future attempts will be as the past have been. It may be so, yet God set the time for the first Advent, and it was fulfilled; and Paul said (Eph. 1: 10), "In the dispensation of the fullness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

The evidence to me is conclusive that the time of his glory is as positively foretold as that of his suffering. 1 Pet. 1: 10—12. Those times were given for the benefit of the church. 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17. But the time can be of no benefit unless it can be understood before its fulfillment. Everything in church and State, the world over, agrees with the prophetic description of their character and condition at the end of time.

The fulfillment of God's word in the past shows that he meant what he said, and said what he meant. Therefore it is reasonable to me that God should raise up some man or men to bring out the true chronology of the world, and show where those times begin; thus we can know where they end. If Bro. Thurman is the favored one to do it, Amen. This is the time for some to say, like John the Baptist, The time is fulfilled and the kingdom is at hand. Let us be cautious and not go too fast, but, above all, let us not be too slow.

I have been waiting on the Lord for light on this subject for years, with the assurance that there would be light on this subject soon. Over twenty years some of us have been watching and waiting, and have been often blessed in so doing. God says those are blessed who wait for him. I hope to live to see the end. With the present light it seems that 1868 cannot pass without bringing the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. For this great event let us all live and act, carrying out the spirit of the angelic song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Then when the Master comes he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Peace be with all those that love our Lord Jesus in truth.

"CHRIST OUR LIFE."

If your views of man's mortality and immortality are correct, then we have a perfect solution of what has been regarded a very difficult class of scriptures.

1. In 1 John 1: 5, we have the birth of this immortal life: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Messiah, is born of God."

2. The testimony of this Life: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the (testimony) in himself. . . . And this is the record, that God hath given to us (christians) eternal life, and this life is IN his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life. . . That ye may know that ye have eternal life." See vers. 9–15.

3. Now we reach the passage that under the old, so called, orthodox view, together with the whole class corresponding with it, has been justly regarded very difficult: "There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it." Ver. 16. This sin unto death is the willful act of one "who has been enlightened" (Heb. 6), a true disciple, a believer in Jesus, as above, deliberately denying "the Lord that bought him," and thus "bringing on himself swift destruction." (2 Pet. 2: 1); "For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more (or other) sacrifice for sin." "Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy WHO HATH TRODDEN UNDER FOOT THE SON OF GOD, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing." Heb. 10. If those enlightened and who afterwards shall have fallen away (Heb. 6; the participles here are all in the past), it shall be impossible to renew them again to repentance; for "they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh." Thus have we the solution to THE "sin unto death," as also seen by the context in the chapter under consideration. For "we know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not" (thus unto death, by denying his Son); but keepeth himself; . . . for we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." Vers. 18–20.

4. Now, Bro. Grant, my mode of argument on this whole connection of thought is this: 1 John 5: 11, 12:—"And this is the (testimony), that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is IN his Son." Ver. 11.

"If eternal life is IN His Son, it is not out of his Son, [illegible] [illegible]

THE LORD'S COMING.

The world is growing gray and old,
And scoffers at the judgment bold,
And yet Thou art not here.
Thy chariot-wheels, O when shall they appear?
We only know, as dies each evil year,
Thy coming draweth near!

Some in Thine absence watch and weep,
Most of the would-be watchers sleep;
Few hearts there are that yearn,
O Lord, for Thee! few loving hearts that burn
And break for thy return!

The pale and clouded light of day
Still shows the wretched same array
Of glorious vanity!
The painted hues which hide deformity,
The hollow smile of secret misery;
The rival joys which men would have to be,
O Lord, instead of Thee.

Some hazy eyes are looking for a time
Of peace and righteousness in every clime,
Some ears are listening for a universal chime
Which shall precede Thy coming—but the wail
Still rises to a gale,
And pity weeps, and purity turns pale—
While moans of suffering, songs of revelry,
Clangor of war, and shouts of ribaldry,
Alone, with their delightsome melody,
Answer these baseless hopes in bitter mockery.
The darkness deepens: through the tenfold gloom
Stream on earth's millions, to the day of doom
While ever and anon, the fearful cry
Of human passion tells the struggle nigh,
The last uplifting of the ocean swell;
The last proud effort of triumphant hell;
The last defiant roar
Of all Thy haters, who the light before
Of thine appearing, Lord! with horror sore
Shall, overwhelmed, sink to rise no more!

It is the midnight hour; the careless lie
Wrapped in the slumbers of security.
O blinding light!
O rending sky!
O form of swift descending majesty!
O shout of joy!
O horrid cry!
O thrilling shriek of wildest agony!
O angel legions, dazzling white!
O dead, arising at the sight!
O voice above the loudest trumpet blown!
O Christ, thy thunder tone!
Calling thy myriad myriads from the grave.
We rise, we soar, we cleave
The clouds beneath thy feet,
And, mounting, greet
With ecstasy
And hallelujahs sweet,
O Savior, Thee!

From every voice, with one accord,
It is the Lord! It is the Lord!
And full in every raptured eye
His image shines resplendently!
O long-believed-in, seen at length,
Outshining in thy sunlike strength,
Thy glory mingling with thy grace,
We see thee, Jesus, face to face!
With all the armies of the sky
We shout thy glad Epiphany!
Thrice welcome, earth-rejected King!
From every lip thy praises ring!
Thrice welcome to thy rightful throne;
For thou art worthy, Lord, alone!
For thou art He who once was slain
And we are now to share thy reign,
For thou hast washed us in thy blood,
And made us kings and priests to God!
O silver angel-trumpets clear,
Uplift the joy from sphere to sphere!
O saintly voices, sweet and strong,
Roll through eternity along
The thunder of redemption-song!

ETERNAL LIFE.

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—JOHN 17: 3.

A knowledge of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, is essential to the attainment and enjoyment of eternal life. The importance of this knowledge is clearly stated by the Savior and his apostles.

Peter, in his second general epistle "to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ," prays that "grace and peace be multiplied" unto them, "through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." And he proceeds to show that it is by means of this knowledge that all the great and precious promises become ours, whereby we are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Satan, being fully aware of the value of this knowledge, of its great power over the human heart, seeks to shut it out from the mind by means of unbelief, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts," for what? "To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4: 4, 6. By means of this light shining forth from the person of Jesus, and illuminating our hearts with the knowledge of his purposes in Christ, we are guided into the way of eternal life; hence the efforts of Satan to blind the minds of those who believe not, so that they may wander on in darkness, and perish at last without hope.

So highly did Paul esteem the acquirement of this knowledge, he cheerfully counts "all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus." In harmony with the text is the language of John: "We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." 1 John 5: 20.

The unbelieving world are in a state of ignorance, destitute of this essential knowledge; consequently in a condition of death. The apostle Paul describes their condition thus: Walking in the "vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart. Who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. But ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus."—Eph. 4: 17–21. Those who have been taught of God, and have obtained a knowledge of him and his Son Jesus Christ, have "put off the old man, which is corrupt, and have put on the new man, which, after the image of God, is created in righteousness and true holiness.

Again, we have another description of the condition of those who remain in a state of ignorance, a fearful description of their awful degeneracy, as the result of their not liking to retain God in their knowledge. For this cause "God gave them over to a reprobate mind, . . . being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful; who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them."—Rom. 1: 28–32. Such are treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds. What will be the retribution of such ungodly deeds as we have enumerated? "Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil." "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed . . . in flaming fire, . . . taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1: 7–9.

How awfully fearful, then, is the doom of those who say to God, "Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." But the question arises, How shall we attain to this knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is essential to eternal life? That the natural man, by his own unaided powers, cannot attain unto this knowledge, is evident from the teaching of the Holy Word. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." "It is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." What then? Are all in a state of ignorance respecting the riches of the inheritance laid up for the righteous? No. The heart of the unrenewed man is here meant, for the apostle goes right on to say, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. . . . Now we (saints) have received . . . the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God."—1 Cor. 2.

Here we have clearly set forth the condition of the unilluminated mind—the benighted understanding—the unrenewed heart. They are without the knowledge of the glorious things laid up for the saints of God. They comprehend not their excellency, and see in them no attractions. By what means, then, shall this knowledge be attained? The prayer offered by the apostle Paul for the Ephesian church affords a clear and comprehensive answer to this question. "Wherefore I also . . . cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places."—Eph. 1: 16–20. Thus we see it is through the illumination of the Spirit of God, that Spirit which "searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," that we attain to the knowledge of the inheritance. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God"; i. e., without the revelation of the Spirit no knowledge can be obtained of divine things, and for this cause we have, says the apostle, "received the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."

When Peter made this confession of faith in reply to our Lord's question, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus said unto him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." A divine revelation was needful to convince Peter of this important fact.

Paul says that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." 1 Cor. 12: 3. It is a truth the Holy Spirit alone has revealed to mankind. By this we do not mean that every man must have it written on his heart by the direct operation of the Spirit. The revelations made to us in the Scriptures are from the Holy Spirit. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." We trace the revelations of the Spirit from the Fall to the closing book of the New Testament. But we do wish to be understood as teaching that those revealings of the Spirit through the written word need to be attended by the illumination of the Spirit to the benighted mind of the natural man, in order for them to be rightly comprehended. This is evident from what we have already quoted, and other testimony might be added.

The Savior told his disciples that when the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, was come, he would guide them into all truth; "For he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he shall show it unto you." It was thus a knowledge of God and Christ was to be acquired. And in this we see the excelling glory of the ministration of the Spirit above all other. That Spirit which searcheth all things, exploring the deep mines of God's wisdom, knowledge and grace, was able to take of those riches and show them unto every one of Christ's disciples. Under the dispensation of the law, a knowledge of God could not be universal. It was manifested only through the Sinaic thunders, lightnings, and earthquakes, and the mystic shadows of the symbolic ritual. How very imperfect and limited were such revelations of God and his Son Jesus Christ!

The manifestations made of Deity under the old dispensation were calculated to impress the mind with a sense of his great abhorrence of sin, and strict justice in vindicating his law, rather than with a view of his exceeding love for a perishing world. By the death-penalty inflicted as the consequence of one transgression, he had shown that the guilty could not escape punishment. By the sin-cursed earth, and all the vast evils resulting from the fall of Adam, sin was manifest as a thing of momentous account in God's sight.

By the deluge, sweeping from the face of the earth the entire race of ungodly men, sparing only eight souls, who alone had faith in God's word, he manifested his hatred of sin, and respect of holiness. By the fiery tempest, destroying the vile inhabitants of the cities of the plain, he gave another exhibition of the same traits. By the plagues sent upon Egypt; by the overthrow of Pharaoh's host; by the fearful punishments that were awarded to the rebellious Israelites—the fiery serpents and pestilence; by the forty years wandering in the wilderness, we see clearly evinced the dreadful character of sin, and the certain doom awaiting the transgressor. The Old Testament Scriptures abound with such illustrations of this fact, yet we can trace mercy's steps all the way, though but dimly seen.

Truly deplorable was the condition of the world when the glad shout broke upon the stillness of night from the angelic host,—"Glory to God in the Highest! Peace on earth, good will toward men!" To the shepherds who were watching their flocks was the glad announcement made—"Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord!"

For centuries God the Father had been working among the nations of earth, and dimly revealing his glorious attributes; and now Christ, the only begotten, the embodiment and impersonation of the Deity, comes in human form, possessed of like passions with us; he comes to suffer and sympathize with humanity, to take upon himself human woes and sins, and pour out his blood as a sacrifice for man's redemption. He comes to reveal the Godhead more clearly to mortals; to present Divinity in a more benign aspect; to assure the perishing sinner of a Father's love for them, his will to save and exalt them to an equal position with his own Son, making them first righteous, then heirs of the kingdom promised to David's successor.

God was now made manifest in the flesh, and adapted himself to the capacity of the poor, lowly, and ignorant sons of men. Says Jesus to one who said to him, "Show us the Father," "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." How? "Believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me." "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also." "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

O! how often has the trembling heart, weighed down with a sense of short-comings and imperfections, feared to approach unto the Father, viewing him as one far distant and disposed to frown upon us with displeasure, while we fled to Christ as a sympathizing friend, who could be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, having been tempted in all points like unto us. But the tender love, the affectionate words of sympathy and comfort spoken by Jesus, the gracious invitations to come to him with all our sorrows and cares, the sweet promises of help; all, all are but the outgushings of the Father's great heart of benevolence, poured forth to us through the medium of his Son.

We see perfectly exemplified in Christ the character of the Eternal Father—his disposition toward his erring creatures. Do we admire the noble spirit manifested by the father of the returning prodigal? That is a revelation of God's disposition toward his repenting ones. If, then, we would know the only true God, we must become acquainted with his Son, whom he hath sent. We must study his character as it is unfolded to us by the Evangelist. But we must not study it unaided by the Spirit's influence. To the third person in the Godhead we are indebted for the true comprehension of Christ. We are living in the dispensation of the Spirit. It is a far more glorious manifestation than the two that preceded it. Through the various manifestations of God in other times, but little was known of him. He was but dimly revealed and comprehended through the mystic symbols, though there were at times bright glimpses vouchsafed of his glory, as it beamed forth from between the cherubims. But oh, how limited! Few, very few were privileged to behold it. And to only one nation was committed the lively oracles.

When Deity became incarnate, the light shone forth more clearly, imparting greater knowledge in the person of Jesus Christ. Still this was limited. Few, comparatively, could gaze upon this impersonation of God, and listen to his words of wisdom. The world was yet in darkness.

Jesus finished the work given him to do, and ascending on high sent forth the Spirit, which, untrammeled by humanity, could go forth on its world-wide mission, illuminating every benighted mind, and imparting knowledge to all. Is not this in harmony with the written word? "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." "He shall reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." John says of Christ, "That was the true light, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." That general illumination could not have been during his personal sojourn upon earth. It is the mission of the Spirit to present Christ to the minds of the world at large, revealing their sins, and directing the attention to him as their sacrifice and Savior. It accompanies the written word; that word, inspired by its influence, is rendered luminous by its teachings, and the preached gospel is made effective unto salvation by its divine power.

Human instrumentality can speak only to the outward ear, but the Spirit of God utters its voice in the heart, and awakens the slumbering conscience, revealing by its searching light the secret sin and hidden depravity. It makes intercession for the saint with groanings unutterable, and helpeth their infirmities. God knoweth the mind of the Spirit, for he maketh intercession in accordance with his will. By its influence the heart is sanctified through the truth, and the love of God shed abroad therein. By it the child of God is assured of his acceptance, and sealed unto the day of redemption. It is the earnest of his inheritance, the pledge of future bliss. The baptism of the Spirit imparts unction and power to the testimony of Christ's witnesses.

This is the well of water springing up in the believer's heart, even unto everlasting life. Eternal life is promised only to such as have that saving knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is acquired by the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, directing to a study of his character as revealed in the Scriptures which are able to make wise unto salvation. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye (think) ye have eternal life," said Christ to the Jews. To the believing heart there is made known the knowledge of eternal life by the word of God, and the only source from whence this everlasting life is derived, viz., Jesus Christ. He says, "I give unto them (his sheep) eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."

When will this eternal life be given to the sheep or true followers of Christ? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." Then "he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Then shall he say also unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Here we have the answer given direct from the lips of Jesus that it is when he comes in glory, and sits upon his throne of glory, he gives unto his sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man, nor Satan even, be able to pluck them out of his hand. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The state of man by nature is one of death. He is alienated from the life of God, dead in trespasses and sins; living in pleasure, they are dead while they live, and they have in them no germ of life; and unless they accept of the life offered to them in Christ, they must forever remain in a state of death; they shall never see life. Not that they shall never be raised up from the grave; that is not the idea; but their condition is unchanged; they remain destitute of spiritual life—still dead in trespasses and sins, while the wrath of God abideth on them forever.

The one who has heard the call of the Spirit of God saying unto him, "Awake! thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light!" and obeyed that call, has passed from death unto life. They have received into their hearts the living word, and being begotten of this incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever, they are heirs of that eternal life which God hath promised unto all them that obey him.

Of this fact they need not be in doubt. "We know," says John, "that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death." And another thing they know: "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in is his Son Jesus Christ. This is eternal life."—1 John 5: 20.

PRAISE.—There is a commendation which affords me an exquisite satisfaction; I mean a commendation which flows from an unaffected love of goodness, and from a desire to confirm it. Such commendation confers more honor on those who give than on him who receives it, and shows him that he has a place, not in the admiration of a superficial mind, but in the affections of a good and pure heart.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 3.

THE JUBILEES FORTY-NINE YEARS APART,—NOT FIFTY.

Having clearly shown the chronological location of the first jubilee, and having subsequently counted an intervening space of forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, thus proving that A. D. 1868 is a jubilee year, it may be well to notice an erroneous impression imbibed by some, that a space of fifty years intervenes between the jubilees. The scriptural facts are these:

I. "The seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land. . . . And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. THEN shall thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month [in this forty-ninth year], in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year." (Lev. 25: 4, 8, 9, 10.) Thus it will be seen that the jubilee does not begin with the end of the forty-ninth year, but in the seventh month of the forty-ninth year, on the tenth day of the month, running several months into the fiftieth year.

II. As the jubilee is one year long, and does not begin with the first month, like the other years, but begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, it must take in a part of two ordinary years, and therefore cannot be wholly identical with either the forty-ninth or fiftieth year, but is called "the fiftieth year," as it extends beyond the forty-ninth.

III. The provision "for three years," to be made each sixth year, for the sabbatical year, (that is, to last through the sixth and seventh and till they should "sow the eighth year" and reap the crop), being the same for the seventh sabbatical year as for the previous sabbatical years, (Lev. 25: 20–22), is proof that we are correct, as the ending of the jubilee would be in the seventh month of the year in which they were commanded to "sow," before their sowing time arrived,—thus not infringing upon their sowing time, nor requiring any different arrangement than for the ordinary sixth and seveth years; whereas, if the jubilee had begun with the first month of the fiftieth year, or on the tenth day of the seventh month of the fiftieth year, a four years' supply would have been requisite prior to the seventh sabbatical year, while such an arrangement never was given in the Bible.

IV. The jubilee, embracing a part of two years, allows the ordinary years, beginning with the first month, to proceed uninterrupted; that is, the regular course of the series of seven years is not discontinued till the jubilee is past, for the jubilee is situated between no two years, and therefore belongs to a distinct series.

V. As "the fiftieth year," (beginning on the tenth day of the seventh month), does not begin at the termination of the forty-ninth year, it will not help the matter to assume that it begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, the year after the forty-ninth, for then it would be a part of the fiftieth, and a part of the fifty-first, as really as it was a part of the forty-ninth and a part of the fiftieth in the other case, besides leaving a vacancy uncounted, and placing the jubilees several months over fifty years apart.

VI. Finally, only by allowing forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, as plainly given in the Bible, can we make the "thirtieth year" of a jubilee cycle synchronize with the "fifth year of the captivity," as given in Ezek. 1: 1, 2, where "the thirtieth year" of nothing else can be meant.

All is now clear, and it can no longer be doubted that 1868 is a jubilee year. The jubilee trumpet will "sound throughout all the land," and wake the dead saints, if our reckoning is correct, in 1868.

That every one may clearly see the point, we will give a table of jubilees, locating the first forty-nine years from the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, which required the observance of seven sabbatical years, occurring once in seven years, and also requiring the jubilee to begin in the seventh sabbatical year, on the tenth day of the seventh month, (see Lev. 25th chapter, and Ex. 21: 2, with the preceding chapter); thus, according to our chronology, placing the first jubilee B. C. 1563.

If the jubilee ushers in the deliverance of God's people from death and mortality, as we nearly all believe, the coming of the Lord to raise the "dead in Christ" must take place in 1868, or not till forty-nine years later. But the signs of the times forbid the passing of forty-nine years more; hence, we look to 1868 for the Lord's coming.

The jubilee trumpet will sound "in the day of atonement," when our great High Priest shall come out of the "Holiest" to bless the waiting people, and pronounce the atonement completed, on the tenth day of the seventh month, when the great antitypical "feast of tabernacles" will be joyfully observed by all the saints, in their "chambers" above, for seven prophetic days, "until the indignation be overpast," and the earth be purified, or made "new" from the melting conflagration; thus will the saints of all ages sweetly commemorate their escape from an Egyptian world and the bondage of mortality. Happy jubilee!

"That speaks our trials ended"

in 1868. Our prospective "possessions"—immortality, eternal life, and untold felicity—will then be ours, and the kingdom of Christ be organized, Christ being inaugurated king, and the saints being constituted subjects, there waiting in their chambers "till the indignation be past," and their polluted territory be purified, or "the sanctuary be cleansed" in 1875. Soon—

"The jubilee proclaims us free,
O! hail happy day."

THE TIME QUESTION.

I find much said by Adventists against setting the time for the end of this dispensation. There have been so many failures in the past attempts, they are afraid future attempts will be as the past have been. It may be so, yet God set the time for the first Advent, and it was fulfilled; and Paul said (Eph. 1: 10), "In the dispensation of the fullness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

The evidence to me is conclusive that the time of his glory is as positively foretold as that of his suffering. 1 Pet. 1: 10—12. Those times were given for the benefit of the church. 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17. But the time can be of no benefit unless it can be understood before its fulfillment. Everything in church and State, the world over, agrees with the prophetic description of their character and condition at the end of time.

The fulfillment of God's word in the past shows that he meant what he said, and said what he meant. Therefore it is reasonable to me that God should raise up some man or men to bring out the true chronology of the world, and show where those times begin; thus we can know where they end. If Bro. Thurman is the favored one to do it, Amen. This is the time for some to say, like John the Baptist, The time is fulfilled and the kingdom is at hand. Let us be cautious and not go too fast, but, above all, let us not be too slow.

I have been waiting on the Lord for light on this subject for years, with the assurance that there would be light on this subject soon. Over twenty years some of us have been watching and waiting, and have been often blessed in so doing. God says those are blessed who wait for him. I hope to live to see the end. With the present light it seems that 1868 cannot pass without bringing the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. For this great event let us all live and act, carrying out the spirit of the angelic song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Then when the Master comes he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Peace be with all those that love our Lord Jesus in truth.

"CHRIST OUR LIFE."

If your views of man's mortality and immortality are correct, then we have a perfect solution of what has been regarded a very difficult class of scriptures.

1. In 1 John 1: 5, we have the birth of this immortal life: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Messiah, is born of God."

2. The testimony of this Life: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the (testimony) in himself. . . . And this is the record, that God hath given to us (christians) eternal life, and this life is IN his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life. . . That ye may know that ye have eternal life." See vers. 9–15.

3. Now we reach the passage that under the old, so called, orthodox view, together with the whole class corresponding with it, has been justly regarded very difficult: "There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it." Ver. 16. This sin unto death is the willful act of one "who has been enlightened" (Heb. 6), a true disciple, a believer in Jesus, as above, deliberately denying "the Lord that bought him," and thus "bringing on himself swift destruction." (2 Pet. 2: 1); "For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more (or other) sacrifice for sin." "Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy WHO HATH TRODDEN UNDER FOOT THE SON OF GOD, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing." Heb. 10. If those enlightened and who afterwards shall have fallen away (Heb. 6; the participles here are all in the past), it shall be impossible to renew them again to repentance; for "they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh." Thus have we the solution to THE "sin unto death," as also seen by the context in the chapter under consideration. For "we know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not" (thus unto death, by denying his Son); but keepeth himself; . . . for we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." Vers. 18–20.

4. Now, Bro. Grant, my mode of argument on this whole connection of thought is this: 1 John 5: 11, 12;—"And this is the (testimony), that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is IN his Son." Ver. 11. If eternal life is in His Son, it is not out of his Son, consequently [illegible] his Son is nothing distinct from being out of his Son; but the apostle has himself fixed his position immovably. "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." Ver. 12.

5. But where has God given us the testimony referred to in verse 11, that he hath given us christians only life in his Son? Ans. Matt. 16;—"Simon Peter said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus said, "Man hath not revealed it unto you, but my Father which is in heaven. And I also say unto thee, that thou art Peter (compare Rom. 10: 9, 10), and on this rock I will build my church (compare 1 Cor. 3: 11), and the gates of *death shall not prevail against it." (Compare Acts 2: 23, 24.) And see also John 5: 23 and on; "Verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, HATH ETERNAL LIFE (and cometh not to judgment, but passeth from death INTO life)"; and John 11: 25, 26;—"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And WHOSOEVER LIVETH AND BELIEVETH IN ME SHALL NEVER DIE"; and also 1 John 3: 14;—"We know that we have passed from DEATH unto life." See also Rev. 20: 4, 5, where we shall see the consummation of this glorious resurrection life. "And I saw thrones, and they sat on them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them who had been beheaded for (THE TESTIMONY) of Jesus, even (the Greek word having its force of "even" here, must here be so translated) for the word of God; and which had not worshiped the beast, nor his image (which shall now soon be made to speak,—likely a speaking statue of the first Napoleon, by Napoleon III. See Rev. 13: 15); neither had received (ITS) mark on their foreheads, or in their hands; and they LIVED AND REIGNED with the Christ a thousand years. . . . THIS IS THE FIRST RESURRECTION (compare Phil. 3: 11); on SUCH the SECOND DEATH hath no power (and this is the meaning of John 11: 26), but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall REIGN with him a thousand years."

Truly indeed, Blessed and holy is he who hath part in this resurrection! Happy, thrice happy he! Here is the fruition of his passing from death unto life! O, how glorious! How my heart warms with immortal joy! If, then, brethren, ye be risen with the Christ, seek the things that are above,—for ye have died (your old manhood has died; compare Rom. 6: 3–6), and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ OUR LIFE shall be manifested, then will ye also be manifested with him in glory. Col. 3.

"COMING EVENTS CAST THEIR SHADOWS BEFORE."

This is true to a certain extent. For instance, when the event is a dark one, it foreshadows darkness. When the event brings light, of course light precedes it, like the dawning of day before the rising of the sun. So, methinks, will be the dawning of our eternal day; bright gleams of light and truth ere "the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." The light is obscured to us only when some opaque body comes between us and the sun, causing a shadow to fall upon us; so we walk in darkness.

The beloved apostle Paul tells us, "but ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." We are all the children of light, and the children of the day. Jesus said, "While ye have light believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light." Now if any are hugging a baneful error to their hearts, and saying, this is new light and new truth, and at the same time do not emit the first ray of light, and hate their brother, who really cannot see any light there, the apostle John says, "he is in darkness, even until now. . . . Darkness hath blinded his eyes." How important, then, that we obey the Savior, and walk while we have the light, lest darkness come upon us. Not only believe the light and walk in it, but hold it up, so that others can see and believe, and receive it, if they will. Freely we have received now; let us as freely give.

How I love to give God the glory for the true light that is now shining on his blessed word. Not act as though by our own power or holiness, we had found it all out; remembering that "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts. I am glad the spirit and power of God attends the preaching of his word, when it comes warm from a heart made new by the blood of Jesus Christ. I am glad God knows what meat to give and when to give it—in due season, that his children may be fed and "grow" thereby "in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Come, "Children, have ye any meat" due the church down here? If ye have, do not withhold it—as you value eternal life. Let us have it just as God gives it to you, that he may be glorified, you blessed in feeding, we in eating, that we may all soon be glorified together.

PLAIN PREACHING.—Dr. Erasmus Alberus, when departing from Brandenburg, asked Luther how he ought to preach before the Elector. Luther replied, "Your sermons should be addressed, not to princes and nobles, but to the rude, uncultivated commonality. If in my discourses I were to be thinking about Melancthon and the other doctors, I should do no good at all; but I preach in plain language to the plain, unlearned people, and that pleases all parties. If I know Greek, Hebrew, and Latin languages, I reserve them for our learned meetings, where they are of use; for at these, we deal in such subtleties and such profundities that God himself, I wot, must marvel at us."—Michelet's Life of Luther.

THE LORD'S COMING.

The world is growing gray and old,
And scoffers at the judgment bold,
And yet Thou art not here.
Thy chariot-wheels, O when shall they appear?
We only know, as dies each evil year,
Thy coming draweth near!

Souls in Thine absence watch and weep,
Most of the would-be watchers sleep;
Few hearts there are that yearn,
O Lord, for Thee! few loving hearts that burn
And break for thy return!

The pale and clouded light of day
Still shows the wretched same array
Of glorious vanity!
The painted hues which hide deformity,
The hollow smile of secret misery;
The rival joys which men would have to be,
O Lord, instead of Thee.

Some hazy eyes are looking for a time
Of peace and righteousness in every clime;
Some ears are listening for a universal chime
Which shall precede Thy coming—but the wail
Still rises to a gale,
And pity weeps, and purity turns pale—
While moans of suffering, songs of revelry,
Clangor of war, and shouts of ribaldry,
Alone, with their delightsome melody,
Answer these baseless hopes in bitter mockery.
The darkness deepens: through the tenfold gloom
Stream on earth's millions, to the day of doom;
While ever and anon, the fearful cry
Of human passion tells the struggle nigh;
The last uplifting of the ocean swell;
The last proud effort of triumphant hell;
The last defiant roar
Of all Thy haters, who the light before
Of thine appearing, Lord! with horror sore
Shall, overwhelmed, sink to rise no more!

It is the midnight hour; the careless lie
Wrapped in the slumbers of security.
O blinding light!
O rending sky!
O forms of swift descending majesty!
O shout of joy!
O horrid cry!
O thrilling shriek of wildest agony!
O angel legions, dazzling white!
O dead, arising at the sight!
O voice above the loudest trumpet blown!
O Christ, thy thunder tone!
Calling thy myriad myriads from the grave.
We rise, we soar, we cleave
The clouds beneath thy feet,
And, mounting, greet
With ecstasy
And hallelujahs sweet,
O Savior, Thee!

From every voice, with one accord,
It is the Lord! It is the Lord!
And full in every raptured eye
His image shines resplendently!
O long-believed-in, seen at length,
Outshining in thy sunlike strength,
Thy glory mingling with thy grace,
We see thee, Jesus, face to face!
With all the armies of the sky
We shout thy glad Epiphany!
Thrice welcome, earth-rejected King!
From every lip thy praises ring!
Thrice welcome to thy rightful throne;
For thou art worthy, Lord, alone!
For thou art He who once was slain.
And we are now to share thy reign,
For thou hast washed us in thy blood,
And made us kings and priests to God!
O silver angel-trumpets clear,
Uplift the joy from sphere to sphere!
O saintly voices, sweet and strong,
Roll through eternity along
The thunder of redemption-song!

ETERNAL LIFE.

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John 17: 3.

A knowledge of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, is essential to the attainment and enjoyment of eternal life. The importance of this knowledge is clearly stated by the Savior and his apostles.

Peter, in his second general epistle "to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ," prays that "grace and peace be multiplied" unto them, "through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." And he proceeds to show, that it is by means of this knowledge that all the great and precious promises become ours, whereby we are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Satan, being fully aware of the value of this knowledge, of its great power over the human heart, seeks to shut it out from the mind by means of unbelief, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts," for what? "To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4: 4, 6. By means of this light shining forth from the person of Jesus, and illuminating our hearts with the knowledge of his purposes in Christ, we are guided into the way of eternal life; hence the efforts of Satan to blind the minds of those who believe not, so that they may wander on in darkness, and perish at last without hope.

So highly did Paul esteem the acquirement of this knowledge, he cheerfully counts "all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus." In harmony with the text is the language of John: "We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." 1 John 5: 20.

The unbelieving world are in a state of ignorance, destitute of this essential knowledge; consequently in a condition of death. The apostle Paul describes their condition thus: Walking in the "vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." Who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. But ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus."—Eph. 4: 17–21. Those who have been taught of God, and have obtained a knowledge of him and his Son Jesus Christ, have "put off the old man, which is corrupt, and have put on the new man, which, after the image of God, is created in righteousness and true holiness.

Again, we have another description of the condition of those who remain in a state of ignorance, a fearful description of their awful degeneracy, as the result of their not liking to retain God in their knowledge. For this cause "God gave them over to a reprobate mind, ... being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful; who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them."—Rom. 1: 28–32. Such are treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds. What will be the retribution of such ungodly deeds as we have enumerated? "Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil." "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed . . . in flaming fire, . . . taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1: 7–9.

How awfully fearful, then, is the doom of those who say to God, "Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." But the question arises, How shall we attain to this knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is essential to eternal life? That the natural man, by his own unaided powers, cannot attain unto this knowledge, is evident from the teaching of the Holy Word. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." "It is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." What then? Are all in a state of ignorance respecting the riches of the inheritance laid up for the righteous? No. The heart of the unrenewed man is here meant, for he apostle goes right on to say, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. . . . Now we (saints) have received . . . the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God."—1 Cor. 2.

Here we have clearly set forth the condition of the unilluminated mind—the benighted understanding—the unrenewed heart. They are without the knowledge of the glorious things laid up for the saints of God. They comprehend not their excellency, and see in them no attractions. By what means, then, shall this knowledge be attained? The prayer offered by the apostle Paul for the Ephesian church affords a clear and comprehensive answer to this question. "Wherefore I also . . . . cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places."—Eph. 1: 16–20. Thus we see it is through the illumination of the Spirit of God, that Spirit which "searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," that we attain to the knowledge of the inheritance. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God"; i. e., without the revelation of the Spirit no knowledge can be obtained of divine things, and for this cause we have, says the apostle, "received the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."

When Peter made this confession of faith in reply to our Lord's question, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus said unto him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." A divine revelation was needful to convince Peter of this important fact.

Paul says that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." 1 Cor. 12: 3. It is a truth the Holy Spirit alone has revealed to mankind. By this we do not mean that every man must have it written on his heart by the direct operation of the Spirit. The revelations made to us in the Scriptures are from the Holy Spirit. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." [illegible]

God." We trace the revelations of the Spirit from the Fall to the closing book of the New Testament. But we do wish to be understood as teaching that those revealings of the Spirit through the written word need to be attended by the illumination of the Spirit to the benighted mind of the natural man, in order for them to be rightly comprehended. This is evident from what we have already quoted, and other testimony might be added.

The Savior told his disciples that when the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, was come, he would guide them into all truth; "For he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he shall show it unto you." It was thus a knowledge of God and Christ was to be acquired. And in this we see the excelling glory of the ministration of the Spirit above all other. That Spirit which searcheth all things, exploring the deep mines of God's wisdom, knowledge and grace, was able to take of those riches and show them unto every one of Christ's disciples. Under the dispensation of the law, a knowledge of God could not be universal. It was manifested only through the Sinaic thunders, lightnings, and earthquakes, and the mystic shadows of the symbolic ritual. How very imperfect and limited were such revelations of God and his Son Jesus Christ!

The manifestations made of Deity under the old dispensation were calculated to impress the mind with a sense of his great abhorrence of sin, and strict justice in vindicating his law, rather than with a view of his exceeding love for a perishing world. By the death-penalty inflicted as the consequence of one transgression, he had shown that the guilty could not escape punishment. By the sin-cursed earth, and all the vast evils resulting from the fall of Adam, sin was manifest as a thing of momentous account in God's sight.

By the deluge, sweeping from the face of the earth the entire race of ungodly men, sparing only eight souls, who alone had faith in God's word, he manifested his hatred of sin, and respect of holiness. By the fiery tempest, destroying the vile inhabitants of the cities of the plain, he gave another exhibition of the same traits. By the plagues sent upon Egypt; by the overthrow of Pharaoh's host; by the fearful punishments that were awarded to the rebellious Israelites—the fiery serpents and pestilence; by the forty years wandering in the wilderness, we see clearly evinced the dreadful character of sin, and the certain doom awaiting the transgressor. The Old Testament Scriptures abound with such illustrations of this fact, yet we can trace mercy's steps all the way, though but dimly seen.

Truly deplorable was the condition of the world when the glad shout broke upon the stillness of night from the angelic host,—"Glory to God in the Highest! Peace on earth, good will toward men!" To the shepherds who were watching their flocks was the glad announcement made—"Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord!"

For centuries God the Father had been working among the nations of earth, and dimly revealing his glorious attributes; and now Christ, the only begotten, the embodiment and impersonation of the Deity, comes in human form, possessed of like passions with us; he comes to suffer and sympathize with humanity, to take upon himself human woes and sins, and pour out his blood as a sacrifice for man's redemption. He comes to reveal the Godhead more clearly to mortals; to present Divinity in a more benign aspect; to assure the perishing sinner of a Father's love for them, his will to save and exalt them to an equal position with his own Son, making them first righteous, then heirs of the kingdom promised to David's successor.

God was now made manifest in the flesh, and adapted himself to the capacity of the poor, lowly, and ignorant sons of men. Says Jesus to one who said to him, "Show us the Father," "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." How? "Believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me." "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also." "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

O! how often has the trembling heart, weighed down with a sense of short-comings and imperfections, feared to approach unto the Father, viewing him as one far distant and disposed to frown upon us with displeasure, while we fled to Christ as a sympathizing friend, who could be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, having been tempted in all points like unto us. But the tender love, the affectionate words of sympathy and comfort spoken by Jesus, the gracious invitations to come to him with all our sorrows and cares, the sweet promises of help; all, all are but the outgushings of the Father's great heart of benevolence, poured forth to us through the medium of his Son.

We see perfectly exemplified in Christ the character of the Eternal Father—his disposition toward his erring creatures. Do we admire the noble spirit manifested by the father of the returning prodigal? That is a revelation of God's disposition toward his repenting ones. If, then, we would know the only true God, we must become acquainted with his Son, whom he hath sent. We must study his character as it is unfolded to us by the Evangelist. But we must not study it unaided by the Spirit's influence. To the third person in the Godhead we are indebted for the true comprehension of Christ. We are living in the dispensation of the Spirit. It is a far more glorious manifestation than the two that preceded it. Through the various manifestations of God in other times, but little was known of him! He was but dimly revealed and comprehended through the mystic symbols, though there were at times bright glimpses vouchsafed of his glory, as it beamed forth from between the cherubim. But oh, how limited! Few, very few were privileged to behold it. And to only one nation was committed the lively oracles.

When Deity became incarnate, the light shone forth more clearly, imparting greater knowledge in the person of Jesus Christ. Still this was limited. Few, comparatively, could gaze upon this impersonation of God, and listen to his words of wisdom. The world was yet in darkness.

Jesus finished the work given him to do, and ascending on high sent forth the Spirit, which, untrammeled by humanity, could go forth on its world-wide mission, illuminating every benighted mind, and imparting knowledge to all. Is not this in harmony with the written word? "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." "He shall reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." John says of Christ, "That was the true light, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." That general illumination could not have been during his personal sojourn upon earth. It is the mission of the Spirit to present Christ to the minds of the world at large, revealing their sins, and directing the attention to him as their sacrifice and Savior. It accompanies the written word; that word, inspired by its influence, is rendered luminous by its teachings, and the preached gospel is made effective unto salvation by its divine power.

Human instrumentality can speak only to the outward ear, but the Spirit of God utters its voice in the heart, and awakens the slumbering conscience, revealing by its searching light the secret sin and hidden depravity. It makes intercession for the saint with groanings unutterable, and helpeth their infirmities. God knoweth the mind of the Spirit, for he maketh intercession in accordance with his will. By its influence the heart is sanctified through the truth, and the love of God shed abroad therein. By it the child of God is assured of his acceptance, and sealed unto the day of redemption. It is the earnest of his inheritance, the pledge of future bliss. The baptism of the Spirit imparts unction and power to the testimony of Christ's witnesses.

This is the well of water springing up in the believer's heart, even unto everlasting life. Eternal life is promised only to such as have that saving knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which is acquired by the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, directing to a study of his character as revealed in the Scriptures which are able to make wise unto salvation. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye (think) ye have eternal life," said Christ to the Jews. To the believing heart there is made known the knowledge of eternal life by the word of God, and the only source from whence this everlasting life is derived; viz., Jesus Christ. He says, "I give unto them (his sheep) eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."

When will this eternal life be given to the sheep or true followers of Christ? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." Then "he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left." "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Then shall he say also unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Here we have the answer given direct from the lips of Jesus that it is when he comes in glory, and sits upon his throne of glory, he gives unto his sheep eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man, nor Satan even, be able to pluck them out of his hand. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The state of man by nature is one of death. He is alienated from the life of God, dead in trespasses and sins; living in pleasure, they are dead while they live, and they have in them no germ of life; and unless they accept of the life offered to them in Christ, they must forever remain in a state of death; they shall never see life. Not that they shall never be raised up from the grave; that is not the idea; but their condition is unchanged; they remain destitute of spiritual life—still dead in trespasses and sins, while the wrath of God abideth on them forever.

The one who has heard the call of the Spirit of God saying unto him, "Awake! thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light!" and obeyed that call, has passed from death unto life. They have received into their hearts the living word, and being begotten of this incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever, they are heirs of that eternal life which God hath promised unto all them that obey him.

Of this fact they need not be in doubt. "We know," says John, "that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death." And another thing they know: "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is eternal life."—1 John 5: 20.

PRAISE.—There is a commendation which affords me an exquisite satisfaction; I mean a commendation which flows from an unaffected love of goodness, and from a desire to confirm it. Such commendation confers more honor on those who give than on him who receives it, and shows him that he has a place, not in the admiration of a superficial mind, but in the affections of a good and pure heart.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 3.

THE JUBILEES FORTY-NINE YEARS APART,—NOT FIFTY.

Having clearly shown the chronological location of the first jubilee, and having subsequently counted an intervening space of forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, thus proving that A. D. 1868 is a jubilee year, it may be well to notice an erroneous impression imbibed by some, that a space of fifty years intervenes between the jubilees. The scriptural facts are these:

I. "The seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land. . . . And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. THEN shall thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month [in this forty-ninth year]; in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year." (Lev. 25: 4, 8, 9, 10.) Thus it will be seen that the jubilee does not begin with the end of the forty-ninth year, but in the seventh month of the forty-ninth year, on the tenth day of the month, running several months into the fiftieth year.

II. As the jubilee is one year long, and does not begin with the first month, like the other years, but begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, it must take in a part of two ordinary years, and therefore cannot be wholly identical with either the forty-ninth or fiftieth year, but is called "the fiftieth year," as it extends beyond the forty-ninth.

III. The provision "for three years," to be made each sixth year, for the sabbatical year, (that is, to last through the sixth and seventh and till they should "sow the eighth year" and reap the crop), being the same for the seventh sabbatical year as for the previous sabbatical years, (Lev. 25: 20–22), is proof that we are correct, as the ending of the jubilee would be in the seventh month of the year in which they were commanded to "sow," before their sowing time arrived,—thus not infringing upon their sowing time, nor requiring any different arrangement than for the ordinary sixth and seveth years; whereas, if the jubilee had begun with the first month of the fiftieth year, or on the tenth day of the seventh month of the fiftieth year, a four years' supply would have been requisite prior to the seventh sabbatical year, while such an arrangement never was given in the Bible.

IV. The jubilee, embracing a part of two years, allows the ordinary years, beginning with the first month, to proceed uninterrupted; that is, the regular course of the series of seven years is not discontinued till the jubilee is past, for the jubilee is situated between no two years, and therefore belongs to a distinct series.

V. As "the fiftieth year," (beginning on the tenth day of the seventh month), does not begin at the termination of the forty-ninth year, it will not help the matter to assume that it begins on the tenth day of the seventh month, the year after the forty-ninth, for then it would be a part of the fiftieth, and a part of the fifty-first, as really as it was a part of the forty-ninth and a part of the fiftieth in the other case, besides leaving a vacancy uncounted, and placing the jubilees several months over fifty years apart.

VI. Finally, only by allowing forty-nine years from jubilee to jubilee, as plainly given in the Bible, can we make the "thirtieth year" of a jubilee cycle synchronize with the "fifth year of the captivity," as given in Ezek. 1: 1, 2, where "the thirtieth year" of nothing else can be meant.

All is now clear, and it can no longer be doubted that 1868 is a jubilee year. The jubilee trumpet will "sound throughout all the land," and wake the dead saints, if our reckoning is correct, in 1868.

That every one may clearly see the point, we will give a table of jubilees, locating the first forty-nine years from the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, which required the observance of seven sabbatical years, occurring once in seven years, and also requiring the jubilee to begin in the seventh sabbatical year, on the tenth day of the seventh month, (see Lev. 25th chapter, and Ex. 21: 2, with the preceding chapter); thus, according to our chronology, placing the first jubilee B.C. 1563.

If the jubilee ushers in the deliverance of God's people from death and mortality, as we nearly all believe, the coming of the Lord to raise the "dead in Christ" must take place in 1868, or not till forty-nine years later. But the signs of the times forbid the passing of forty-nine years more; hence, we look to 1868 for the Lord's coming.

The jubilee trumpet will sound "in the day of atonement," when our great High Priest shall come out of the "Holiest" to bless the waiting people, and pronounce the atonement completed, on the tenth day of the seventh month, when the great antitypical "feast of tabernacles" will be joyfully observed by all the saints, in their "chambers" above, for seven prophetic days, "until the indignation be overpast," and the earth be purified, or made "new" from the melting conflagration; thus will the saints of all ages sweetly commemorate their escape from an Egyptian world and the bondage of mortality. Happy jubilee!

"That speaks the krisis ended"

in 1868. Our prospective "possessions"—immortality, eternal life, and untold felicity—will then be ours, and the kingdom of Christ be organized, Christ being inaugurated king, and the saints being constituted subjects, there waiting in their chambers "till the indignation be past," and their polluted territory be purified, or "the sanctuary be cleansed" in 1875. Soon—

"The jubilee proclaims us free,
O! hail happy day."

THE TIME QUESTION.

I find much said by Adventists against setting the time for the end of this dispensation. There have been so many failures in the past attempts, they are afraid future attempts will be as the past have been. It may be so, yet God set the time for the first Advent, and it was fulfilled; and Paul said (Eph. 1: 10), "In the dispensation of the fullness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

The evidence to me is conclusive that the time of his glory is as positively foretold as that of his suffering. 1 Pet. 1: 10—12. Those times were given for the benefit of the church. 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17. But the time can be of no benefit unless it can be understood before its fulfillment. Everything in church and State, the world over, agrees with the prophetic description of their character and condition at the end of time.

The fulfillment of God's word in the past shows that he meant what he said, and said what he meant. Therefore it is reasonable to me that God should raise up some man or men to bring out the true chronology of the world, and show where those times begin; thus we can know where they end. If Bro. Thurman is the favored one to do it, Amen. This is the time for some to say, like John the Baptist, The time is fulfilled and the kingdom is at hand. Let us be cautious and not go too fast, but, above all, let us not be too slow.

I have been waiting on the Lord for light on this subject for years, with the assurance that there would be light on this subject soon. Over twenty years some of us have been watching and waiting, and have been often blessed in so doing. God says those are blessed who wait for him. I hope to live to see the end. With the present light it seems that 1868 cannot pass without bringing the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. For this great event let us all live and act, carrying out the spirit of the angelic song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Then when the Master comes he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Peace be with all those that love our Lord Jesus in truth.

For the World's Crisis.

"CHRIST OUR LIFE."

If your views of man's mortality and immortality are correct, then we have a perfect solution of what has been regarded a very difficult class of scriptures.

1. In 1 John 1: 5, we have the birth of this immortal life: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Messiah, is born of God."

2. The testimony of this Life: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the (testimony) in himself. . . . And this is the record, that God hath given to us (christians) eternal life, and this life is IN his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life. . . That ye may know that ye have eternal life." See vers. 9–15.

3. Now we reach the passage that under the old, so called, orthodox view, together with the whole class corresponding with it, has been justly regarded very difficult: "There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it." Ver. 16. This sin unto death is the willful act of one "who has been enlightened" (Heb. 6), a true disciple, a believer in Jesus, as above, deliberately denying "the Lord that bought him," and thus "bringing on himself swift destruction" (2 Pet. 2: 1); "For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more (or other) sacrifice for sin." "Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy WHO HATH TRODDEN UNDER FOOT THE SON OF GOD, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing." Heb. 10. If those enlightened and who afterwards shall have fallen away (Heb. 6; the participles here are all in the past), it shall be impossible to renew them again to repentance; for "they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh." Thus have we the solution to THE "sin unto death," as also seen by the context in the chapter under consideration. For "we know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not" (thus unto death, by denying his Son); but keepeth himself; . . . for we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." Vers. 18–20.

4. Now, Bro. Grant, my mode of argument on this whole connection of thought is this: 1 John 5: 11, 12:—"And this is the (testimony), that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is IN HIS SON." Ver. 11. [illegible] If eternal life is in his Son, it is not out of his Son, and lying in his [illegible] nothing distinct from being out of his Son; but the apostle has himself fixed his position immovably. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Ver. 12.

5. But where has God given, as the testimony referred to in verse 11, that he hath given us christians only life in his Son? Ans. Matt. 16:—"Simon Peter said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus said, "Man, hath not revealed it unto you, but my Father which is in heaven. And I also say unto thee, that thou art Peter (compare Rom. 10: 9, 10), and on this rock I will build my church (compare 1 Cor. 3: 11), and the gates of *death shall not prevail against it." (Compare Acts 2: 23, 24.) And see also John 5: 23 and on; "Verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, HATH ETERNAL LIFE (and cometh not to judgment, but passeth from death INTO life)"; and John 11: 25, 26:—"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And WHOSOEVER LIVETH AND BELIEVETH IN ME SHALL NEVER DIE"; and also 1 John 3: 14:—"We know that we have passed from DEATH unto life." See also Rev. 20: 4, 5, where we shall see the consummation of this glorious resurrection life. "And I saw thrones, and they sat on them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them who had been beheaded for (THE TESTIMONY) of Jesus, even (the Greek word having its force of "even" here, must here be so translated) for the word of God; and which had not worshiped the beast, nor his image (which shall now soon be made to speak,—likely a speaking statue of the first Napoleon, by Napoleon III. See Rev. 13: 15); neither had received (ITS) mark on their foreheads, or in their hands; and they LIVED AND REIGNED with the Christ a thousand years. . . . THIS IS THE FIRST RESURRECTION (compare Phil. 3: 11); on SUCH the SECOND DEATH hath no power (and this is the meaning of John 11: 26), but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall REIGN with him a thousand years."

Truly indeed, Blessed and holy is he who hath part in this resurrection! Happy, thrice happy he! Here is the fruition of his passing from death unto life! O, how glorious! How my heart warms with immortal joy! If, then, brethren, ye be risen with the Christ, seek the things that are above,—for ye have died (your old manhood has died; compare Rom. 6: 3–6), and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ our LIFE shall be manifested, then will ye also be manifested with him in glory. Col. 3.

"COMING EVENTS CAST THEIR SHADOWS BEFORE."

This is true to a certain extent. For instance, when the event is a dark one, it foreshadows darkness. When the event brings light, of course light precedes it, like the dawning of day before the rising of the sun. So, methinks, will be the dawning of our eternal day; bright gleams of light and truth ere "the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." The light is obscured to us only when some opaque body comes between us and the sun, causing a shadow to fall upon us; so we walk in darkness.

The beloved apostle Paul tells us, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." We are all the children of light, and the children of the day. Jesus said, "While ye have light believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light." Now if any are hugging a baneful error to their hearts, and saying, this is new light and new truth, and at the same time do not emit the first ray of light, and hate their brother, who really cannot see any light there, the apostle John says, "he is in darkness, even until now. . . . Darkness hath blinded his eyes." How important, then, that we obey the Savior, and walk while we have the light, lest darkness come upon us. Not only believe the light and walk in it, but hold it up, so that others can see and believe, and receive it, if they will. Freely we have received now; let us as freely give.

How I love to give God the glory for the true light that is now shining on his blessed word. Not act as though by our own power or holiness, we had found it all out; remembering that "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts. I am glad the spirit and power of God attends the preaching of his word, when it comes warm from a heart, made new by the blood of Jesus Christ. I am glad God knows what meat to give and when to give it—in due season, that his children may be fed and "grow" thereby "in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Come, "Children, have ye any meat," due the church down here? If ye have, do not withhold it—as you value eternal life. Let us have it just as God gives it to you, that he may be glorified, you blessed in feeding, we in eating, that we may all soon be glorified together.

PLAIN PREACHING.—Dr. Erasmus Alberus, when departing from Brandenburg, asked Luther how he ought to preach before the Elector. Luther replied, "Your sermons should be addressed, not to princes and nobles, but to the rude, uncultivated commonality. If in my discourses I were to be thinking about Melancthon and the other doctors, I should do no good at all; but I preach in plain language to the plain, unlearned people, and that pleases all parties. If I know Greek, Hebrew, and Latin languages, I reserve them for our learned meetings, where they are of use; for at these we deal in such subtilties and such profundities that God himself, I wot, must marvel at us."—Michelet's Life of Luther.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Through the grace of God I have the privilege of sending you my monthly report for October. The first of the month we had much rainy weather and I took a severe cold which affected my lungs, that were somewhat overtasked, and I was quite unwell for several days. My health has since been better, through the mercy of our Heavenly Father, so that I have been able to labor in his vineyard as I fervently wished to do. Still I have found it necessary to be very careful, especially of my lungs and throat, and to speak less frequently in public than I had done the two preceding months. I have preached during the month twenty times, principally upon the Signs of the times, Gospel repentance, Sanctification and Watching as children of the day and not of the night, as the true remnant church of God waiting for the coming of our Master. My labors have been abundantly blessed and our meetings are well attended and solemn. Some good old Vodois sisters give their aid to this work, by visiting from house to house, and calling upon the people to "come and hear the truth," and many give glory to God, that this light has come to them just at this time when they so much need it. We believed ourselves directed by the Spirit of God, in coming here, and we praise his holy name that we were not deceived.

We are well satisfied, by our experience of the past four months, that it is in accordance with his will that we came to Italy. Our great enemy has not been unmindful of us, he has used his power to crush us. We have had many trials resulting from our lack of what is so necessary in the present state—money. The 10th of Oct. I was troubled by creditors, who are the faithful followers of the National Ministers, who are not our friends, but my mind was calm; for I felt a firm confidence, that God who has called me, as I believe, to this field of labor, would not forsake me in my extremity. I left all my cares in his hands, believing that he would provide for us. Early the morning of the 11th I was informed (contary to custom) that there was a letter for us at the post-office. It proved to be from Bro. Thorp of Leeds and contained an order for £8, 5.s for the mission (30s. from Bro. Joseph Curry, 10s. from Bro. Gargath, both of Liverpool, and £6, 5s., from the church of Leeds, Eng.) We paid at once our most pressing debts, and provided for our immediate wants with fervent gratitude to our Heavenly Father who had manifested his care for us so signally, and have since prosecuted our work with fresh courage.

Oct. 24th our hearts were cheered anew by receiving three numbers of the "Crisis of Sept. 20th, 27th and Oct. 4th. I had received no others since the large package that reached me Sept. 1st, containing all the numbers from May to Aug. 9th. In those of Sept. 20th and Oct 4th I notice donations for this Mission, for which we return our grateful thanks to the kind donors. We see by it that our dear American brethren and sisters still continue to extend their charity to their European brethren, who are in darkness and who so much need all the light that shines from the word of God at the present time. I believe that all those who have given of their substance to aid in spreading the light of truth in this region, will be abundantly blessed in their deed and never regret it. If I might be permitted to make a suggestion to the christian friends who will read these lines, I would suggest that if each brother and sister would send to the office of the Crisis twenty-five cents a year for this Mission, with the blessing of God, much good might be done here, and no one would feel the poorer for their offering. I consider it very important that tracts should be published in French, Italian and Slavonian languages at once, and spread through all this region by the means of good evangelists, colporteurs, and otherwise. Dear brethren and sisters, let us remember, that "time is short" and we cannot stand idle in this extensive vineyard of our Lord, but must labor that all may hear that Jesus is soon coming and be without excuse at the last great day.

Dear brethren, go forward vigorously in your great work; let the Pope and the Devil tremble, and the holy angels rejoice. Pray for us! May God bless you all abundantly. Amen. Yours faithfully,

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

For the World's Crisis.

THE NEW PRESTON TENT MEETING.

The meeting held at New Preston, Ct., in September, was one of the best that I ever attended. The Spirit of the Lord was present to lead, and all the children manifested a disposition to be governed by the word and Spirit of God. Sinners were convicted, and some backsliders were reclaimed. Some of the "standing order" felt bad because we were preaching right in their midst what they deemed heresy. One lady, a member of the church, hired a poor, ignorant man, giving him two dollars, I understood, to blow a tin horn to disturb the meeting; but the brethren trusted in the Lord, and gave him glory for the promise that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Brn. Ross, Gardner, and others, preached the word to the edification of the church. On Sunday four were baptized,—one of them had waited more than twenty years to get better before he went forward in this ordinance of the gospel; and although he had waited so long God blessed him in the discharge of this duty, and, like the eunuch that we read about in the "old family Bible," he was enabled to go on his way rejoicing.

It was thought best by the brethren and sisters to hold a campmeeting on the same ground the first week in September, 1865, if the Lord does not come before, and the following brethren were appointed a committee of arrangements: H. J. Whitehead, J. Ackerman, H. Baldwin, C. Reynolds, H. M. Bowles.

A meeting was also appointed to be held on the same ground the fourth of July next, if the Lord permit. The truth is taking deep root in that region of country and I pray that it may spread and a large company be gathered into the fold of Christ. Amen.

BATH.

Our meetings in the city of Bath, Me., were very interesting, although held during the most unfavorable week during the year, as we commenced on the evening of the day of the Presidential election, when the political excitement was very high. The weather too was very unfavorable; but we had large audiences, and excellent attention. We found some excellent brethren and sisters there, who are real workers in the vineyard of the Lord. Brn. R. R. York, H. D. Reed, and Douglas, were present and rendered efficient service in the meetings. Two requested prayers and others were deeply interested. There is good reason to believe that some new ones will embrace the truth, and be saved.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE 2300 DAYS.

In Dan. 8: 14, we learn that the scenery in Daniel's vision of the eighth chapter is to continue 2300 days. In the last number of the Crisis it was shown that these days represent 2300 years,—each day for a year. The question before us now is, where do they begin and end? This point is not explained to Daniel in the 8th chap., hence he says at its close, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." He had this vision "in the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar," the last king of Babylon, who is said to have reigned "two years and about three months."

"In the first year of Darius, . . . Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 1–2. He then commenced his prayer, which is continued till Gabriel appeared again to give him "skill and understanding" concerning "the vision" of the 8th chapter. And as the instruction of the angel is in relation to time, we must conclude that this is what Daniel did not understand in the vision. It appears that Daniel thought the 2300 days might be closing up with the termination of the seventy years of desolation. But to correct such view of the subject, the angel says, "understand the matter and consider the vision." Dan. 9: 23. When Daniel began to "consider the vision," he would see at once, that it was not fulfilled when the seventy years of desolation, and the captivity ended; because the Medo-Persian kingdom, as symbolized by the "ram," had just commenced; and the Grecian kingdom, represented by the goat, as events have shown, was between one and two hundred years in the future; hence the 2300 days were not literal, but symbolical; i. e., 2300 years, and but just begun.

After calling the attention of Daniel to that part of "the vision" which he had come to explain, he says: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most holy."—Dan. 9: 24. As time is the burden of the angel's instruction, we think it is clear that his second visit was for the purpose of giving instruction relative to the 2300 days. This appears very evident, when we consider the literal meaning of the original word rendered "determined." Dr. Hale, the noted chronologist, says:—"The word which is translated 'determined,' is found only in Dan. 9: 24. Not another instance of its use can be traced in the Hebrew Testament. It has the single signification of cutting, or cutting off."

As no other period but the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14, had been given, it follows that the seventy weeks were cut off from them; and, consequently, they must commence together. But we cannot cut off weeks from days till the weeks be reduced to days. In seventy weeks there are four hundred and ninety days. As the 2300 days are symbolical, representing 2300 years, then it follows that the seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety days cut off from them, are also so many years to be cut off, leaving 1810.

We now inquire, where did these periods begin? As the 2300 years cover the entire length of "the vision," till we arrive to the point where it may be said "the sanctuary" is "cleansed," it follows, of course, that the period dates from the first event in the vision. The vision begins with the work of "the ram;" and his first and principal act is expressed in the following language:—"I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hands; but he did according to his will, and became great."—Dan. 8: 4.

The word rendered "beasts" in this verse is "ghahy," an adjective, and occurs 509 times in the Hebrew scriptures, and would be more properly rendered living. It is rendered "living," "alive," "lifetime," "liveth," "life," "lived," "lives," "live," 412 times out of the 509, and in the remaining ninety-seven passages may be correctly and sensibly rendered by one of the foregoing words. The most common rendering of the word is "living." It is the word rendered living in Gen. 2: 7,—"man became a living soul." Also in Isa. 38: 19,—"The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day." The last example illustrates its use in Dan. 8: 4: "I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward, so that no" living, or living soul, "might stand before him." The word has no reference to a wild beast representing a political government, but to individuals.

We suppose no one doubts that the bear in Dan. 7: 5, and the ram in Dan. 8: 4, denote the same thing,—the Medo-Persian empire. It is said of the bear,—"It raised up itself on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it: and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh."—Dan. 7: 5. Let it be observed that it is the ribs in the mouth of the bear that say to it "arise, devour much flesh." On this point, Bro. Thurman very properly remarks:—

Three ribs are but parts of a skeleton; so the voice must have come from the remains of some already ruined people, who were at that time 'between the teeth,' ready to be crushed by the Persian power. From the book of Esther we learn that a voice for the slaughter of the whole Jewish nation, came from Haman (Est. 3: 9,) who was but a skeleton, or the last of those Amalekites (Jose. Ant. b. 11, c. 6. s. 5,) which had been 'utterly destroyed, by Saul.' (1 Sam. 15: 20.) As these ribs were between the teeth, we understand that they were crushed by the bear, and 'they hanged Haman on the gallows.' This is the last we hear of the Amalekites."

It is well known that the governments of this world, as symbolized by wild beasts, are not usually brought into prophecy till they become connected with the Lord's people; hence we find the Medo-Persian kingdom introduced at the time, when Haman, the last of the Amalekites, had persuaded Ahasuerus, the king of Persia, to kill all the Lord's children in the one hundred and twenty-seven provinces of the empire. Never before, or since, has there been such a plot to cut off all the children of the Lord at once. The commandment was, "to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day." Esther 8: 13. Is is not said the ram was pushing eastward, from the fact, we think, that the Jews did not reside there.

It is said the ram "did according to his will." After the terrible decree had been issued to kill all the Jews, the "will" of the king was reversed, and expressed by an opposite decree in favor of the Jews; and instead of the execution of all the Lord's children, their great enemy, Haman, was hanged upon the gallows which he had caused to be prepared for Mordecai, the Jew. Then the ribs in the mouth of the bear were fully devoured, and thus ended the nation of the Amalekites of whom God had said the time would come to "blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven," because of their bitter persecution of his people.

As it is not found that the Medo-Persian empire was ever "pushing westward, and northward, and southward," at any one time, so that no government could stand before it, we think this "pushing" was against the children of the Lord, as just shown; and as this is the first and principal deed of the ram, it must indicate the commencement of "the vision" which includes events to continue 2300 years; and from this same point begin the seventy weeks, or 490 years that were cut off upon Daniel's "people," and upon the "holy city." "to seal up the vision and prophecy."

Having found the event that appears to mark the commencement of the 2300 days and seventy weeks, we now inquire for the date of this noted decree, and find it was "in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus."—Esther 3: 7, 13. According to Bro. Thurman's chronology, Ahasuerus, known in history by the name of Artaxerxes, the son of Xerxes the great, begun his reign B. C. 438; hence his twelfth year would be 426 B. C., which is the year where Bro. Thurman begins the 2300 years and seventy weeks, or 490 days. Beginning at that point, the seventy weeks would end A. D. 65, where the seven years' Jewish war began; which resulted in causing "the sacrifice and oblation to cease," and the destruction of the city; and the 2300 days would end in A. D. 1875.

Bro. Thurman claims that the 1335 days of Dan. 12: 12, begin A. D. 533, and end 1868, at which time our Savior will appear to gather his saints; and that seven years are then employed in keeping the antitype of the feast of tabernacles; during which time the sanctuary is cleansed, and prepared for possession by the saints, and their Bridegroom King, at the end of the 2300 days. His chronology also shows that the 6000 years from creation end in A. D. 1875.

OLD READING.

The following free rendering of Rev. 1: 9, 10, is from an old translation, shown us by Bro. Peter Hough, of Cascade, Iowa. The title page was gone, and the corners of the book were so rounded off with use, as to measure about two inches on a circle. We think the book was studied more faithfully than most people read their Bibles at the present day. It was brought from Germany. The passage reads as follows:

"I John, your fellow-christian, fellow-sufferer and fellow-expectant of the future glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ, being in the island Patmos—an exile there for my attachment to the revelation of God, and for my profession of the gospel of Jesus Christ, was, on that day in which our Lord rose from the dead, endowed with the afflatus of the Spirit."

SECRET SOCIETIES.

A brother inquires if we think it right for christians to unite with secret societies?

So far as our observation goes, we are fully satisfied that the less the children of the Lord are associated with them, the better for their growth in christianity. With all such societies, so far as we have any knowledge, the unconverted are more or less connected, and are usually in the majority. They, of course, will have their worldly pastime, when it is expected all the members of the society will be present, and participate in the exercises, which are poorly calculated to advance one in divine life. All the members of such society are considered as brethren, whether they love the Lord or the world.

SEAL THE BOOK.

An inquirer wishes to know if the word rendered "seal" in Dan. 9: 24 is the same as in Dan. 12: 4?

The words "seal" in both cases are from the same Hebrew word ghathom, which occurs twenty-eight times, and is rendered "seal" twenty-five times, "marked" once, (Job 24: 16), "stopped" once, (Lev. 15: 3), "to make an end" once, (Dan. 9: 24) margin, "seal up." In the last three examples, the word may be properly rendered "seal" as in the other twenty-five cases.

The word is defined by Gesenius, "to seal, to seal up, to close by a seal," "to shut fast, to lock."

It is very clear that the prophetic periods of Daniel were "closed up and sealed till the time of the end," for thus it is declared by the angel; hence all efforts to understand these periods before "the time of the end" must prove so many failures. No matter how much learning the men might have who attempted to open the sealed book before the time of the end came, they must all be proved wrong, whenever the seal is removed.

SUNDOWN AT NOON.

In Amos 8: 8, 9, we read:—"Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn that dwelleth therein? and it shall rise up wholly as a flood; and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day." Amos prophesied two years before a noted earthquake, in the days of Uzziah:—"The words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel, two years before the earthquake."—Amos 1: 1.

The trembling of the land, mentioned in Amos 8: 8, is thought to refer to the earthquake which was to happen in two years from the time of this prophecy. The going down of the sun "at noon," and the darkening of "the earth in the clear day," spoken of in Amos 8: 9, it is thought took place on the day of the earthquake, as great darkness frequently accompanies an earthquake, so as to give the appearance of sundown at noon.

Dr. Adam Clarke remarks on this passage as follows:—"This may either refer to that darkness which often precedes and accompanies earthquakes, or to an eclipse." His own opinion was that the darkened noon was caused by "the earthquake."

Bro. Thurman thinks the darkness was caused by an eclipse, which happened on the day of the earthquake, in the forty-first year of Jeroboam's reign, July 9th, B. C. 755, at five minutes after seven in the morning. As the sun set on July 8th, at five minutes after seven, at which time another day began, according to Jewish reckoning, twelve hours from that time, or five minutes after seven on the morning of the 9th of July, would be just twelve hours, or the middle of a day of twenty-four hours; and as "the evening and the morning were the first day," and "the evening and the morning were the second day," and so on to the seventh, (Gen. 1: 5, 8,) Bro. Thurman concludes that when the Lord says, by the prophet Amos, "I will cause the sun to go down at noon," that in this case it refers to the middle of the day of twenty-four hours, which on the 9th of July, B. C. 755, was at five minutes after seven in the morning, at which time he finds a total eclipse of the sun. The word tzohar, rendered noon, in Amos 8: 9, occurs twenty-four times, and is rendered once "a window," Gen. 6: 16; once "midday," 1 Kings 18: 29; once "noontide," Jer. 20: 16; and in all the other places, "noon," or "noonday."

We read in Gen. 1; 5, that "God called the light day," hence "midday," or "noon," would be the middle of the daylight, or middle of the period from sunrise to sundown. Take an example in 1 Kings 18: 26, 27, 29:—

"And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that answered. And they leaped upon the altar which was made. And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud: for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked. And they cried aloud, and cut themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till the blood gushed out upon them. And it came to pass, when midday was past, and they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded."

In verses 26 and 27, the word tzohar is rendered noon, and in verse 29 midday. We think there is no room to doubt that the original word is used to denote the middle of the daylight, in all places where it occurs in the Scriptures, excepting Gen. 6: 16, where it is rendered "window;" and as that was to be put "above" that is, in the upper part of the ark, in the direction of the sun at "noon," it might be called the "noon" "window."

Bro. Thurman remarks, "We had written our table of chronology before we thought of this eclipse; and as it is found in the right year, we have not altered our chronology a single day to reconcile it with this eclipse."—Chron. p. 76.

In Amos 8: 9, after saying "It shall come to pass in that day, [when "the land" shall "tremble,"] saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon," he goes on to say,—"and I will darken the earth in the clear day." We see no reason why there might not have been a total eclipse in the morning of that day, at five minutes past seven, and then after that have the sun "go down at noon," in connection with the earthquake. Both events might consistently happen on the same day. Indeed, the word ohr, rendered "clear," in Amos 8: 9, is rendered morning in Neh. 8: 3,—"And he [Ezra] read therein before the street that was before the water gate, from the (ohr) morning until midday." The original word occurs in the following passages: "until the morning light" (1 Samuel 14: 36;) "by the morning light," (2 Samuel 23: 4;) "until the morning light," (Samuel 25: 36;) "by the morning light," (2 Samuel 17: 22,) "tarry till the morning light," (2 Kings 7: 9.) When we consider that the word rendered "clear" in Amos 8: 9,—"I will darken the earth in the clear day,"—is the same that is rendered light and morning in the foregoing examples, there is strong evidence in favor of the eclipse in "the morning," or "in the clear day;" that is, in the "clear," or "morning" of the day, as shown by the astronomical observations. One definition of the word ohr, as given by Gesenius, is "morning light."

When we look carefully at Amos 8: 9, there appear to be two events mentioned; 1, "I will cause the sun to go down at noon;" 2, "and I will darken the earth in a clear day." A total eclipse was just as likely to happen in the morning of this day, which was darkened at noon in consequence of an earthquake, as at any other time; and both events would make the day a memorable one.

DOUBTFUL INFORMATION.

After our discussion with Eld. Moses Hull, in Lynn, we were informed that some twenty Spiritualists had been shaken in their belief of Spiritualism, or given it up. This statement has since been denied by the Spiritualists. A few days since, we received a note from a Spiritualist, stating that the story was fabricated by one who was "boarding with ——, one of the leading Spiritualists of Lynn," "a lying, drunken, licentious character," who "went about amongst the Spiritualists, circulating the most ridiculous lies that ever come from mortal lips. This woman became disaffected with the Spiritualists, denounced them, and said "she knew of twenty more that had."

Our Spiritualist informant gives proof that this woman has confessed that she told that which was false. We cheerfully make the correction.

THE VOICE OF THE WEST, we are glad to learn, has reached 1000 subscribers. And when we consider it is only about six months since the first number was issued, this is doing well, for these times. Eld. Himes, the Editor and proprietor, now proposes to raise it to 2000, the coming year, which will make it a paying paper. So far, it pays him nothing. We wish him success in this enterprise, as we believe all our readers do, both East and West. Let the 1000 new subscribers be added without delay.

TO CANADA SUBSCRIBERS.

Subscribers in the Canadas, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, will find it to their advantage, when remitting to this office, to do so in Provincial bank bills, or gold. For every $1.00 of such money sent us, we will give $2.00 credit, more or less, according to its current value when received.

FROM A NEW SUBSCRIBER.

MR. MILES GRANT:—Dear Sir:—I have this day had the pleasure of perusing a copy of the "World's Crisis," sent to my wife by a christian sister of this place, who is now on a visit to her friends in the State of Maine; and I am so pleased with the contents, especially that portion which relates to the great and interesting subject of the second advent, that I take the earliest opportunity to subscribe, and herewith enclose six months' subscription; and should the future members prove as interesting as the copy I have been favored with, I shall make it my business to try to increase your number of subscribers in this place.

I have long desired to have a publication of the kind, and hail it as the harbinger, of at least a restoration of the apostolic mode of building up the Redeemer's kingdom on the earth, and preparing the bride for the speedy coming of the Bridegroom. Yours in Christ,

Pottsville, Penn. T. A. GODFREY.

NOTICE.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have need of all that is owing me for books to pay my printer. Please be so kind as to assist me in this my time of need.

I have a few full sets of my works on hand, and desire to dispose of them to meet the expenses of publishing them. Please see notice of books, and make a selection. Perhaps you have a friend that you would enlighten upon the evidences of the coming of the Just One. Perhaps they might do them good. TRY THEM. S. S. BREWER.

CAUTION ABOUT CELESTA.

Brethren and sisters that are making any arrangements to "flee to the mountains," as they call it, or in other words, that are calculating to go to Celesta, let me say, DON'T BE HASTY. WAIT A SHORT TIME, and you will see something developed that will cause you to remain at home and serve GOD, and "wait for his Son from heaven." Wait for the experience of one that has been there and returned, which will soon be published.

"THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES."

A friend writes:—"I think it the most horrid, useful book I ever read; some parts of it actually made me faint and sick while reading them; still I wish every thinking person could have the reading of it. I did not think it possible there could be such fiends in human form, or that there could be such wickedness perpetrated in the earth, as that book describes. O! is not the world already ripe for destruction? How much greater may we need? Truly our God is long-suffering, or he would have destroyed it long ere this."

VOICES FROM THE POOR.

FROM A BROTHER UNFORTUNATE.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with a heavy heart that I sit down to unfold to you my condition. I know it has been some time since I have paid you for the Crisis; but it is not because I did not want to, but because I could not. Last year I got Bro. H—— to write to you and state my case, hoping before another year rolled round I should be in better circumstances; but it is the reverse. Sickness and losses prevent.

I am living in the neighborhood of a church and would love to go to meeting, but I cannot for want of decent clothes. I have two children whom I should like to send to Sabbath School, but they have not been to the week-day school for want of decent clothes. I am not lazy. My neighbors all know to the contrary. But it seems that every thing I undertake works against me.

Last winter I bought me a horse and wagon, and took out a peddler's license. I thought I could make something more than a living, but I was mistaken. In about four weeks my horse got hurt in the barn, and died. What to do I did not know. But I got another, and in eight days that was taken sick and died too. Then I gave up peddling, and thought I would try something else. So this spring I took some ground to plant on halves, but the dry weather cut me off; and now, how to get along and support my family and pay for the Crisis, I do not know. I will pay you just as soon as I can; but the paper,—I want it—I love it—it is all the preaching I have; yet I must give it up, unless you see fit to continue it. Your brother in affliction, Providence Co., R. I. W. H. S.

FROM AN AGED BRO., CRIPPLED AND POOR.

BRO. GRANT:—I enclose $5.00 in part pay for the $9.00 due for the Crisis. I will try to pay the balance as soon as I can; it is all that I can do at present, under existing circumstances. I am now almost seventy-five years old, and am a cripple for life. I have had one of my legs taken off below the knee, and been confined to my house ever since last February, and the most part of the time to my bed, and am alone, with nobody to do anything but my wife. My boy, the only help I had, went to the war, and died there. I wish you would discontinue the paper, as I am not able to pay for it any longer. We have all we can do to procure the necessaries of life, and a heavy doctor's bill to pay. Therefore I hope you will be patient, and remember the poor and afflicted. Yours in hope,

Van Buren Co., Mich. J. S.

Shall it be discontinued, brethren?

The Promise Verified.

A former free subscriber, who, though poor, enclosed $2.50 some weeks since, and wished hereafter to become a paying subscriber, now writes:—

BRO GRANT:—I wrote you some time ago (Oct. 4th) that I thought best to pay for the Crisis and trust the Lord for food and raiment. According to his promise, food and raiment have been added; and now, seeing the want of others who cannot pay, we feel to give as the Lord hath prospered us. On reading the letter from John ——, Jr., who had to saw wood for the wants of six, husband said, "Send two dollars for that man"; so here we enclose it, believing what God promised, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again." O! we want more faith.

Yours, L. P. HASTINGS.

THE BANK OF THE LORD'S POOR.

RESPONSES FROM SHAREHOLDERS.

Dear Bro. Grant:—It has done me so much good to read the letters in the Crisis from God's poor, that it seems almost a blessing to have poor ones to breathe out such humble dependence upon God; and as I have been refreshed by them, so I wish to do what I can, that they also may be refreshed by reading our precious paper, the Crisis,—and, for this purpose, I send you $25.00; $5.00 to be sent to Chloe, that afflicted sister in Litchfield Co.; $10.00 for the Poor Fund; $10.00 for the Tract Fund,—and may the Lord bless them, and you, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ, JOHN M. STETLER.

Philadelphia, Pa.

And you, also, Bro. S., for "Blessed is he that considereth the poor. . . . He shall be blessed upon the earth."

Bro. Grant:—Enclosed are 40 cts. toward sending the Crisis to poor Bro. John ——, Jr., the brother who is partially blind, and very destitute of clothing. It is but a little, and it is all the money I have, except two cents; yet I should not feel right to withhold it. I wish it were more! If he is supplied through the more liberal donations of others, then appropriate to some other as you think best.

More liberal than Zaccheus. He gave the HALF of his goods to feed the poor; and this brother gives ALL that he has,—except two cents.

Bro. Grant:—Enclosed you will find 50c. that will help to pay for some poor sister's paper. I am poor myself, but when I read of others' poverty, I feel for them, and think I am better off, and will do what I can towards paying for the paper they so much love. O, the time will come soon when we wont need papers or books but will see the Lord face to face, and praise him for all he has done for us. Your sister in Christ, D.

Portsmouth, N. H.

Every little helps, sister. To the Lord, who looks at the heart that gives, and the means which each HAS to give, the widow's mite is more than the rich man's talent of gold. The greatest givers are the poor, who of their little give much. W. R. H.

From John ——, Jr., the Woodsawyer.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

DEAR BRO.:—I have received your letter with the enclosed $4.00. God bless you, and those who gave it! It is the Spirit of Christ that leads men and women to do good. Glory to God! Pray for me, that God would give me good sight. Your Bro. in Christ,

JOHN BROWN, JR.

Indiana Free List.

It is proposed that the churches and brethren, in each town and county, do what they can to supply their own poor with the Crisis for the coming year. Will the brethren in the following places take the matter in hand, and see what they can do?

Angola	1	Memphis	1
Fort Wayne	1	Rolling Prairie Station	1
Jeffersonville	1	Michianfield	1
Lakeville	1	South Bend?	1
Mishawaka	1	Walkerville	1

A RESPONSE from one who wishes to lend to the Lord:—

"I see you have two in this place to whom the paper is sent free. If you will send me their names, and they are worthy poor, I will pledge you the $5.00 for them for the year to come, myself. I cannot express what I feel for our needy brethren and sisters, and I pray that every one who has the means will not only feel for, but act now, in behalf of our worthy poor. J. R. M."

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE BRN. AND SRS. IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Our last Crisis brings to us the fact, that the poor list of our State numbers sixty-four, which number, if paid for in advance, at the present rates of subscription, would amount to $160.00. This ought not so to be. In the first place, I am not in favor of sending the paper free to every one that wishes it; for there are those who will take advantage of the Society's liberality, and are not willing to make any sacrifice to sustain it, while they are as able to pay for it as for tea, coffee, tobacco, morphene, or any other slow poison.

But there is a class who are worthy. They are the poor. They are obliged to make every sacrifice to live. We have heard from some of them through the Crisis of late. Of such I would say, as long as the Crisis is published let it be a blessing to them, and let those who are able bear the burden.

There is another class who ought to have the paper free,—our ministers,—they who co-operate with us, and are sounding the cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet him!" They have all they can do to support themselves and their families.

But how shall we come at this matter? As has been suggested, "let each State provide for its own poor." Let those who are interested refer to the lists of free subscribers in the Crisis, look after those in their vicinity, and find out who are worthy to receive it free, and who are not. Let those, also, who are receiving the paper free, search their own heart and see if it does not condemn them for taking the paper free, while they are not willing to make any sacrifice of unnecessary evils upon their part in order to pay for their own paper. I think by this means our poor list may be very much reduced, perhaps one half, which would leave but $80.00 to be paid; and I am thinking there are enough generous hearts who love the truth to pay for all worthy free subscribers.

Some have done nobly, thank the Lord, and I trust they have already been paid richly in blessing for the sacrifice they have made. Let others follow at once, and let the amount be raised. By so doing you can help spread the gospel to the poor. Think how you anxiously wait the arrival of your paper; how you love to devour its contents. It is like manna to the hungry soul. Then think of those poverty-stricken ones who have no means of providing this feast and love the truth as well as yourself; then realize that it is more blessed to give than to receive; then give; then receive the blessing; then thank God for it.

You that have been in the habit of paying your money to me,—I have your accounts, and the number to which you have paid. Some of you are running behind. It is much easier to pay in advance than to pay after you have got behind. Let us see to it that our subscriptions are paid in advance. Don't forget it when I come round. If you do, I shall put you in mind of it. The Lord help us to sustain our paper. I believe we have the right men in the right place. Let us pray that God's blessing may rest upon them.

C. B. TURNER.

A WORD FOR THE CRISIS.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the kindness of some unknown friend, the "Crisis" has been sent to me for some time past free. Many thanks to the donor. I regard it as one of the best religious publications of the age, and heartily believe and endorse the sacred truths which it brings to us in its weekly visits, and wish them still continued, for I should hardly know how to get along without them. I shall try to do all I can for its support, by way of getting new subscribers. May the Lord bless and prosper you in your noble and laborious work of love, for the salvation of mankind, is my humble prayer. Yours, as ever, looking for the soon coming kingdom,

H. H. JAMES.

PRAY FOR THE BACKSLIDER.

A brother in the army of the Potomac writes:—"I am a poor backslider. I once loved the Lord, but have wickedly departed from him. I have a sincere desire to return to Father's house, and I heartily desire the prayers of his children, that he may restore unto me the joys of his salvation. I once loved the weekly visit of the Crisis, and believed the doctrine it advocated. I still believe in the speedy coming of the King of kings, and wish to receive all the light I can. I therefore wish you to send me the Crisis."

IS IT MIDDAY IN THE MORNING?

A Criticism of Thurman's Chronology.

In pages 74–77 of this work the writer endeavors to show that Amos viii. 9 is a prophecy of an eclipse of the sun, which he identifies by his tables, and which he regards as signally verifying his chronology. He thinks that the prophecy fixes not only the day of the eclipse, but "even the exact hour and minute of the day." Precisely at the supposed hour and minute, he finds an eclipse become total. "And does not this," he asks, "being found in such exact harmony with every other portion of Bible Chronology, as proven by astronomy, definitely settle the correctness of our chronology? ... Since it is impossible to find another eclipse of the sun answering to the exact year, hour, and minute, as pointed out by Amos, this does appear to prove to absolute certainty that our chronology is strictly correct. By the errors into which Ptolemy fell, the book of Daniel has been sealed; but, by the unerring authority of Heaven, it is now opened." (P. 76.)

The prophecy in Amos is as follows: "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day." Let us allow, for the sake of the argument, that this is the prediction of an eclipse. Also, that the very day of the eclipse is fixed by Amos i. 1, viii. 5, 8; Zech. xiv. 5; 2 Kings xiv. 23. Finally, that the very hour and minute are given in the Hebrew word rendered "noon." One question remains. Mr. Thurman's eclipse fulfilling this prophecy is total at five minutes past seven in the morning. Is he warranted in rendering the Hebrew word for noon so that it shall correspond with that hour of the day?

An important question, yet on which Mr. T. seems to venture the accuracy of his entire system. His argument is as follows: "Not the middle of the artificial day, or 'at noon,' as our translators have it, but at the middle of the natural day, or twelve hours from sunset; for while the sun, according to the Douay translation, was to 'go down at midday,' this midday darkness was to be in the morning. (Amos iv. 13.)" And he refers to Lev. xxiii. 32 and Mark i. 32 in connection with the remark that the day, according to Jewish reckoning, began at sunset.

I do not see that Mark i. 32 teaches this point. And the reader will do well to see if Amos iv. 13 proves that "this midday darkness was to be in the morning." Again, are not the twelve hours, more or less, of "daylight" more properly called the natural day, instead of the period from sunset to sunset? "God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night." "He made the greater light to rule the day." "Are there not twelve hours in the day? If a man walk in the day he stumbleth not." And the Jewish division of this clear day into twelve parts, counting them from sunrise, often appears in the Bible. "I must work while it is day;" "When it was day;" etc. seem very natural methods of beginning the day with dawn. Very true, it is said "the evening and the morning were the first day." But this seems more like afterthought, or reckoning, and such a day, though larger and fuller than the hours of daylight, seems more properly called the artificial day.

But the question need not linger at this tribunal of the propriety of an epithet. We may call twelve hours the artificial day, or twenty-four hours. But there is no dispute about the meaning of the word "noon." And I proceed to show that the Hebrew word so rendered, tsohar, has the same sense, equally definite and settled. It can by no possibility denote seven o'clock in the morning, or any other hour than the middle time of daylight. It is derived from the verb tsahar, which means to shine, to glitter. It occurs in Gen. vi. 16; viii. 6, where it is rendered "window," i. e., an aperture for light. It is commonly found in the dual number, and then is defined by Gesenius "noon," properly double light, i. e., strongest, brightest." If any one says that the vowel pointing for the dual number is traditional, and not inspired, such objector must take the word as plural, and make the most,—or the least,—of that. It occurs in the following passages: Gen. xliii. 16, "These men shall dine with me at noon." Ver. 25, "They made ready the present against Joseph came at noon; for they heard that they should eat bread there." Deut. xxviii. 29, "Thou shalt grope at noon-day, as the blind gropeth in darkness." (Compare Job v. 14.) 2 Sam. iv. 5, "Came about the heat of the day to the house of Ish-bosheth, who lay on a bed at noon." 1 Kings xviii. 26, "They called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us." Ver. 27, "And it came to pass at noon that Elijah mocked them." Ver. 29, "When midday was past, and they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice." Chap. xx. 16, "They went out at noon." 2 Kings iv. 20, "When he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died." Job xi. 17, "Thine eye shall be clearer than the noon-day." Ps. xxxvii. 6, "He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day." lv. 17, "Evening, morning, and noon will I pray," etc. xci. 6, "Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor the destruction that wasteth at noon-day." Cant. i. 7, "Tell me ... where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon." Isa. xvi. 3, "Make thy shadow as the night in the midst of the noon-day." lviii. 10, "Then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon-day." lix. 10, "We stumble at noon-day as in the night." Jer. vi. 4, "Prepare ye war against her; arise, and let us go up at noon." (Gesenius explains this of an attack in the heat of the day, thus at an unexpected hour.) So xv. 8, "A spoiler at noon-day; I have caused him to fall upon it suddenly." And xx. 16, "Let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noon-tide." Zeph. ii. 4, "They shall drive out Ashdod at the noon-day."

These examples of the use of the word require no comment. But it is natural to remark that the interval from morning to twelve hours after sunset is never mentioned. The heat of the day does not occur in the middle of what Mr. T. styles the natural day; people do not dine at that hour; nor do they expect to be far advanced on a journey then, unless by modern art they take the night train instead of the day train.

In the Septuagint the word is rendered in 1 Kings xviii. 29 thus: "until afternoon time" (deilinon). In all the other places it is rendered by mesembria, or mesembrinos (midday), [illegible] it is employed more in Acts xxii. 6; and south in Acts viii. 26. The phrase rendered "midday" in Acts xxvi. 13 is the basis of the word mesembria, and has the same sense. In the Vulgate, from which the Douay version is made, the word is uniformly rendered meridies, or meridianus (midday), whence our word meridian. This word has also the meaning south. And in classic writers it is applied to a siesta, or nap taken at noon.

We are compelled to conclude that any eclipse predicted in Amos viii. 9 did not occur so early in the day as five minutes past seven A. M. There follows one of three results. Either, 1. Mr. T. should regard the prophecy as not of an eclipse. He may then retain this eclipse in his tables, as one not mentioned in ancient writings. 2. He may regard his astronomical tables as inaccurate. 3. He may regard his chronology as inaccurate in the dating of this eclipse. I. e., it must have occurred in some other month or year. But then his chronology is so interlocked, all his dates are so connected with each other, that if this eclipse is put backward or forward, all his other dates, even the end itself, must move accordingly. This result can not be avoided until he finds some corresponding error that meets and compensates the error here. And until then, unless we undertake the task ourselves, we must suspend our judgment on his entire system.

Several other points in his book seem to me too easily proven, which I may examine hereafter. Meanwhile the book has been submitted to an astronomical friend, who has not had time to recompute any of his eclipses, but says: "It is never pleasant to condemn an honest work, no matter if erroneous, and I cannot say that this is erroneous. I doubt." He refers me to a work entitled, "Astronomical investigations on the more important eclipses that have been mentioned by the writers of classical antiquity," 1853, by J. Zech, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy in Tubingen, whom my friend knows by other works as accomplished and reliable. I have just found this book in the Harvard Library, and will report if I get any light from it. C. F. H.

INVITATION.

By request and in behalf of the brethren and friends at Lower MerryAll, we cordially invite the brethren, who are laboring for the advancement of truth and the salvation of sinners, to call on them. Our labors at that place though feeble indeed were duly appreciated, and much interest awakened and a desire to know more of the truth. At our last meeting four for the first time resolved to serve the Lord. The work has commenced, and we hope and pray that it may continue. Bro. Daniel Beers, who keeps indeed a pilgrim's home, would be pleased to receive a line from any of the brethren, and would meet them with his own private conveyance at New Preston, Roxbury, or any of the towns in the vicinity. Address Bro. Beers at New Milford, Ct. L. F. BENTON.

For the World's Crisis.

NEW HAMPSHIRE CONFERENCE.

Let there be a grand rally of the disciples of Jesus to the Quarterly Conference at Portsmouth the 1st of December. I hope to see as many of the brethren in the ministry as can consistently attend, ready with all others to put shoulder to the wheel and help the work of God move forward. It is time to prepare for a winter campaign in the name of the Lord, and, if possible, push the battle into new places. L. BOUTELL.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. M. Weaver.

BRN. AND SRS.:—Peace be with you. This morning my trust is in the Lord, the righteous Judge. Thanks to God for his care and tender love. How blessed it is to have Jesus for our Friend. He is ever with us, ever true.

In a few days we expect to see this Jesus of whom we so often speak. Are we all ready to meet him? I fear very many are deceiving themselves. Considerable has been written to preachers' wives, and as I have become acquainted with no small number of them, let me deliver my message.

Some stare wonderfully if a "minister's wife" is dressed half as well as other christians, and love to write about dress for the special benefit of this class; and I think many of them have departed from the gospel rule of adorning their bodies; but dress according to Paul outwardly without the inward adorning, and still there is a lack.

A preacher's wife may dress plain and then be a "busybody," tattling about her neighbors, be covetous, etc.; and one that minds her own business will have a wider, healthier influence. Sometimes we overlook small things; again we look at small things and "neglect weightier matters." May God help us to be honest and upright.

Let us be somewhere near our profession, at least. I am sick of hypocrisy. God give us saints or sinners, one or the other. Let saints reign. M. MATHEWS WEAVER.

From Bro. S. Bowers.

BRO. GRANT:—I cannot do without the Crisis. It is a great comfort to me. It is the best paper I ever read. It cheers my heart to hear from time to time that you still stand a bold soldier for Christ in the cause of truth. I well remember the time, about twelve years ago, when I lived in Winsted, of hearing you preach, and you said at one time, you was willing to stake your reputation and your all on the truths you preached. I did not believe the doctrines then; but since I have had light and learned to love these same truths, I have felt you and any one could not lose your reputation in a better cause. But can you not say as you meet the opposition of the world, There is a sweet peace within, which the world cannot give or take away, and that is a peace which floweth like a river? I find this world to be a vale of affliction and tears. My oldest and only son is in the army before Petersburg, a boy only fifteen; and my husband, after enduring the horrors of the awful imprisonment at Andersonville, Ga., died Aug. 9th of his sufferings. S. BOWERS.

Collinsville, Ct.

BRO. J. C. RICE, Hillsburgh, N. S., writes: "Well, dear brother, I have been trying to get ready for translation, and we have had a shaking among the dry bones, and a moving together to duty, which pleases our heavenly Father; and now, while writing the fire burns. Glory to God! O praise his name for ever for his loving kindness to the children of men. My Master wants a pure bride, whose attire will be white and spotless.

We must be 'made white and tried,' and as the world is now undergoing the sealing process, it is wise that we 'take heed' and not be caught in the 'snare.' O brethren, the 'unclean spirits' are on their mission, which they are performing rapidly and successfully. Do not be caught in the meshes of Satan's net, and become thus subjected to the mark of the beast.

Take the Crisis from me, and I should feel as though I was shorn of much strength and comfort. May God bless you in directing it, and the Holy Ghost assist you in assorting for its columns."

BRO. J. W. TAYLOR, Chatham Valley, Pa., writes:—"I have visited the people at Cowanesque Valley, and found them in a thriving condition. Five more have obeyed the gospel by being buried with Christ in baptism, and the work is still going on."

BRO. GEO. SMITH writes from Montreal, C. E.:—"I thank the good Lord, the way grows brighter and better the longer we travel in it,—not like the ways of the world, the longer the worse. I thank the Lord for the light of the coming kingdom. I am glad to know that it is near, and rejoiced to see the signs thicken around. They strengthen me on my way through this vale of tears, sorrows, disappointments and sin. I would cry, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, and put an end to sin and sinners. I am glad the wicked are not to be tormented for ever.

The church in Montreal is doing well. Bro. Taylor is with us once in two weeks."

A Sister writes from Connecticut:—

"I was a backslidden Methodist; but, since our good Bro. Flagg has been laboring in our place, I have come out and given my heart anew to God; and by his aid I am determined to live a christian life, that I may have an entrance in the kingdom of God. Pray for me, that I may be kept pure and unspotted from the world."

The Lord keep you until he comes.

Obituaries.

MATILDA PATTERSON.

Died of typhoid fever, at West Carlton, N. Y., Oct. 8th, 1864, Matilda, wife of Ambrose S. Patterson, aged thirty-four years.

She has left a husband and four children, who deeply feel her loss. She retained her consciousness during her whole sickness, which was sixteen days, until a few hours before her death. She conversed with her husband in regard to educating their children in case they were left to his care alone, and requested that some one who held the true gospel faith should preach her funeral sermon. We accordingly obtained the services of Bro. C. F. Sweet, of Albion, who gave us a very able and comforting discourse from 1 Thess. 4: 13—18.

Sister Matilda Patterson gave her heart to the Lord in her youth, and was in fellowship with the Christian Society, but during Bro. H. L. Hastings' labors in western New York, she was awakened from the cold formality into which she had fallen. She was buried with Christ in baptism. From that time until her death she was ever found at her post, choosing the reproach of the world rather than to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a season. She rejoiced at the near approach of the kingdom, and felt the assurance of an entrance there.

MARILLA S. GRINNELL.

D. MANDEVILLE.

Died in Brockport, Sept. 28th, 1864, David Mandeville, in the sixty-first of his age.

He was one of the first in these parts to embrace the Second Advent doctrine in 1843. He always appeared to be very happy as he sat under the sound of the cry of "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." In his last moments, he was elated with the belief that he should sleep but a little while. As a number of the brethren were present at his death, a few moments before he died, he said to his companion: "Margaret, see, the pilgrims. How good they look."

The writer preached the funeral discourse, in the Freewill Baptist church, from 1 Thess. 4: 13.

P. A. SMITH.

ACHSA ANNA LLOYD.

Died at East Litchfield, Ct., Oct. 15th, Achsa Anna, youngest child of Elijah and Emerett Lloyd, aged two years, eight months, and fifteen days.

This affliction fell heavy on Bro. and Sr. Lloyd; but, thank the Lord, they had learned ere this the source from whence they derived consolation, and thus were enabled to lean on the promises of God. The writer was present at the funeral to preach the word, showing that it was "well with the child." C. GOODRICH.

MARIA M. GILMAN.

Died at Buckland, Ct., Aug. 15, 1864, Maria M., wife of Martin L. Gilman, aged forty-eight years.

Sr. Gilman had devoted the last few years of her life to the service of God; and when cruel death made its demand, she submitted in hope of soon being redeemed from his power, to forever enjoy life in the kingdom of God. The writer attended her funeral, and endeavored to comfort the mourning friends with the hope of the resurrection. C. GOODRICH.

DOMESTIC.

THE FENIAN CONSPIRACY IN TORONTO.—The police have made important discoveries, as we gather from the Toronto Globe, and the matter has caused unusual excitement. In the house of one of the Fenian leaders, named McGuire, the police found nothing of a suspicious character till after they had proceeded up stairs, when, as they were entering a room, they met a woman coming out with a box in her arms. She acted as if she wished to avoid them, and as she was trying to get away, McDowell caught her and demanded the box, which, after some bantering, she gave up. It was opened on the spot, and found to contain some twenty or thirty heavy pikes. They are well made, deadly-looking instruments, about eight inches long, and shaped like a spear-head of the olden time. At the butt-end there is a screw which fastens the head to the handle, and the instrument is then ready for its deadly work. A further search through the place brought to light a number of handles for these heads. They are large, heavy sticks, composed of the best of wood, and measure about eight feet in length. In the house were found a lot of the fittings up of a Hibernian Lodge room. The pikes—heads and handles—were taken possession of by the police. McGuire was then arrested, and taken to the station. The police are on the track of some other persons, against whom it is said there is very strong evidence.

Toronto, C. W., Nov. 15. At a meeting of the City Council last night, it transpired that information had been received of an intended demonstration on Canada, by the members of the Fenian Brotherhood from the United States. The mayor stated that this information has been handed to the Government.

Montreal, Nov. 16. The rebel raiders are making voluntary statements to the Court, boasting of their exploits and bragging that their Government will avenge them. Efforts are being made to procure the delay of thirty days in this case, in order to get instructions from Richmond.

St. Albans, Vt., Nov. 18, 1864. The trial of the St. Albans raiders has been postponed to the 13th of December. They made voluntary statement, before the Court at Montreal, as to who they were and what their object was; that some of them had been and still were in the Confederate service; that they did not intend to kill Morrison, but an armed man who skulked behind him, but still justified themselves of the act. They ask for a delay of twenty days, to enable them to obtain exculpatory evidence from Richmond. They claim they have genuine commissions from the Southern Confederacy, which they propose to prove by those who saw them before the raid; that they had touched the Yankee nerve, which was his pocket; that men are bought up in the so-called United States at $1000 per head; that they had taken from the banks $200,000, which was equivalent to 200 men, and had called 1000 men from the bloody front, and thought they had succeeded very well; and that the expedition against this place was not projected in Canada, and its object was to retaliate for acts committed by Grant, Sheridan and others, not in accordance with civilized warfare.—Cor. Journal.

Chambersburg, Pa., Nov. 15. Some of the rebel guerillas have crossed the Potomac, evidently for the purpose of plundering the border.

New York, Nov. 16. By order of the President the resignation of Gen. McClellan, tendered on the 8th inst., is accepted, and Gen. Sheridan is promoted to the vacancy, to date from the battle of Cedar Run.

St. Louis, Nov. 18. A dispatch from Cairo says great excitement again prevails at Memphis in consequence of reports that Beauregard is marching again with a large force from Corinth. Every preparation is being made for the defense of the city.

New York, Nov. 19. The Herald's Hilton Head correspondence of the 15th says a report has just come down the river that Sherman was marching on Savannah, and that the inhabitants of that city were fleeing in dismay.

Gen. Corse, the Union commander at Rome, Ga., on the 10th destroyed such buildings there as would be of use to the rebels and abandoned the place for the purpose of withdrawing to some important point.

The latest rebel accounts from Hood say he is in a position to march into Middle or West Tennessee. They admit that the report of the capture of Decatur by them to be a hoax, stating that the attack on that place was a ruse to get Hood's army trains well past it.

Washington, Nov. 16, 1864. Secretary Stanton has kept his house for several days, but is not regarded as dangerously ill.

Lord Lyons' health continues to improve, although he is now suffering from neuralgia in the head.

SNOW STORM IN WESTERN MASS.—The snow fell in Rowe and Heath to the depth of eight or ten inches on Sunday, 13th, and it was good sleighing on Monday. In some places in Heath the roads were so badly blocked by drifts that the farmers had to break them out with their ox teams.

There was good sleighing in Granville on Monday, also in the adjoining towns across the Connecticut line. In Litchfield county, Connecticut, the snow storm of Sunday was very severe and the stage from Norfolk to Winstead, early Monday morning, not only went on runners, but tipped over three times in nine miles in consequence of the snow drifts.

☞ The filling up of what is known as the Back Bay, at the West end of Boston, has been going on for upwards of five years, and yet it is but half done. The funds received for these lands, over the cost of filling, and disposed of, are in parts as follows: $225,000 to the Public School Funds; $100,000 to the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy, at Cambridge; $50,000 to Tufts College; $25,000 to Williams College; $25,000 to Amherst College; $25,000 to Wilbraham Academy, and $300,000 for redemption of State scrip; in all, $750,000. If any more is realized the Public School Fund has the reversionary grant.

A MOUNTAIN OF IRON.—An immense iron mountain in the Lake Superior region, and about forty-five miles from the Sault Ste. Marie, has been examined and surveyed, and is found to be six hundred feet above the level of the plain and nine hundred feet above the level of the lake. It will furnish an almost inexhaustible supply of rich iron ore. The mine was discovered by an Indian, who, in trapping, came to a tree which had been blown down, the upturned roots of which displayed the hidden wealth.

ITEMS.

☞ Prince Napoleon is actively employed in superintending the labors of a staff of editors engaged upon a complete collection of the letters and dispatches of the first Emperor. Agents are said to have been sent to England, Italy, Germany, Spain, Russia, and even to America, for the purpose of collecting those writings which have passed into the cabinets of autograph collectors.

☞ That remarkable old negro woman, Sojourner Truth, called on President Lincoln recently, and told him he was the only President who had done anything for her people. Mr. Lincoln rejoined, "and the only one who ever had such opportunity. Had our friends in the South behaved themselves I could have done nothing whatever."

☞ The Electors of President and Vice President meet on the first Wednesday of December, at the capitals of their respective States, to cast their votes, which are sent to the President of the Senate, and counted before both houses of Congress on the second Wednesday of February.

☞ Victor Emmanuel has been so unpopular, on account of the late treaty, that he cannot go out without a military guard, although he used to ride about Turin unattended.

☞ The loss of property by the tornado at Chester, Ill., is estimated at about $60,000. The town of Randolph, seven miles distant, also suffered severely, nearly all the houses in the place having been blown down.

☞ One hundred and ninety-seven thousand seven hundred and seventy-six soldiers of Ohio have been disabled in the United States service during the war.

☞ The Poles in the Russian army are said to be plotting for the overthrow of Russian rule in Poland. Incendiarism is now the curse of that country.

☞ Eighteen millions of new copper cents and six millions of two-cent pieces have been coined within the last two months. And still no one has any pennies to make change with.

☞ The snow is now two feet deep on a level on the White mountains. Some of the drifts are twenty feet deep.

Conference.

The Maine Western Central Quarterly Conference will be holden at the Union Chapel in Cornville, commencing Thursday, Nov. 15th, at half-past six o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. Brethren from a distance will please inquire for Brn. Chas. Stratton, J. Flanders, P. Gardner, —— Hight, —— Warren, J. Fogg, or B. Tuttle. Provision will be made for all. Come, brethren and sisters, let us see to it that we have on the gospel armor, and meet together prepared to labor with a zeal worthy of the cause in which we are engaged. D. W. GRIFFIN.

[Advent Herald, please copy.]

A Quarterly Conference at Portsmouth, N. H.

A quarterly session of the Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire, will be held in Portsmouth, commencing Dec. 1st, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope those who come to this meeting, will come filled with the spirit of the Master, prepared to labor for the upbuilding of the saints, and the salvation of those who are out of Christ, that great good may be done. A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Religious Notice.

Providence permitting, Elder Edwin Burnham will commence a series of meetings with the Free Evangelical Church in North Attleboro, Mass., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 20th, to continue several weeks. We earnestly hope and pray that many precious souls may, as the result of these meetings, be made ready for a home in the kingdom of God. We invite our friends in the surrounding region to attend and labor with us. C. CUNNINGHAM.

Meetings at Rocky Brook, R. I.

If the Lord will, Albion Ross will commence a series of meetings at Rocky Brook, (Peacedale) R. I., on Saturday evening, Dec. 10th, and continue as long as may be duty. May God give the increase. H. L. HASTINGS.

Meetings in West Brookfield, Mass.

If the Lord will, I propose to commence a series of meetings in the Town Hall in West Brookfield, Mass., on Friday evening, Nov. 25th, and continue them over Sunday, or longer, as the Lord may guide. Pray for us. H. L. HASTINGS.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co. now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. As the new hymn book is not to be published at present, we have contracted with Bro. Himes for the "Christian Lyre," so that we can supply those who want them in Maine at wholesale and retail. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. WELLCOME & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $3.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

The Church in Springfield.

The Second Advent Society worshiping at No. 5 Oak Street, Springfield, Mass., have hired a new hall near the corner of Walnut and State streets, where they will hold meetings every Sabbath. They desire the help and co-operation of all of God's servants who love to preach the truth. All such are invited to visit them, and sound the note of warning to a perishing world.

P. S. BUTLER, for the Church.

Notice.

Preaching brethren who wish to send appointments to Northfield, Mass., can correspond with A. Gage, or Edwin Lyman. J. K. BELLOWS.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 477. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No. the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

LOOK HIGHER.

When all looks dark and dreary here,
[illegible]
Look higher!
Look higher, youth; thy glowing dream
[illegible] dark stream;
And should you grasp some earthly prize,
It soon must fade before your eyes.
Look higher!
Should Fame her banner proudly raise,
[illegible]
Fame ne'er can give you joy and peace.
Look higher!
When Wealth spreads out her golden snare,
[illegible]
The sin it causes who can tell?
Look higher!
When health and strength are nearly gone,
And thou art left almost alone;
When sweet flowers fade, and friends depart,
Then let not sorrow break thy heart.
Look higher!
Soon thou shalt rest forevermore
On Canaan's fair and happy shore;
Then let us strive to overcome,
That we at last may find a home
In Eden.

THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR THOUSAND;

OR, THE LAMB'S COMPANY.

Having been again and again entreated to write upon this subject, I now say a few words, hoping that the Lord will direct my pen to his own honor and glory, and to the good of those that read.

Methinks I hear some one say, "I can tell you in short who they are. They are those to be sealed at the end of time out of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel." Proof, Rev. 7. But come, let us reason together, and see if these things are so. If they are sealed at the end of time, they cannot be Israelites; for since the Holy City (Jerusalem) has been trodden under foot the Jewish people have so intermingled with the Gentiles they have become Gentiles, except in name. There are no TWELVE TRIBES at the present day, and as there are none now there WILL NOT BE at the end of time; therefore none to be sealed.

We shall see after a close examination, that the end of time had come in the chapter preceding the seventh, and that the hour of judgment had come and the wicked were bewailing their situation. But when we come to the seventh chapter we find the scene is changed greatly; nothing there indicating time being at an end, and hence we have no authority for saying so. But to make Scripture harmonize let us see if there is not some better way of explanation.

The sealing time was fulfilled after Christ came forth from the grave, in the resurrection spoken of in Matt. 27: 52, 53; and the "winds" which should "hurt the earth," etc., is the terrible time of bloodshed which was to follow immediately after Christ's ascension. From thence the revelator looks at once to the coming of Christ, when the redeemed should sing the songs of gladness.

Now let us pass on to examine the fourteenth of Revelation. Here we find Christ stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand. These we find had God's name written in their foreheads, and the revelator heard their song "FROM HEAVEN," not from earth; hence they must have been in heaven. More than this. "They sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, (creatures) and the elders." This throne, as you will see, is the same throne in heaven in Rev. fourth. Now if they were in heaven they could not have been on earth; and as we find the verb "were" is here used in chap. 14: 3, we have still another proof that they are now in heaven; for if this represented the final gathering of the saints, the verb "were" might here be used as in other places in the Apocalypse.

But as the scene advances we find a voice proclaims, "Blessed ARE the dead which DIE in the Lord FROM HENCEFORTH." Rev. 14: 13. Now if the saints were still dying why does John say they "WERE redeemed FROM the earth"? "These "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These WERE redeemed from among men, being THE first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb. Now when we take only the first fruits of the grain, we do not gather the whole, but the first that gets ripe, and then the rest afterwards. So if Christ takes a sheaf of the first fruits of the harvest to wave before God, it would only be the antitype of the type in Lev. 23: 9—12; and the type must have its antitype.

Now there is no danger in making the assertion that the Holy of Holies of the first Tabernacle and the things connected with it were typical, and hence there must be an antitype. Therefore Christ is the antitypical high priest, and the "hundred forty and four thousand" are the antitypical sheaf of wheat to be waved in the antitypical Holy of Holies. But the opposers of this theory will think that I am trapped, and quote at once 1 Tim. 6: 16, and passages of a like bearing as proofs that no man can or has entered into the holiest of all. Still it must seem like folly even to its advocators to assert that "no man can or has" save Jesus Christ, the high priest. Let us remember that the Holy of Holies not made with hands is of a far different nature from the one of Jewish times, and therefore because no mortal save the high priest could enter into the earthly Holy of Holies it is no sign that an immortal cannot enter into the Heavenly Holies; for mortals are changed to immortals, like Enoch and Elijah, to enter there. Therefore there would be more sense in saying, no man can go to the right hand of the Father save the only begotten Son. Now if Paul had meant "no man in an immortal state hath seen or can see" in his first letter to Timothy 6: 16, why did he not say so? But he did not say so, and hence we infer that he meant man as he was in his mortal state.

There is one more objection common among the opposers of this theory. Had there been an hundred and forty-four thousand come forth from the grave after Christ's resurrection, Josephus would have mentioned it in his history or given some notice of it. Now there are three general histories of the life of George Washington, and in one there are facts and incidents which are not in the other, and yet are they denied as untrue? Nay, for there is strong proof that they are true; and hence because one author is silent on some facts, it is no sign that they are not true. So if Josephus is silent, but the Holy Bible is not, we will believe God and let man go.

Having answered all these objections, let no [illegible]

now only aid, by thus harmonizing Scripture we can get some light in such passages as Eph. 1: 10 [illegible]

In reference to [illegible] been gathered, and [illegible] yet will be gathered. Where will you be? with the wheat or the tares? Oh! may it be with [illegible] tal, so [illegible] H. BALDWIN.

LOVE.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God." —Isa. 40: 1.

Let us begin to make an effort to comfort those we love. In the above words of the Lord to his prophet we discover his loving heart to his people. He wants them comforted, and why? Because he loves them.

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." This is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. It is by love alone that God is going to win a sample of Adam's race from the fall. He loves them back. Was a sinner ever won to Christ by any other means than love? Was a brother offended ever reclaimed by any other means than love? Love is the mainspring of everything in religion. Religion is as worthless without it as a watch is without a mainspring; indeed it is not religion without love any more than a watch is a watch without its mainspring. Herein, then, lies the secret of all our success—love to God and love to man. Read Paul, and you will see what undying love was begotten in his soul by the Holy Ghost, for his fellow-christians, and for his fellow-men at large. And he says, The love of Christ constraineth me.

Read Peter,—note his words of comfort to the saints of God. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you, but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified." "If any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." Thus, as from a well, does this apostle draw, from his own life of suffering, according to the will of God, consolation for his fellow-believers in after ages.

So with John, and with James, and Jude, and all the apostles and prophets—they first experienced the bitterness of the cup of suffering the will of God, and they then drank the consolations ministered by his Spirit; and then they could pour them out as a sweet libation to all who should follow in their footsteps. Ah! beloved saints of God, herein lies the secret of usefulness by the pen or word of mouth. Speak and write only that which has been begotten in your own souls by experience, and you will speak and write to some purpose—it will reach some one's case, it will not be in vain any more than the writings and speakings of apostles and prophets were in vain.

I speak of this here because I have long been impressed with its importance to the health of the "body," and also by way of encouragement to those who are thus speaking and writing. Be of good courage, beloved, "knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Amen. "Let all your doings be done in love." Your sister, in the bonds of love, E. S. WILLARD.

THE REWARD OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

BY A. FRIESE.

II.—THE TIME OF THEIR REWARD.

Having conclusively shown that the righteous are to be rewarded on the earth, we will consider, in the next place, at what TIME they receive their reward. This is also important for us to know. That they enter upon it immediately after death is certainly not the fact. Although this is the popular theory of the world and the church; as embraced in the flowery fable, that to the righteous

"Death is the gate to endless joy,
And dying is but going home;"

yet the Scriptures of truth inform us otherwise.

Inasmuch as the dead are unconscious, because they "know not anything" (Eccl. 9: 5, 6, 10), but sleep together in the dust (Job 3: 13—19; 14: 7, 14; 17: 13—16), they cannot enjoy their reward in that state. Again, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Ps. 115: 17; 88: 10; Isa. 38: 18, 19. How inconsistent are these declarations with the common theory, and the popular preaching of these times, in which the people in general are turned away from the truth and turned unto fables (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4); "not willing to endure sound doctrine," but rather to persecute those who dare to seek after and to abide steadfast in the truth of God—to cast out their names as evil, and to stigmatize them as infidels, fanatics, and other evil characters.

Neither do men "receive according to their deeds" in this life; as is evident from the fact that in many instances the wicked prosper and the ungodly encourage themselves in violence, while the righteous are oppressed and the just afflicted. The argument, therefore, turns inevitably upon a point beyond the present life. Then ALL the righteous, both those who have died in faith in all ages of the world and those who are now alive, will enter upon their final and full reward, at one and the same time. Eph. 4: 13; 1 Cor. 15: 51—55; Heb. 11: 40. Hence, the time must be at the ingathering of all the saints, in the harvest, or end of the (present) world, when the number of God's elect is completed, and the time of probation closed—at the appearing of Jesus!

Let us now examine some of the inspired testimony concerning this subject. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27; 25: 19, 21, 23, 31, 34, 41. "His reward is with him." Isa. 40: 10. "And when the Chief Shepherd (Christ) shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5: 4; Heb. 10: 35—37; 11: 13—16, 39, 40; 2 Esdras 2: 34, 35.

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me AT THAT DAY (of his appearing and kingdom, v. 1): and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8; 2 Thess. 1: 10; [illegible] "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 4. [illegible] "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." 1 John 3: 2, 3; [illegible] "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." [illegible] Psalms of David 17: 15; Phil. 3: 20, 21.

"Looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus 2: 13, 14; 2 Pet. 3: 12, 13. "And, behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 22: 12; 11: 18.

Is not the language in the foregoing passages sufficiently definite and plain? Could the word of God state anything clearer or more pointed? We think not. It is said, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established," while here we have a much more formidable array of testimony, all in beautiful harmony, and not a jarring sentence to gainsay it. God's people, one and all, shall receive the reward of "glory, and immortality," in due time, and at the proper period: viz., when Christ, who is our blessed Redeemer—our glorious King—shall appear, personally on the earth again (Isa. 25: 9; Heb. 9: 28); and (all his enemies and the oppressors of his people being consumed and destroyed out of the earth—in evidence of which numerous passages of Scriptures might be adduced) to establish his peaceful kingdom and dominion. Need we say more? Nay, verily; God's word is explicit; and in vain shall mortal man attempt to add thereto. "O, Lord, plead thine own cause!"

"Lo! He comes, with clouds descending,
Once for favored sinners slain!
Thousand thousand saints attending,
Swell the triumph of his train:
Hallelujah!
Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

LOVABLE CHRISTIANS.

BY REV. THEO L. CUYLER.

Paul paints the portrait of the true christian in the eighth verse of the closing chapter of his letter to the Philippians. Here it is; the portrait is one that he might have written his own name under when it was done.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."

In the former part of the verse, Paul paints the strong features of the christian—his truthfulness, his honesty, and his uncompromising sense of right. These are such deep lines as Michael Angelo painted in his figure of Moses and of the stern heroes of the prophetic era.

But, just as a great artist, having delineated the piercing eye, the majestic brow, and the leonine mouth of his hero, throws in the soft touches that give a womanly sweetness to the visage, so Paul completes his portrait by presenting loveliness and admirableness as the crowning attractions of the christian character. "Whatsoever things are lovely" he says, "and whatsoever things are of good report." This is the only place in the New Testament in which this word "lovely" is to be found. It literally signifies what is dear to any one. It is that quality in the christian character that engages the affections of all who come into its presence. The phrase "things of good report" also occurs in this passage alone. It means that which excites admiration and wins approbation. The two expressions together signify in plain English —"be lovable; let your life win the hearts of all around you."

It was well that the apostle put in this finishing stroke. It was well to remind the most conscientious christian that he should strive to render his religion attractive to others. For not every good man's piety is lovable. Some men's religion has too much acidity to taste well. Others sour their religion with an intense censoriousness. Their conversation is enough to set every one's teeth on edge. After an hour's talk with them, you think the worse of even the best men you know. They are crabbed christians. Everybody respects them, but nobody loves them. We once had a venerable and most godly-minded officer in our church, who never did a wrong act to my knowledge; and yet he never did a pleasant one either. He was a perfect chesnut-burr. There was a deal of good solid "meat" in him, but no one liked to prick his fingers in coming at it. So the rugged old man was left to go on his way to heaven, working, and praying, and scolding as he went; but even the children in the street were almost afraid to speak to him. A drop or two of the Apostle John in his composition would have made him a glorious specimen of a christian. * * * * * *

There is also a sanctimonious set-face which some people wear, that is anything but attractive. We once dealt with such a man in business; and we always counted carefully the change he gave us back after a purchase. We did it instinctively; for we had an uncomfortable suspicion that his manner of look was a mask to hide from the world a designing nature. Perhaps we did him injustice; but the fault was his own in wearing so repulsive a sanctimoniousness.

A lovable christian is one who hits the golden mean between easy, good-natured laxity of conscience on the one hand, and stern, ungenial moroseness on the other. He is sound and yet ripe, sweet, and mellow. He never incurs contempt by yielding to men's sinful prejudices—nor does he incur the antipathy of others by doing right in a hateful, surly, or bigoted way.

Did our blessed Savior ever fall into either of these extremes for a moment? Was not his the sinless, incorruptible majesty that awed his followers, while his benignity inspired their enthusiastic love? If Jesus were now on earth, we can imagine that the poorest people would not be afraid to approach him. Were we to enter a modern mission school, as he once entered a synagogue, how the ragged youngsters would draw to him! If he visited our houses, how welcome he would make himself at our firesides, and how our children would love to climb on his lap and kiss that sweet, pensive, benignant face! There is nothing derogatory to his divine dignity in this. Christ Jesus drew to him poor, suffering women, and outcast publicans, and sinners that had a sore heart-ache, and troops of little children who rejoiced to receive his benediction or to sing hosannas in his praise.

Now what Christ was, every christian should strive to be. He is our model—not only in spotless holiness, but in winsomeness of character also. Let us learn of him. Let us learn from him how to combine the most rigid sense of justice, purity, and integrity with the lovable attractions of a sunny face, a kind word, an unselfish courtesy, and a genuine sympathy for even the most hardened sinners. The worst men may scoff at Bible religion; but at heart honor the consistent christian who wears the beauty of holiness in his character and conduct. A living, lovable christian is the most powerful argument for the gospel. No infidel ever yet refuted that.

Study Christ, then. Love Christ; get your heart saturated with him. Follow Christ. His example and his grace can turn deformity, and sullenness, and sin into the sweet comeliness of "whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are of good report." He that winneth souls is wise. But if you would win sinners to the Savior, you must make your religion winsome.—Independent.

For the World's Crisis.

A WORD TO PARENTS.

I was forcibly reminded of our duty to parents, and the responsibility which rests upon us, in training our children, and the setting before them a proper example, by the following incident, which occured but a few days since, and for the truthfulness of which I can vouch.

A little boy of my acquaintance but four years of age, was allowed to visit at the house of one of his grandparents a few days since. It was quite unusual for him to desire such a liberty, as he always seemed to prefer visiting the other family of grandparents. It had been more than a year since he had been alone to stop at the house where he now was visiting.

Since his previous visit there, his father had determined, by the grace of God, to be a better man; had erected a family altar, and gathered his family around it daily; and each member had been instructed, and habituated to do duty, the father feeling the prayers and opinions of one member of the family not answerable for the conscience of all the rest; which was quite unlike the views of the Congregational grandpa where the little boy was stopping.

The morning after his arrival, at the close of grandpa's prayer, as he was arising from his knees, he caught the little boy in his arms for a frolic, who commenced crying violently, alleging as a reason he had not said his prayers, nor could he be pacified until he had been put down, when he returned to his chair, said his prayers, and was ready then for anything. The feelings of grandpa and family may better be imagined than described.

Readers of the Crisis, you who have felt the power of prayer, you who believe in its efficacy, you who know the truth of the apostle's statement, "The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much," how happens it that your family altar is down? Why are you giving your own children occasion to say, "We have no confidence in father's or mother's pretensions. We do not understand how they enjoy so much apparently this week, and nothing next, why they are so much for praying and singing, by spells, and not at others?" Had we not better look at our own garments, and see if they are clear from the blood of our children? Can we incline the tree in a way the twig was never bent? "It is a good thing to show forth thy loving-kindness every morning and thy faithfulness every night." Ps. 92: 1, 2.

REPORT OF THE MAINE SECOND ADV. MINISTERIAL CONF.

Met for business in Portland, Me., at one o'clock, P. M., Friday, Oct. 7th, 1864. Meeting opened by prayer. The report of the last meeting was called for, read and accepted.

Moved, That we receive as members of this conference, Brn. E. M. Haggett, H. D. Reed, T. Smith, H. B. Seavey, Wm. Ingham and B. Spaulding. Carried.

Moved, That letters of commendation be given by the committee chosen for this purpose, to those brethren belonging to the conference who desire them. Carried. Adjourned till Saturday, 8 o'clock A. M.

Saturday, Oct. 8th. Met at 8 o'clock. Opened by prayer.

Moved, That we have a school connected with the conference, for the investigation of Bible truth. Carried.

Moved, That the names of all the members of the conference be recorded in the report by the Secretary. Carried.

Names—Luther L. Howard, Charles H. Leverton, Israel Dauman, David M. Hanscomb, Nicholas, G. Reed, Fred. A. Baker, John Morrill, John R. Hall, Jeremiah Carr, Rufus R. York, Wm. H. Mitchell, Isaac C. Wellcome, John Wheeler, Edwin M. Haggett, Hannibal D. Reed, Thomas Smith, Hiram B. Seavy, Wm. Ingham, Benj. Spaulding.

Bro. I. C. Wellcome presented the following resolution, which passed by an unanimous vote:

Resolved, That while we as a people believe that the doctrine and Spirit of Christ are directly opposed to carnal warfare with our fellow-men, and therefore as christians feel bound by the most sacred obligations to refrain from such warfare under all circumstances, yet we deem it the duty of every christian to be in passive submission to any legitimate civil power under which they may live; and that in times of disorder, riots, anarchy and rebellion, christians should sympathize with, and by proper conversation and a wisely regulated deportment among men, show favor for, and interest in, civil authority, as we are abundantly taught in the New Testament. And while the Government under which our lot has fallen, is passing through a severe struggle for the maintenance of civil authority, we deeply regret that any professed christian, either among ourselves or in other denominations, should, through ignorance, party policy, or malice, assume an attitude which shows them to be in favor with the rebellion. Although we may entertain various opinions about the correctness of the present administration, and the qualifications of its officers, we have no sympathy with, nor fellowship for rebellion.

Moved, That the Secretary prepare a report of this session of the conference, to be published in the World's Crisis and Advent Herald. Carried.

Moved, That we adjourn, to meet the first Tuesday in January, at the [illegible] meeting-house, Richmond, Me. Carried.

Voted, that a report of this conference be published in the World's Crisis.

Voted, that when we adjourn, we do so to come together again at the call of the clerk. Half-past ten o'clock, social meeting.

Two o'clock, P. M. sermon by Eld. Howard, from Heb. 8: 7. Subject—The two covenants, and our duty as christians to keep the seventh day. Seven o'clock, P. M., Bro. Bailey, of Chesterville, gave a reason for the hope within him, in reply to Bro. Howard, and was listened to with interest. Sunday, 25th, nine o'clock, A. M., social and prayer-meeting. Half-past ten o'clock, sermon by Bro. Rhodes, from Hosea 10: 12. Two o'clock, P. M., sermon by Bro. Hanscomb, from 1 Cor. 15: 50. Subject—Inheritance of the saints.

At the close of afternoon meeting, Bro. Amos Row's daughter was buried in baptism, acknowledging her faith and hope of immortality beyond the resurrection. Seven o'clock, social meeting. A very interesting season. The brethren and sisters occupied the time until quite late, when we adjourned, feeling thankful to God for his blessings in preserving our lives, bringing us to the light of "life and immortality through the gospel."

The brethren at Kendall's Mills will please accept our thanks for their kindness, and successful endeavors to make us feel perfectly at home while stopping with them. May we all continue faithful, until He who is our life shall appear to gather his jewels.

P. S. It is expected our next conference will be held at Cornville, unless others should present requests soon.

D. W. GRIFFIN, Clerk.

For the World's Crisis.

TO "KATIE."

Cheer thee, pilgrim, on life's journey,
E'en though sickness be thy lot;
Look "by faith" to that bright morrow,
In yon land where is no sorrow,
And where sickness cometh not.

Kind the hand that there shall lead thee,
And in living pastures green
Thou shalt roam beside life's river,
In that land where joy flows ever,
E'en the land by faith that's seen.

Trust the grace of Christ thy Savior,
Upon him cast all thy care;
Call on him with faith and fervor,
Knowing he ever heareth prayer;
E'er rejoicing in this cry,
"Redemption surely draweth nigh!"

AM I READY?

How kind, how infinitely merciful is our Father, to give us so many warnings to prepare—for what? for death? Does not our Savior say the man that believes in me shall never taste of death? No, not prepare for death; but prepare to meet GOD—prepare for the coming of the Son of man. Have we not been warned? Yes. And now are we ready? Or to speak without using the plural, and more to the point, AM I READY? Press the question close home; search every corner of your heart as with the candle of the Lord; and if you find that you do not rejoice at the thought of his coming, be sure there is something wrong. When you are ready you will surely rejoice at his coming, far more than you would to see the face of your dearest earthly friend. If you are ready, rejoice; for your redemption is near.

West Sutton, Mass. F. H. C.

THE EYE OF THE NEEDLE.—A recent traveler to the Holy Land informs us that there is at the side of the principal gate of Jerusalem a small one, which, upon occasions of great urgency, was opened for admission of persons after the great gates of the city were closed for the night. This gate, from its small size, was called the Eye of the Needle; and to get a camel through it at all was no small task—for a loaded camel to pass was an utter impossibility. With the above fact before the mind, one can see that the words of our Savior, when speaking of the "strait gate" and the "rich man," were more literal than many suppose. And we see how, as the rich man passes into the narrow way, the sides and the low top of the strait gate sweep every thing from him in which he had before trusted. No one can take any thing but himself through. Far easier is it to strip a camel of its burden, than to divest a rich man of his trust in riches. —Christian Register.

WINTER COVERING.

Don't forget to cover the tender plants ere the winter sets in in earnest. They may be covered with either soil or old litter of any kind. Roses and similar plants, with a hard wood, where it can be done, may be bent down and partially covered with soil; then a light layer of manure over all. Herbaceous plants, as pinks, sweet Williams, strawberries and the like, just simply litter is best; corn stalks are excellent for the purpose.

Grapes of all kinds are far better covered, even if they are reported hardy, as the buds come out so much more plump than if wintered without protection. Soil answers for these, except in large old vines that cannot be bent. With soil too, there is not the harbor for mice, which will sometimes do great damage in the winter by eating off the rinds.

TO ASCERTAIN IF EGGS ARE FRESH.—A new-laid egg has a white, clear complexion; its varnish shines. Hold before the light of a candle, its contents appear clear, transparent and fluid. When this transparency is only partial, the alteration proves they are not fresh. Striking gently on that part of the egg, the sound given will indicate the size of the air-cell, and that will prove its freshness or otherwise. If the egg is turned quickly to one side by a rotary motion, the movement is regular if it is fresh and full, but if more or less empty, it is hard and irregular.

MAKING SOAP WITHOUT GREASE.—One bar of common resin soap, one pound sal soda, one ounce borax. Dissolve the soda and borax in eight pints of rain or soft water, then add the soap, and boil until dissolved, when you will have, upon cooling, ten pounds of [illegible]

WARLIKE STATE OF THE WORLD.

List of the wars which are now being carried on.

A LESSON FOR PARENTS.

L. Gaylord Clark, the former editor of the Knickerbocker, in a letter about children, says:

I desire now to narrate to you a circumstance which happened in the family of a friend and correspondent of mine in the city of Boston, some ten years ago, the history of which will commend itself to the heart of every father and mother who has any sympathy with, or affection for their children. That it is entirely true, you may be well assured. I was convinced of this when I opened the letter from L. H. B. ——, which announced it, and in the detail of the event which was subsequently furnished me.

A few weeks before he wrote, he had buried his eldest son, a fine, manly little fellow, of some eight years of age, who had never, he said, known a day's illness until that which finally removed him hence to be here no more.

His death occurred under circumstances which were peculiarly painful to his parents. A younger brother, a delicate, sickly child from its birth, the next in age to him, had been down for nearly a fortnight with an epidemic fever. In consequence of the nature of the disease, every precaution had been adopted that prudence suggested to guard the other members of the family against it. But of this one, the father's eldest, he said he had little to fear, so rugged was he and so generally healthy. Still, however, he kept a vigilant eye upon him, especially forbade his going into the pools and docks near his school, which it was his custom sometimes to visit; for he was but a boy, and "boys will be boys," and we ought more frequently to think that it is their nature to be. Of all unnatural things, a reproach almost to childish frankness and innocence, save me from a "boy man?" But to the story.

One evening this unhappy father came home, wearied with a long day's hard labor, and vexed at some little disappointments which had soured his naturally kind disposition, and rendered him peculiarly susceptible to the smallest annoyance. While he was sitting by the fire in this unhappy mood of mind his wife entered the apartment and said:

"Henry has just come in, and he is a perfect fright! He is covered from head to foot with dock mud, and he is as wet as a drowned rat!"

"Where is he?" asked the father, sternly.

"He is shivering over the kitchen fire. He was afraid to come up here when the girl told him you had come home."

"Tell Jane to tell him to come here this instant!" was the brief reply to this information.

Presently the poor boy entered, half perished with affright and cold. His father glanced at his sad plight, reproached him bitterly with his disobedience, spoke of the punishment which awaited him in the morning as the penalty for his offence, and in harsh voice concluded with:

"Now, sir, go to your bed!"

"But, father," said the little fellow, "I want to tell you—"

"Not a word, sir; go to bed!"

"I only wanted to say, father."

With a peremptory stamp, an imperative wave of his hand toward the door, and a frown upon his brow, did that father, without other speech, again close the door of explanation and expostulation.

When the boy had gone supperless and sad to his bed the father sat restless and uneasy while supper was being prepared, and at tea table ate but little. His wife saw the real cause, or the additional cause of his emotion, and interposed the remark:—

"I think, my dear, you ought at least to have heard what Henry had to say. My heart ached for him when he turned away with his eyes full of tears. Henry is a good boy, after all, if he does sometimes do wrong. He is a tender-hearted, affectionate boy. He always was."

And therewithal the water stood in the eyes of that forgiving mother, even as it stood in the eyes of Mercy, in "the house of the Interpreter," as recorded by Bunyan.

After tea the evening paper was taken up; but there was no news and nothing of interest for that father in the journal of that evening. He sat for some time in an evidently painful reverie, and then rose and repaired to his bed-chamber. As he passed the bedroom where his little boy slept, he thought he would look in upon him before retiring to rest. He crept to his low cot and bent over him. A big tear had stolen down the boy's cheek, and rested upon it; but he was sleeping calmly and sweetly. The father deeply regretted his harshness as he gazed upon his son; but he felt also the "sense of duty;" yet in the night, talking the matter over with the lad's mother, he resolved and promised, instead of punishing, as he had threatened, to make amends to the boy's aggrieved spirit in the morning, for the manner in which he had repelled all explanation of his offence.

But that morning never came to the poor child in health. He awoke the next morning with a raging fever on his brain, and wild with delirium. In forty-eight hours he was in his shroud. He knew neither his father nor his mother, when they were first called to his bedside, nor at any moment afterward. [illegible] saw a smile of recognition light up his dying eyes, [illegible] he would have given worlds to have whispered one kind word in his ear, and have been answered; but that gleam of intelligence passed quickly away, and was succeeded by the cold, unheeding glare, and the wild tossing of the fevered limbs, which lasted until death came to his relief.

Two days afterward the undertaker came with the little coffin, and his son, a playmate of the deceased boy, bringing the low stools on which it was to stand in the entry hall.

"I was with Henry," said the lad, "when he got into the water. We were playing down at Long Wharf, Henry, and Frank Mumford, and I; and there was a beam run out from the wharf; and Charles got out on it to get a fish line and hook that hung over where the water was deep; and the first thing we saw, he had slipped off, and was struggling in the water! Henry threw off his cap and jumped clear from the wharf into the water, and after a great deal of hard work, got Charles out; and they waded up through the mud to where the wharf was not so slippery; and then I helped them to climb up the side. Charles told Henry not to say anything about it, for if he did his father would never let him go near the water again. Henry was very sorry; and all the way going home, he kept saying:

"What will father say when he sees me to-night? I wish we had not gone to the wharf!"

"Dear, brave boy!" exclaimed the bereaved father; "and this was the explanation I so cruelly refused to hear!" And hot and bitter tears rolled down his cheeks.

Yes! that stern father now learned, and for the first time, that what he had treated with unwonted severity as a fault, was but the impulse of a generous nature, which, forgetful of self, had hazarded life for another. It was but the quick prompting of that manly spirit which he himself had always endeavored to graft upon his susceptible mind, and which, young as he was, had always manifested itself on more than one occasion.

Let me close this story in the very few words of that father, and let the lesson sink deep into the hearts of every parent who shall peruse this sketch:

"Everything that I now see, that ever belonged to him, reminds me of my lost boy. Yesterday, I found some rude pencil sketches, which it was his delight to make for the amusement of his younger brother. To-day, in rumaging an old closet, I came across his boots, still covered with dock-mud, as when he last wore them. (You may think it strange, but that which is so unsightly an object, is now most precious to me.) And every morning and evening I pass the ground where my son's voice rang the merriest among his playmates.

THE TWO APPRENTICES.

Two boys were apprenticed in a carpenter's shop. One determined to make himself a thorough workman; the other "didn't care." One read and studied, and got books that would help him to understand the principles of his trade. He spent his evenings at home reading. The other liked fun best. He often went with other boys to have a "good time."

"Come," he often said to his shopmate, "leave your books; go with us. What's the use of all this reading?"

"If I waste these golden moments," was the boy's answer, "I shall lose what I can never make up."

While the boys were still apprentices, an offer of two thousand dollars appeared in the newspapers for the best plan for a State House, to be built in one of the Eastern States. The studious boy saw the advertisement, and determined to try for it. After careful study, he drew out his plans, and sent them to the committee. We suppose he did not really expect to gain the prize; but still he thought "there is nothing like trying." In about a week afterwards a gentleman arrived at the carpenter's shop, and asked if an architect by the name of Washington Wilberforce lived there.

"No" said the carpenter, "no architect, but I've got an apprentice by that name."

"Let's see him," said the gentleman.

The young man was summoned, and informed that his plan had been accepted and that the two thousand dollars were his! The gentleman then said that the boy must put up the building; and his employer was so proud of his success, that he willingly gave him his time and let him go. This studious young carpenter became one of the first architects of our country. He made a fortune, and stands high in the esteem of everybody; while his fellow-apprentice can hardly earn food for himself and family by his daily labor.

LOOK HIGHER!

[illegible]

When all looks dark and dreary here,
Look higher!
Look higher, youth; thy glowing dream
[illegible] dark stream;
And should you grasp some earthly prize,
It soon must fade before your eyes.
Look higher!
Should Fame her banner proudly raise,
[illegible] to you her charming lays,
[illegible]
Fame ne'er can give you joy and peace.
Look higher!
When Wealth spreads out her golden snare,
Remember there is danger there;
Love not the glittering gold too well,
The sin it causes who can tell?
Look higher!
When health and strength are nearly gone,
And thou art left almost alone;
When sweet flowers fade, and friends depart,
Then let not sorrow break thy heart.
Look higher!
Soon thou shalt rest forevermore
On Canaan's fair and happy shore;
Then let us strive to overcome,
That we at last may find a home
In Eden.

THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR THOUSAND;

OR, THE LAMB'S COMPANY.

Having been again and again entreated to write upon this subject, I now say a few words, hoping that the Lord will direct my pen to his own honor and glory, and to the good of those that read.

Methinks I hear some one say, "I can tell you in short who they are. They are those to be sealed at the end of time out of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel." Proof, Rev. 7. But come, let us reason together, and see if these things are so. If they are sealed at the end of time, they cannot be Israelites; for since the Holy City (Jerusalem) has been trodden under foot the Jewish people have so intermingled with the Gentiles they have become Gentiles, except in name. There are no TWELVE TRIBES at the present day, and as there are none now there WILL NOT BE at the end of time; therefore none to be sealed.

We shall see after a close examination, that the end of time had come in the chapter preceding the seventh, and that the hour of judgment had come and the wicked were bewailing their situation. But when we come to the seventh chapter we find the scene is changed greatly; nothing there indicating time being at an end, and hence we have no authority for saying so. But to make Scripture harmonize let us see if there is not some better way of explanation.

The sealing time was fulfilled after Christ came forth from the grave, in the resurrection spoken of in Matt. 27: 52, 53; and the "winds" which should "hurt the earth," etc., is the terrible time of bloodshed which was to follow immediately after Christ's ascension. From thence the revelator looks at once to the coming of Christ, when the redeemed should sing the songs of gladness.

Now let us pass on to examine the fourteenth of Revelation. Here we find Christ stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand. These we find had God's name written in their foreheads, and the revelator heard their song "FROM HEAVEN," not from earth; hence they must have been in heaven. More than this. "They sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, (creatures) and the elders." This throne, as you will see, is the same throne in heaven in Rev. fourth. Now if they were in heaven they could not have been on earth; and as we find the verb "were" is here used in chap. 14: 3, we have still another proof that they are now in heaven; for if this represented the final gathering of the saints, the verb "were" might here be used as in other places in the Apocalypse.

But as the scene advances we find a voice proclaims, "Blessed ARE the dead which DIE in the Lord FROM HENCEFORTH." Rev. 14: 13. Now if the saints were still dying why does John say they "WERE redeemed FROM the earth"? "These "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These WERE redeemed from among men, being THE first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb. Now when we take only the first fruits of the grain, we do not gather the whole, but the first that gets ripe, and then the rest afterwards. So if Christ takes a sheaf of the first fruits of the harvest to wave before God, it would only be the antitype of the type in Lev. 23: 9—12; and the type must have its antitype.

Now there is no danger in making the assertion that the Holy of Holies of the first Tabernacle and the things connected with it were typical, and hence there must be an antitype. Therefore Christ is the antitypical high priest, and the "hundred forty and four thousand" are the antitypical sheaf of wheat to be waved in the antitypical Holy of Holies. But the opposers of this theory will think that I am trapped, and quote at once 1 Tim. 6: 16, and passages of a like bearing as proofs that no man can or has entered into the holiest of all. Still it must seem like folly even to its advocators to assert that "no man can or has" save Jesus Christ, the high priest. Let us remember that the Holy of Holies not made with hands is of a far different nature from the one of Jewish times, and therefore because no mortal save the high priest could enter into the earthly Holy of Holies it is no sign that an immortal cannot enter into the Heavenly Holies; for mortals are changed to immortals, like Enoch and Elijah, to enter there. Therefore there would be more sense in saying, no man can go to the right hand of the Father save the only begotten Son. Now if Paul had meant "no man in an immortal state hath seen or can see" in his first letter to Timothy 6: 16, why did he not say so? But he did not say so, and hence we infer that he meant man as he was in his mortal state.

There is one more objection common among the opposers of this theory. Had there been an hundred and forty-four thousand come forth from the grave after Christ's resurrection, Josephus would have mentioned it in his history or given some notice of it. Now there are three general histories of the life of George Washington, and in one there are facts [illegible] other, and [illegible] for there [illegible] and hence [illegible] facts, it [illegible] is not, [illegible] now only add, by thus harmonizing Scripture we can get some sense in such passages as Eph. 4: 8; Rom. 8: 29, 30, and the like.

Let us be ready, for the first fruits have been gathered, and very soon the general harvest will be gathered. Where will you be? with the wheat or the tares? Oh! say, mortal, say? H. H. BROWN.

LOVE.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God." —ISA. 40: 1.

Love leads to an effort to comfort those we love. In the above words of the Lord to his prophet we discover his loving heart to his people. He wants them comforted, and why? Because he loves them.

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." "And this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another." It is by love alone that God is going to win a sample of Adam's race from the fall. He loves them back. Was a sinner ever won to Christ by any other means than love? Was a brother offended ever reclaimed by any other means than love? Love is the mainspring of everything in religion. Religion is as worthless without it as a watch is without a mainspring; indeed it is not religion without love any more than a watch is not a watch without its mainspring. Herein, then, lies the secret of all our success—love to God and love to man. Read Paul, and you will see what undying love was begotten in his soul by the Holy Ghost, for his fellow-christians, and for his fellow-men at large. And he says, The love of Christ constraineth me.

Read Peter,—note his words of comfort to the saints of God. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you, but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified." "If any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." Thus, as from a well, does this apostle draw, from his own life of suffering, according to the will of God, consolation for his fellow-believers in after ages.

So with John, and with James, and Jude, and all the apostles and prophets—they first experienced the bitterness of the cup of suffering the will of God, and they then drank the consolations ministered by his Spirit; and then they could pour them out as a sweet libation to all who should follow in their footsteps. Ah! beloved saints of God, herein lies the secret of usefulness by the pen or word of mouth. Speak and write only that which has been begotten in your own souls by experience, and you will speak and write to some purpose—it will reach some one's case, it will not be in vain any more than the writings and speakings of apostles and prophets were in vain.

I speak of this here because I have long been impressed with its importance to the health of the "body," and also by way of encouragement to those who are thus speaking and writing. Be of good courage, beloved, "knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Amen. "Let all your doings be done in love." Your sister, in the bonds of love," E. S. WILLARD.

THE REWARD OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

BY A. FRIESE.

II.—THE TIME OF THEIR REWARD.

Having conclusively shown that the righteous are to be rewarded on the earth, we will consider, in the next place, at what TIME they receive their reward. This is also important for us to know. That they enter upon it immediately after death is certainly not the fact. Although this is the popular theory of the world and the church; as embraced in the flowery fable, that to the righteous

"Death is the gate to endless joy,
And dying is but going home,"

yet the Scriptures of truth inform us otherwise.

Inasmuch as the dead are unconscious, because they "know not anything" (Eccl. 9: 5, 6, 10), but sleep together in the dust (Job 3: 13—19; 14: 7, 14; 17: 13—16), they cannot enjoy their reward in that state. Again, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Ps. 115: 17; 88: 10; Isa. 38: 18, 19. How inconsistent are these declarations with the common theory, and the popular preaching of these times, in which the people in general are turned away from the truth and turned unto fables (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4); "not willing to endure sound doctrine," but rather to persecute those who dare to seek after and to abide steadfast in the truth of God—to cast out their names as evil, and to stigmatize them as infidels, fanatics, and other evil characters.

Neither do men "receive according to their deeds" in this life; as is evident from the fact that in many instances the wicked prosper and the ungodly encourage themselves in violence, while the righteous are oppressed and the just afflicted. The argument, therefore, turns inevitably upon a point beyond the present life. Then ALL the righteous, both those who have died in faith in all ages of the world and those who are now alive, will enter upon their final and full reward, at one and the same time. Eph. 4: 13; 1 Cor. 15: 51—55; Heb. 11: 40. Hence, the time must be at the ingathering of all the saints, in the harvest, or end of the (present) world, when the number of God's elect is completed, and the time of probation closed at the appearing of Jesus!

Let us now examine some of the inspired testimony concerning this subject. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27; 25: 19, 21, 23, 31, 34, 41. "His reward is with him." Isa. 40: 10. "And when the Chief Shepherd (Christ) shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5: 4; Heb. 10: 35—37; 11: 13—16, 39, 40; 2 Esdras 2: 34, 35.

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me AT THAT DAY (of his appearing and kingdom, v. 1); and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8; 2 Thess. 1: 10; Heb. 9: 28. "When Christ, who is our life (or through whom we obtain life eternal) shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 4, 24; 1 Thess. 2: 19.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." 1 John 3: 2, 3; Job 19: 25—27—(margin: "after I shall awake," etc., says Job; and, "my reins within me are consumed with earnest desire for that day)." Psalms of David. 17: 15; Phil. 3: 20, 21.

"Looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus 2, 13, 14; 2 Pet. 3: 12, 13. "And, behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. Rev. 22: 12; 11: 18.

Is not the language in the foregoing passages sufficiently definite and plain? Could the word of God state anything clearer or more pointed? We think not. It is said, "in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established," while here we have a much more formidable array of testimony, all in beautiful harmony, and not a jarring sentence to gainsay it. God's people, one and all, shall receive the reward of "glory, and immortality," in due time, and at the proper period: viz., when Christ, who is our blessed Redeemer—our glorious King—shall appear, personally on the earth again (Isa. 25: 9; Heb. 9: 28); and (all his enemies and the oppressors of his people being consumed and destroyed out of the earth—in evidence of which numerous passages of Scriptures might be adduced) to establish his peaceful kingdom and dominion. Need we say more? Nay, verily; God's word is explicit; and in vain shall mortal man attempt to add thereto. "O, Lord, plead thine own cause!"

"Lo! He comes, with clouds descending,
Once for favored sinners slain!
Thousand thousand saints attending,
Swell the triumph of his train:
Hallelujah!
Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

LOVABLE CHRISTIANS.

BY REV. THEO L. CUYLER.

Paul paints the portrait of the true christian in the eighth verse of the closing chapter of his letter to the Philippians. Here it is; the portrait is one that he might have written his own name under when it was done.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."

In the former part of the verse, Paul paints the strong features of the christian—his truthfulness, his honesty, and his uncompromising sense of right. These are such deep lines as Michael Angelo painted in his figure of Moses and of the stern heroes of the prophetic era.

But, just as a great artist, having delineated the piercing eye, the majestic brow, and the leonine mouth of his hero, throws in the soft touches that give a womanly sweetness to the visage, so Paul completes his portrait by presenting loveliness and admirableness as the crowning attractions of the christian character. "Whatsoever things are lovely" he says, "and whatsoever things are of good report." This is the only place in the New Testament in which this word "lovely" is to be found. It literally signifies what is dear to any one. It is that quality in the christian character that engages the affections of all who come into its presence. The phrase "things of good report" also occurs in this passage alone. It means that which excites admiration and wins approbation. The two expressions together signify in plain English —"be lovable; let your life win the hearts of all around you."

It was well that the apostle put in this finishing stroke. It was well to remind the most conscientious christian that he should strive to render his religion attractive to others. For not every good man's piety is lovable. Some men's religion has too much acidity to taste well. Others sour their religion with an intense censoriousness. Their conversation is enough to set every one's teeth on edge. After an hour's talk with them, you think the worse of even the best men you know. They are crabbed christians. Everybody respects them, but nobody loves them. We once had a venerable and most godly-minded officer in our church, who never did a wrong act to my knowledge; and yet he never did a pleasant one either. He was a perfect chesnut-burr. There was a deal of good solid "meat" in him, but no one liked to prick his fingers in coming at it. So the rugged old man was left to go on his way to heaven, working, and praying, and scolding as he went; but even the children in the street were almost afraid to speak to him. A drop or two of the Apostle John in his composition would have made him a glorious specimen of a christian. * * * * *

There is also a sanctimonious set-face which some people wear, that is anything but attractive. We once dealt with such a man in business; and we always counted carefully the change he gave us back after a purchase. We did it instinctively; for we had an uncomfortable suspicion that his manner of look was a mask to hide from the world a designing nature. Perhaps we did him injustice; but the fault was his own in wearing so repulsive a sanctimoniousness.

A lovable christian is one who hits the golden mean between easy, good-natured laxity of conscience on the one hand, and stern, ungenial moroseness on the other. He is sound and yet ripe, sweet, and mellow. He never incurs contempt by yielding to men's sinful prejudices—nor does he incur the antipathy of others by doing right in a hateful, surly, or bigoted way.

Did our blessed Savior ever fall into either of these extremes for a moment? Was not his, the sinless, incorruptible majesty that awed his followers, while his benignity inspired their enthusiastic love? If Jesus were now on earth, we can imagine that the poorest people would not be afraid to approach him. Were we to enter a modern mission school, as he once entered a synagogue, how the ragged youngsters would draw to him! If he visited our houses, how welcome he would make himself at our firesides, and how our children would love to climb on his lap and kiss that sweet, pensive, benignant face! There is nothing decorous to his divine dignity in this. "Christ Jesus drew to him poor, suffering women, and outcast publicans, and sinners that had a sore heart-ache, and troops of little children who rejoiced to receive his benediction or to sing hosannas in his praise.

Now what Christ was, every christian should strive to be. He is our model—not only in spotless holiness, but in winsomeness of character also. Let us learn of him. Let us learn from him how to combine the most rigid sense of justice, purity, and integrity with the lovable attractions of a sunny face, a kind word, an unselfish courtesy, and a genuine sympathy for even the most hardened sinners. The worst men may scoff at Bible religion; but at heart honor the consistent christian who wears the beauty of holiness in his character and conduct. A living, lovable christian is the most powerful argument for the gospel. No infidel ever yet refuted that.

Study Christ, then. Love Christ; get your heart saturated with him. Follow Christ. His example and his grace can turn deformity, and sullenness, and sin into the sweet comeliness of "whatsoever things are lovely, and whatsoever things are of good report." He that winneth souls is wise. But if you would win sinners to the Savior, you must make your religion winsome.—Independent.

A WORD TO PARENTS.

I was forcibly reminded of our duty to parents, and the responsibility which rests upon us, in training our children, and the setting before them a proper example, by the following incident, which occured but a few days since, and for the truthfulness of which I can vouch.

A little boy of my acquaintance but four years of age, was allowed to visit at the house of one of his grandparents a few days since. It was quite unusual for him to desire such a liberty, as he always seemed to prefer visiting the other family of grandparents. It had been more than a year since he had been alone to stop at the house where he now was visiting.

Since his previous visit there, his father had determined, by the grace of God, to be a better man; had erected a family altar, and gathered his family around it daily; and each member had been instructed, and habituated to do duty, the father feeling the prayers and opinions of one member of the family not answerable for the conscience of all the rest; which was quite unlike the views of the Congregational grandpa where the little boy was stopping.

The morning after his arrival, at the close of grandpa's prayer, as he was arising from his knees, he caught the little boy in his arms for a frolic, who commenced crying violently, alleging as a reason he had not said his prayers, nor could he be pacified until he had been put down, when he returned to his chair, said his prayers, and was ready then for anything. The feelings of grandpa and family may better be imagined than described.

Readers of the Crisis, you who have felt the power of prayer, you who believe in its efficacy, you who know the truth of the apostle's statement, "The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much," how happens it that your family altar is down? Why are you giving your own children occasion to say, "We have no confidence in father's or mother's pretensions. We do not understand how they enjoy so much apparently this week, and nothing next, why they are so much for praying and singing, by spells, and not at others?" Had we not better look at our own garments, and see if they are clear from the blood of our children? Can we incline the tree in a way the twig was never bent? "It is a good thing to show forth thy loving-kindness every morning and thy faithfulness every night." Ps. 92: 1, 2.

REPORT OF THE MAINE SECOND ADV. MINISTERIAL CONF.

Met for business in Portland, Me., at one o'clock, P. M., Friday, Oct. 7th, 1864. Meeting opened by prayer. The report of the last meeting was called for, read and accepted.

Moved, That we receive as members of this conference, Brn. E. M. Haggett, H. D. Reed, T. Smith, H. B. Seavey, Wm. Ingham and B. Spaulding. Carried.

Moved, That letters of commendation be given by the committee chosen for this purpose, to those brethren belonging to the conference who desire them. Carried. Adjourned till Saturday, 8 o'clock A. M.

Saturday, Oct. 8th. Met at 8 o'clock. Opened by prayer.

Moved, That we have a school connected with the conference, for the investigation of Bible truth. Carried.

Moved, That the names of all the members of the conference be recorded in the report by the Secretary. Carried.

Names—Luther L. Howard, Charles H. Leverton, Israel Damman, David M. Hanscomb, Nicholas, G. Reed, Fred. A. Baker, John Morrill, John R. Hall, Jeremiah Carr, Rufus R. York, Wm. H. Mitchell, Isaac C. Wellcome, John Wheeler, Edwin M. Haggett, Hannibal D. Reed, Thomas Smith, Hiram B. Seavy, Wm. Ingham, Benj. Spaulding.

Bro. I. C. Wellcome presented the following resolution, which passed by an unanimous vote:

Resolved, That while we as a people believe that the doctrine and Spirit of Christ are directly opposed to carnal warfare with our fellow-men, and therefore as christians feel bound by the most sacred obligations to refrain from such warfare under all circumstances, yet we deem it the duty of every christian to be in passive submission to any legitimate civil power under which they may live; and that in times of disorder, riots, anarchy and rebellion, christians should sympathize with, and by proper conversation and a wisely regulated deportment among men, show favor for, and interest in, civil authority, as we are abundantly taught in the New Testament. And while the Government under which our lot has fallen, is passing through a severe struggle for the maintenance of civil authority, we deeply regret that any professed christian, either among ourselves or in other denominations, should, through ignorance, party policy, or malice, assume an attitude which shows them to be in favor with the rebellion. Although we may entertain various opinions about the correctness of the present administration, and the qualifications of its officers, we have no sympathy with, nor fellowship for rebellion.

Moved, That the Secretary prepare a report of this session of the conference, to be published in the World's Crisis and Advent Herald. Carried.

Moved, That we adjourn, to meet the first Tuesday in January at the Reed meeting-house, Richmond, Me. Carried.

REPORT

OF THE MAINE WESTERN [illegible] CONFERENCE.

This conference was convened in accordance with previous notice, at Kendall's Mills, on Thursday, Sept. 22d, at seven o'clock P. M. Prayer and social meeting. Meeting good. Friday, 23d, half past nine o'clock, A. M.; social meeting continued during the forenoon. The brethren and sisters had a free time in expressing their hope of soon receiving that rest which remains for the faithful. Two o'clock, P. M., sermon by Eld. Seavey, from John 15: 5. Subject—The adoption by grace. Seven o'clock, P. M., a discourse by Eld. Seavey from Rev. 22: 17. Remarks also by Bro. Howard and others.

Saturday, 24th, nine o'clock, A. M. Meeting for business. Bro. Seavey chosen president pro tem. Watchmen present: H. B. Seavey, L. L. Howard, L. Rhodes, D. M. Hanscomb, J. Dudley, Charles Stratton, and Bro. Carr.

Voted, that a report of this conference be published in the World's Crisis.

Voted, that when we adjourn, we do so to come together again at the call of the clerk. Half-past ten o'clock, social meeting.

Two o'clock, P. M. sermon by Eld. Howard, from Heb. 8: 7. Subject—The two covenants, and our duty as christians to keep the seventh day. Seven o'clock, P. M., Bro. Bailey, of Chesterville, gave a reason for the hope within him, in reply to Bro. Howard, and was listened to with interest. Sunday, 25th, nine o'clock, A. M., social and prayer-meeting. Half-past ten o'clock, sermon by Bro. Rhodes, from Hosea 10: 12. Two o'clock, P. M., sermon by Bro. Hanscomb, from 1 Cor. 15: 50. Subject—Inheritance of the saints.

At the close of afternoon meeting, Bro. Amos Row's daughter was buried in baptism, acknowledging her faith and hope of immortality beyond the resurrection. Seven o'clock, social meeting. A very interesting season. The brethren and sisters occupied the time until quite late, when we adjourned, feeling thankful to God for his blessings in preserving our lives, bringing us to the light of "life and immortality through the gospel."

The brethren at Kendall's Mills will please accept our thanks for their kindness, and successful endeavors to make us feel perfectly at home while stopping with them. May we all continue faithful, until He who is our life shall appear to gather his jewels.

P. S. It is expected our next conference will be held at Cornville, unless others should present requests soon.

D. W. GRIFFIN, Clerk.

TO "KATIE."

Cheer thee, pilgrim, on life's journey,
E'en though sickness be thy lot;
Look "by faith" to that bright morrow,
In yon land where is no sorrow,
And where sickness cometh not.

Kind the hand that there shall lead thee,
And in living pastures green
Thou shalt roam beside life's river,
In that land where joy flows ever,
E'en the land by faith that's seen.

Trust the grace of Christ thy Savior,
Upon him cast all thy care;
Call on him with faith and fervor,
Knowing he ever heareth prayer;
E'er rejoicing in this cry,
"Redemption surely draweth nigh!"

AM I READY?

How kind, how infinitely merciful is our Father, to give us so many warnings to prepare—for what? for death? Does not our Savior say the man that believes in me shall never taste of death? No, not prepare for death; but prepare to meet GOD—prepare for the coming of the Son of man. Have we not been warned? Yes. And now are we ready? Or to speak without using the plural, and more to the point, AM I READY? Press the question close home; search every corner of your heart as with the candle of the Lord; and if you find that you do not rejoice at the thought of his coming, be sure there is something wrong. When you are ready you will surely rejoice at his coming, far more than you would to see the face of your dearest earthly friend. If you are ready, rejoice; for your redemption is near.

West Sutton, Mass. F. H. C.

THE EYE OF THE NEEDLE.—A recent traveler to the Holy Land informs us that there is at the side of the principal gate of Jerusalem a small one, which, upon occasions of great urgency, was opened for admission of persons after the great gates of the city were closed for the night. This gate, from its small size, was called the Eye of the Needle; and to get a camel through it at all was no small task—for a loaded camel to pass was an utter impossibility. With the above fact before the mind, one can see that the words of our Savior, when speaking of the "strait gate" and the "rich man," were more literal than many suppose. And we see how, as the rich man passes into the narrow way, the sides and the low top of the strait gate sweep every thing from him in which he had before trusted. No one can take any thing but himself through. Far easier is it to strip a camel of its burden, than to divest a rich man of his trust in riches. —Christian Register.

WINTER COVERING.

Don't forget to cover the tender plants ere the winter sets in in earnest. They may be covered with either soil or old litter of any kind. Roses and similar plants, with a hard wood, where it can be done, may be bent down and partially covered with soil; then a light layer of manure over all. Herbaceous plants, as pinks, sweet Williams, strawberries and the like, just simply litter is best; corn stalks are excellent for the purpose.

Grapes of all kinds are far better covered, even if they are reported hardy, as the buds come out so much more plump than if wintered without protection. Soil answers for those, except in large old vines that cannot be bent. With soil too, there is not the harbor for mice, which will sometimes do great damage in the winter by eating off the rind.

TO ASCERTAIN IF EGGS ARE FRESH.—A new-laid egg has a white, clear complexion; its varnish shines. Held before the light of a candle, its contents appear clear, transparent and fluid. When this transparency is only partial, the alteration proves they are not fresh. Striking gently on that part of the egg, the sound given will indicate the size of the air-cell, and that will prove its freshness or otherwise. If the egg is turned quickly to one side, by a rotary motion, the movement is regular if it is fresh and full; but if more or less empty, it is hard and irregular.

MAKING SOAP WITHOUT GREASE.—One bar of common resin soap, one pound sal soda, one ounce borax. Dissolve the soda and borax in eight pints of rain water, stirring them add the soap, and boil until dissolved, when you will have, upon cooling, ten pounds of good soap, worth from eight to ten cents a pound, and costing only one cent per pound.

A LESSON FOR PARENTS.

L. Gaylord Clark, the former editor of the Knickerbocker, in a letter about children, says:

I desire now to narrate to you a circumstance which happened in the family of a friend and correspondent of mine in the city of Boston, some ten years ago, the history of which will commend itself to the heart of every father and mother who has any sympathy with, or affection for their children. That it is entirely true, you may be well assured. I was convinced of this when I opened the letter from L. H. B. ——, which announced it, and in the detail of the event which was subsequently furnished me.

A few weeks before he wrote, he had buried his eldest son, a fine, manly little fellow, of some eight years of age, who had never, he said, known a day's illness until that which finally removed him hence to be here no more.

His death occurred under circumstances which were peculiarly painful to his parents. A younger brother, a delicate, sickly child from its birth, the next in age to him, had been down for nearly a fortnight with an epidemic fever. In consequence of the nature of the disease, every precaution had been adopted that prudence suggested to guard the other members of the family against it. But of this one, the father's eldest, he said he had little to fear, so rugged was he and so generally healthy. Still, however, he kept a vigilant eye upon him, especially forbade his going into the pools and docks near his school, which it was his custom sometimes to visit; for he was but a boy, and "boys will be boys," and we ought more frequently to think that it is their nature to be. Of all unnatural things, a reproach almost to childish frankness and innocence, save me from a "boy man!" But to the story.

One evening this unhappy father came home, wearied with a long day's hard labor, and vexed at some little disappointments which had soured his naturally kind disposition, and rendered him peculiarly susceptible to the smallest annoyance. While he was sitting by the fire in this unhappy mood of mind his wife entered the apartment and said:

"Henry has just come in, and he is a perfect fright! He is covered from head to foot with dock mud, and he is as wet as a drowned rat!"

"Where is he?" asked the father, sternly.

"He is shivering over the kitchen fire. He was afraid to come up here when the girl told him you had come home."

"Tell Jane to tell him to come here this instant!" was the brief reply to this information.

Presently the poor boy entered, half perished with affright and cold. His father glanced at his sad plight, reproached him bitterly with his disobedience, spoke of the punishment which awaited him in the morning as the penalty for his offence, and in harsh voice concluded with:

"Now, sir, go to your bed!"

"But, father," said the little fellow, "I want to tell you—"

"Not a word, sir; go to bed!"

"I only wanted to say, father."

With a peremptory stamp, an imperative wave of his hand toward the door, and a frown upon his brow, did that father, without other speech, again close the door of explanation and expostulation.

When the boy had gone supperless and sad to his bed the father sat restless and uneasy while supper was being prepared, and at tea table ate but little. His wife saw the real cause, or the additional cause of his emotion, and interposed the remark:—

"I think, my dear, you ought at least to have heard what Henry had to say. My heart ached for him when he turned away with his eyes full of tears. Henry is a good boy, after all, if he does sometimes do wrong. He is a tender-hearted, affectionate boy. He always was."

And therewithal the water stood in the eyes of that forgiving mother, even as it stood in the eyes of Mercy, in "the house of the Interpreter," as recorded by Bunyan.

After tea the evening paper was taken up; but there was no news and nothing of interest for that father in the journal of that evening. He sat for some time in an evidently painful [illegible], and then rose and repaired to his bed-chamber. As he passed the bedroom where his little boy slept, he thought he would look in upon him before retiring to rest. He crept to his low cot and bent over him. A big tear had stolen down the boy's cheek, and rested upon it; but he was sleeping calmly and sweetly. The father deeply regretted his harshness, as he gazed upon his son; but he felt also the "sense of duty"; yet in the night, talking the matter over with the lad's mother, he resolved and promised, instead of punishing, as he had threatened, to make amends to the boy's aggrieved spirit in the morning for the manner in which he had repelled all explanation of his offence.

But that morning never came to the poor child in health. He awoke the next morning with a raging fever on his brain, and wild with delirium. In forty-eight hours he was [illegible] saw a smile of recognition light up his dying countenance, and heard his voice whispered one kind word to me [illegible] been answered, but alas! [illegible] quickly by, [illegible] by the other, [illegible]

Two days afterward, the undertaker came with the little coffin, and his son, a playmate of the deceased boy, bringing the low stools on which it was to stand in the entry hall.

"I was with Henry," said the lad, "when he got into the water. We were playing down at Long Wharf, Henry, and Frank Mumford, and I; and the tide was out very low; and there was a beam run out from the wharf, and Charles got out on it to get a fish line and hook that hung over where the water was deep; and the first thing we saw, he had slipped off, and was struggling in the water! Henry threw off his cap and jumped clear from the wharf into the water, and after a great deal of hard work, got Charles out; and they waded up through the mud to where the wharf was not so slippery; and then I helped them to climb up the side. Charles told Henry not to say anything about it, for if he did his father would never let him go near the water again. Henry was very sorry; and all the way going home, he kept saying: 'What will father say when he sees me to-night? I wish we had not gone to the wharf!'"

"Dear, brave boy!" exclaimed the bereaved father; "and this was the explanation I so cruelly refused to hear!" And hot and bitter tears rolled down his cheeks.

Yes! that stern father now learned, and for the first time, that what he had treated with unwonted severity as a fault, was but the impulse of a generous nature, which, forgetful of self, had hazarded life for another. It was but the quick prompting of that manly spirit which he himself had always endeavored to graft upon his susceptible mind, and which, young as he was, had always manifested itself on more than one occasion.

Let me close this story in the very few words of that father, and let the lesson sink deep into the hearts of every parent who shall peruse this sketch:

"Everything that I now see, that ever belonged to him, reminds me of my lost boy. Yesterday, I found some rude pencil sketches, which it was his delight to make for the amusement of his younger brother. To-day, in rumaging an old closet, I came across his boots, still covered with dock-mud, as when he last wore them. (You may think it strange, but that which is so unsightly an object, is now most precious to me.) And every morning and evening I pass the ground where my son's voice rang the merriest among his playmates.

THE TWO APPRENTICES.

Two boys were apprenticed in a carpenter's shop. One determined to make himself a thorough workman; the other "didn't care." One read and studied, and got books that would help him to understand the principles of his trade. He spent his evenings at home reading. The other liked fun best. He often went with other boys to have a "good time."

"Come," he often said to his shopmate, "leave your books; go with us. What's the use of all this reading?"

"If I waste these golden moments," was the boy's answer, "I shall lose what I can never make up."

While the boys were still apprentices, an offer of two thousand dollars appeared in the newspapers for the best plan for a State House, to be built in one of the Eastern States. The studious boy saw the advertisement, and determined to try for it. After careful study, he drew out his plans, and sent them to the committee. We suppose he did not really expect to gain the prize; but still he thought "there is nothing like trying." In about a week afterwards a gentleman arrived at the carpenter's shop, and asked if an architect by the name of Washington Wilberforce lived there.

"No," said the carpenter, "no architect, but I've got an apprentice by that name."

"Let's see him," said the gentleman.

The young man was summoned, and informed that his plan had been accepted and that the two thousand dollars were his! The gentleman then said that the boy must put up the building; and his employer was so proud of his success, that he willingly gave him his time and let him go. This studious young carpenter became one of the first architects of our country. He made a fortune, and stands high in the esteem of everybody; while his fellow-apprentice can hardly earn food for himself and family by his daily labor.

"LOOKING UNTO JESUS."

When night-shrouded earth morn anew robes in light,
And we are permitted the day-king to see,
Then the christian girds on his armor to fight,
And upward he looks to the arm of his might;
Then, Savior, he lifts up his prayer unto thee,
Jesus, to thee.

When sad on my heart press earth's sorrows and cares,
Ah! 'tis then to this rock and refuge I'll flee,
To the fountain which heals will daily repair,
For sweet calm and repose are found only there;
When by faith unwavering I look unto thee,
Jesus, to thee.

Should my Father recall the blessings he lent,
He has showered on my head since life's infancy,
I know that his love is still ever intent,
For my very best good, since the Savior he has sent,
And bids me seek life, looking still unto thee,
Jesus, to thee.

If children and friends should be torn from my arms,
And frequent bereavements seem sad mystery,
And my trembling faith overcome by alarms,
Forgetting divine in earth's perishing charms;
Then I turn at thy look, dear Jesus, to thee,
Jesus, to thee.

The heavenly bread I would feed upon here
Is Jesus, whose grace is bounteous and free;
How sweet are the promises! daily more dear
As the day of redemption is hastening near;
When no veil intervenes I'll look unto thee,
Jesus, to thee.

When death approaches, and its visage is shown,
If, then, I can say Christ died for me,
With confident trust in the unchanging throne,
Believing when sin and the curse are unknown,
With loud hallelujahs I shall look unto thee,
Jesus, to thee.

POINTS AND QUERIES:
Or, a Peep at the Other Side.

Thurman's book! I am reading it. In spite of reiterated statements from others that "all is clear," I must confess that I meet with difficulties. As to his astronomical calculations, I have nothing to say, as my want of astronomical learning forbids my entering that field as a critic; and perhaps it is only from my dullness of apprehension that I cannot see all things "straight and conclusive" in his prophetic expositions and application of the "periods." Not wishing to be in ignorance concerning the "sure word of prophecy," I feel it duty to suggest my difficulties to those who have eaten "the book" and pronounced it good for food."

My first difficulty arises from

"MOSES' SEVEN TIMES."

These "seven times" are brought to view in Lev. xxvi. Are they prophetic? Bro. Thurman quotes Lev. xxvi. 28, and considers the "seven times" as 2555 prophetic days, or literal years. Upon reading the chapter referred to, I find at least four distinct and separate chastisements, of "seven times" each, threatened upon that rebellious people. At verse 18 we read, "And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, I will punish you seven times more for your sins"; and, after describing this chastisement, he adds, ver. 21, "And if ye will walk contrary unto me, ... I will bring seven times more plagues upon you." Having described this second chastisement, he continues still to threaten a third, saying, verses 23 and 24, "And if ye will not be reformed by me by these things, (i. e. these previous chastisements,) . . . . then will I walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins." Dwelling for a moment upon the severity of this third punishment, and anticipating their persistency in sin, he still adds, verses 27 and 28, "And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, ... then I will walk contrary unto you in my fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins." Now by what rule of prophetical exegesis are the "seven times" of verse 28 made a period of 2555 years, while the "seven times" of verse 18, of verse 21, of verse 24, which are precisely the same in form and style, are passed over in silence? If the "seven times" of verse 28 be a prophetic period, then must not the others be?

As Bro. Thurman thinks that the Jews in 1875 will have suffered the "seven times" of verse 28, or the last chastisement of 2555 years, when did they suffer the first three chastisements of the same length of time each, making in all a period of 7665 years? Since the Jewish nation has merited all the judgments God ever threatened upon them, and he threatened four periods of punishment of 2555 years each (if he threatened any such period at all), when will these 2555 years x 4 or 10220 years of chastisement end? If, allowing the "seven times" of verse 28 to be a prophetic period of 2555 years, drives us to recognize three other distinct and similar "periods" to be visited upon that rebellious nation, had we not better abandon the idea that the "seven times" of Lev. xxvi. is a prophetical period in any wise? Do not the "seven times" refer to the intensity of the chastisement, rather than to the time of their duration?

Whether the "seven times of Lev. xxvi. be a prophetical period or not, might, under other circumstances, be unimportant; but as Bro. Thurman makes the "seven times" the basis of an important exposition of Dan. xii. 7, an doubt here makes sad work with the mind that would depend upon his prophetical calculations. It is claimed that the "time, times, and a half" of Dan. xii. 7 terminate "when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people," which was to require "seven times," or 2555 years from B. C. 681. Bro. Thurman understands, therefore, the "time, times, and a half," to be what remains of the "seven times" after B. C. 488, where Daniel stood, 193 years after the "seven times" had commenced; or, in other words, the "time, times, and a half" mean 2362 years from Daniel's time, B. C. 488. He thus makes the "seven times" a key to unlock the mysteries of Dan. xii. 7. How essential then that it be established beyond a mere theory that the "seven times" is a prophetical period. How this can be done and not admit four such successive periods in the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus, is a point I long to know.

The importance of testing the rule by which to determine the "time, times, and a half," seems to be recognized by Thurman. On page 126 he says, "Having now found the governing rule, we discover by a 'time, times, and a half,' as used in Dan. xii. 7, we are to understand a 'time,' five 'times, and a half,' which, if found to agree with this rule, that is, if a time, five 'times, and a half,' prove to be just 2362 years, then we may know that we are correct; but if found to be a single year more or less, it will thus prove that we have not yet discovered the truth." It appears, then, that he is willing to venture his correctness upon the certainty that a time, five "times, and a half," are just 2362 years, no more, no less. But by what rule can a time, five "times, and a half," constitute 2362 years? On pages 64 and 80, he shows that "time" is a Chaldean term for year, and "seven times" a Chaldean term for seven Chaldean years of 365 days each. By what rule of consistency do "times" addressed by Moses, who was not a Chaldean, and never dwelt in Chaldea, to a people that never saw Chaldea, that we are told of, mean Chaldean years of 365 days, while "times" addressed to Daniel, who had spent his life from early youth in Chaldea, are denied the same signification?

Again, if times," in Dan. xii. 7, must mean Jewish years, then why not reckon them according to the average Jewish year of 365 days? In a note on page 80, we read, "If it be urged that, the Hebrews having left the idolatrous worship of the Chaldeans, these 'seven times' must be according to their new method of reckoning time, we answer: Then they must be reckoned according to their average year." Why insist that the "seven times" of Moses be reckoned by the Jewish average year, and refuse to measure the "times" of Dan. xii. 7 by the same rule? On page 126, we are told the reason for reckoning Moses' "seven times" as Chaldean years, of 365 days each, is because "Moses was writing for those who had been accustomed to that method of reckoning time." Ought not then Daniel's "times" to be reckoned by years of 365 days each, since he was writing for us, who are accustomed to that method of reckoning time, and know but little about Jewish short and long years?

If it be true as stated, page 126, "a revelation is always addressed to man in his own language," since Moses was a Jew, ought not his "seven times," if prophetic, be reckoned by Jewish years, beginning at the now established (?) epoch of B. C. 681? And since Daniel was a Jew, ought not his "times" to be reckoned according to the same rule? If both be thus reckoned, will the "time, times, and a half," of Dan. xii. 7 from B. C. 488, finish the "seven times" from B. C. 681? If Daniel was so familiar with Chaldaic measurement of time, as readily to discover seven Chaldean years of 365 days each in Moses' "seven times," why would not that same familiarity lead him to discover Chaldaic years in a "time, times, and a half"? Thus we see that consistency, with its instructions on pp. 64, 80, and 126, requires the "Sealed Book" to recognize in a "time," five "times, and a half," six and a half years, either Jewish or Chaldean, of 365 days each. But six and a half such years give us 2372 1-2 days (years), which carry us 10 1-2 years beyond the termination of the "seven times," in 1875, proving conclusively no connection between the two.

The author of the "Sealed Book Opened," rather than to abandon his theory, abandons his rules and principles as given in pp. 64, 80, 126, and makes a nice calculation of Jewish short and long years, so as to get the desired number, 2362 years, to complete the "seven times" of Moses in A. D. 1875. Others have met with this difficulty, and the author of the "Bible Chronology" has admitted in "The Voice" of Oct. 25th, that it would have been more consistent to have understood a time, five "times, and a half," as Chaldean years, and to have adopted the marginal reading—"time, times, and a part." By reading "part," instead of "half," it is possible to get 2362 years, as his rule of 2555 years (seven times) demands. The correctness of his theory depends, then, upon the correctness of reading "part" instead of "half." In the same paper (Voice, Oct. 25th) he says, "The word 'half,' in Dan. 12: 7, . . . is ninety-nine times rendered 'half'; eight times in the midst; once middle; and three times part." It has therefore one chance in thirty-six of being correct, and yet upon this doubtful rendering the correctness of the exposition of Dan. xii. 7 must rest.

Again, why is Dan. xii. 7 read "time," five "times, and a half"? Why not read six or seven "times, and a half"? To my mind the answer is simply this: Our theory does not demand it. The "seven times" of Moses is a prophetic period of 2555 years from B. C. 681. Daniel's "time, times and a half" are the remaining years of this period from Daniel's time, B. C. 488. As only 2362 years remain, it only requires a time, five times, and a part, to finish it; therefore this is the reading of Dan. xii. 7. Every thing seems to rest on one point. The "seven times" are a prophetic period of 2555 years. Then comes my first difficulty again. If the "seven times" of Lev. xxvi. 28 is a period of 2555 years, why not the "seven times of Lev. xxvi. 18, 21, and 24? If we have four such periods to dispose of, where shall we find space for them, if Jesus is coming soon?

As yet I can say with Daniel, "I heard, but understood not." It would be glorious to tell the world in confidence that Jesus is coming so soon ~~as A. D. 1868~~; but ere we do it, let us have a theory that will not shake when stepped upon. Have we not had enough of "twisting and turning" to suit our favorite theories? Shall not past experience profit us? When I discover an author willing to violate his own rules and principles, yea, even the principles of sincerity, for the sake of a favorite theory, I dare not trust such an one to lead me where I can not clearly see my own way. Hence I wait till some one qualified for the task shall test the astronomical calculations upon which the new chronology is based, before I venture my faith.

I have other difficulties with the "Sealed Book Opened," but these will suffice for the present. If these "queries" bring me any relief, I may venture to take another "peep at the other side." H. F. C.

OPINIONATED FOLKS; OR, STIFF NECKS.

"Many men of many minds;
Many birds of many kinds;
Many fishes in the sea,
Many men that can't agree."

"Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him."—PROV. 26: 12.

"It is my opinion," says one, "and I have a right to it." No, friend, you have no right to your opinion unless your opinion is a right one, in accordance with Bible truth, "the law and the testimony." No one has a right to a wrong opinion any more than he has to a wrong doctrine or precept.

What right have you to an opinion that clashes with inspiration, the word of God, light and love? If your opinion is to foster pride, covetousness, the follies and fashions of this vain world, it is of Satan, and not of God—from beneath, and not from above. "It is neither fit for the land nor yet for the dunghill, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men."

An opinion that is not on the side of God, his holy law, justice, mercy and truth, is of the devil, and will receive the devil's reward. How frequently do we hear individuals say: "We have a right to our opinions, and you have no right to interfere with them," when at the same time these very persons are living in lust, gratifying a vitiated appetite, sinning as with a cart rope.

Look at those ministers and laymen who unite with ungodly men in secret oath-bound societies,—free-masonry and odd-fellowship, with profane swearers and Sabbath breakers. Ask them why they do this wicked deed, in opposition to every divine precept, and christian consistency, and to the grief of very many of God's dear people? Meanwhile exhort them to repentance, restitution, "to come out from among them, be separate, and touch not this unclean thing." What now? The same response? "It is our opinion, and we have a right to it." Take the pic-nic religion* of the day; the feastings and frolicings at festivals, soirees, fancy fairs, at tea donation, wedding and strawberry parties, attended at late hours with surfeiting and gluttony, foolish talking and jesting. Also the New Year's visitations, where Satan has a seat in nearly every house.† What the reply when raising the warning voice against this sitting down to eat and rising up to play—these revival killers and soul destroyers? "O, its merely our opinion, and we have an undoubted right to it!" Ministers, elders and bishops, the leading members in our protestant churches, may go to a gambling, rumselling hotel, feast to gormandizing, drink toasts, crack jokes, "eat, drink, and make merry, (for to-morrow we die")—all this and more yet, for opinion's sake! Opinion fathers all the old serpent, the devil, can wish or desire. Mark that woman tipped off in gay artificials, ornamentals, and costly apparel—gold breastpins and finger rings, in the face of gospel purity and simplicity. How does she exonerate herself, cover up her sin? "It's merely a difference of opinion, that's all!" The Bible is out of the question—opinion supercedes it. No matter how aggravating, God-defying, or soul-destroying the sin is,—popery in the church or out of it, theatre going, opera dancing, Sabbath desecration, etc.,—it is all covered up or whitewashed with, "It is my opinion."

It is wonderful how some men bristle up pugnaciously, when reproved for their evil deeds or pernicious errors; swell out boastingly and impudently, with: "Sir, I have a right to my opinion, and you have no right to interfere with it." So says the distiller, the trafficker in liquid death and damnation; the tobacco sot, the maker, seller and user of the poisonous, filthy narcotic. Novel-readers also, those who publish and send forth light, foolish, trashy publications, literary serpents, sugar-coated poisons that curse the land, cast the same in your teeth, when reproved for scattering widely these fire-brands, arrows and death.

Even the oppressor, the man-stealer, the trafficker in the bodies and souls of men, the apologizer also, of this outstretched arm of blood-guiltiness, starts up with a bold front when reproved, with: "Sir, it's my opinion; I have a right to it; let me alone."

Worldly-minded, proud, covetous, idolatrous church-members, backsliders and formalists, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, those having a form of godliness, meanwhile denying the power thereof, when rebuked for their God-dishonoring wickedness, resort to this same subterfuge, "We have a right to our own opinions; you lack charity, sir."

Not long since a brother in the church was kindly reproved for his unchristian course, for taking sides with wicked men in persecuting and scandalizing one of God's faithful servants in the ministry, for causing the enemies of truth to rejoice and blaspheme;—and what think you was the reply of this offending brother, when reproved for his inconsistent, unchristian course, for marring the peace of Jerusalem? "I have an undoubted right to my opinion, sir, and I could but hope you had charity enough to let me enjoy this opinion!"

Thus, you see, opinion is a kind of scapegoat or pack-horse for every kind of abomination in the church and out of it! The devil himself, doubtless, when rebuked for his usurped authority and deeds of darkness, would retort, "It's my opinion, sir, I have a right to it: where's your charity? "This is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved."—John 3: 19. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy."—Prov. 28: 13.

The "Earnest Christian," alluding to these same stiff necks, or self-opinionated persons, remarks thus:—

"We never met a person that claimed infallibility. All admit, in theory, the possibility of being mistaken. Yet practically how hard it is for any one to admit, in plain words, that he has entertained opinions that are incorrect, or indulged in prejudices that are not well-founded. There is no pride so strong, or so dangerous, as pride of opinion. When men's sins are exposed they are generally willing to confess them; but when it is apparent to all that opinions which they have publicly avowed are false, they still cling to them with the utmost tenacity. The prayer of the old Scotch Divine is one that we might all offer to advantage, 'O Lord! keep me right; for thou knowest that when I go wrong, it is very hard to turn me.'

Beloved, take warning. 'Consistency is a jewel,' but jewels have their value. They may be bought too dearly. Truth is too high a price to pay for consistency. If you are deceived a dozen times a day, have the frankness to confess it. It is a thousand times better to be true and honest, than to be consistent in error. So long as you are too proud to admit mistakes, the Lord cannot lead you. When you can assign no better opinion for maintaining a position than that you have taken it publicly, you had better abandon it. If you have been misled, confess it frankly."

"Be true to every inmost thought,
And as thy thought, thy speech;
What thou hast not by suffering bought,
Presume thou not to teach."

D. F. NEWTON, Author of Home Thrusts.

* By pic-nic religion we mean a religion, both in protestant and popish churches, that sustains Sabbath schools and other benevolent enterprises by unholy means, unscriptural—by a worldly, time-serving policy, that proves a curse instead of a blessing. "While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat and went his way."—MATT. 13: 25.

"The church and world amalgamate,
A union worse than with the state,
Though motives are the same;
The love of pleasure and of gold,
On some professors have such hold,
They oft forget their name."

† We allude to the pernicious custom of setting luxurious tables—not unfrequently with wines and other intoxicating drinks, stepping-stones to drinking saloons and pot houses. How many young men see (when too late) this stratagem of Satan! How many date their downward course to ruin from these New Year's visitations, become dissipated sots, and go down prematurely to a drunkard's grave!

Who sows to winds, the whirlwind reaps,
And life's great end confounds!
Then be, ye stewards, wise to escape
The wrath that knows no bounds.

This mischievous custom of eating and drinking to excess, this criminal waste of God's bounty, is not confined to the world, or to the men of the world, but very many professing godliness put their hands to this accursed thing.

MAN'S WAY VS. GOD'S WAY.

"O! 'tis only his way. Don't mind it, he always was just so" "Well, 'tis my way; I don't mean any harm. Perhaps you can do differently, but I never could; it is n't my way."

Such are answers I frequently hear made when somebody is complained to, or about, whose daily walk does not seem to square with the divine pattern. Suppose, my friend, we compare this talk with Bible language, and see if it is allowable.

We read that all we like sheep had gone astray, having "turned every one to his own way;" and that the Lord in compassion provided "a way to escape," making known unto us "the way, the truth, and the life." And that he now commands the wicked to "forsake his ways," which though "right in his own eyes," are "pernicious ways," and "the ways of death," and walk in the "narrow . . . way which leadeth unto life."

Do we forget that in us "there is no good thing"? Do we doubt the power of the gospel to convert us "soul, body and spirit?" Or do we question the necessity of such a thorough regeneration, when we plead in justification of our own sins, or those of others, that "it is only their way"? This is but a device of the Devil, his name for positive disobedience. Our ways are "crooked," "dark," "perverted," and "an abomination unto the Lord;" God's ways are "peaceful," "righteous," "straight," and "tend to life."

If our natural inclinations are to pride in any of its phases, following in Christ's way, who "made himself of no reputation," we shall learn to be humble. If we are strong willed and stubborn, walking after Him who "came not to do (his) own will," we shall become submissive and yielding. If we are blunt-spoken, impatient and thoughtless of the sensibilities of others, remembering our Lord's unfailing gentleness and gracious condescension, we shall grow sweet-tempered and lovely. If it is our way to lend ready ears and willing tongue for evil words, treading in his footsteps who "judged no man," and "reviled not," we too shall be deaf and dumb for slander. Whether it is our way to be selfish or sensual, ease-loving or intemperate, imitating Him who was self-denying and suffering, we shall leave all these paths of unrighteousness.

O, beloved! let us not be exalted. Let us not value our abilities, our virtues, or our peculiarities so highly as to prefer them to God's commands, and flatter ourselves he will accept the amendment to his law. "The foolishness of a man perverteth his way." "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." God help us to think soberly of ourselves, to ponder the path of our feet, to remember our past waywardness, and present frailty, to distrust all the inclinations of our natural hearts till we have tried them by the word, to order all our steps in the fear of the Lord, and establish our goings in him, until the narrow, rugged, humble way which alone endeth in life and peace is passed over, and the sinless glory of an immortal state forever gained.

Manchester, Mass. E. A. ANNABLE.

THE BEAUTIFUL LAND.

There is a land where beauty cannot fade,
No sorrow dim the eye;
Where true love shall not droop, nor be dismayed,
And none shall ever die!
Where is that land, O where?
For I would hasten there;
Tell me, I fain would go,
For I am weary with a heavy woe;
The beautiful have left me all alone,
The true, the tender, from my path have gone;
O! guide me with thy hand,
If thou dost know that land,
For I am burdened with oppressive care,
And I am weak and fearful with despair,—
Where is it? Tell me where.

Friend, thou must trust in Him who trod before
The desolate paths of life;
Must bear in meekness, as he meekly bore,
Sorrow and pain and strife.
Think how the Son of God
These thorny paths hath trod;
Think how he longed to go,
Yet tarried out for thee the appointed woe.

Think of his weariness in places dim,
Where no man comforted or cared for him;
Think of the blood-like sweat
With which his brow was wet;
Yet how he prayed, unaided and alone,
In that great agony, Thy will be done.
Friend, do not thou despair,
Christ from his heaven of heavens will hear thy prayer.

IMPORTANCE OF SELF-KNOWLEDGE.

BY IRA A. THAYER, M. D.

"Self-knowledge is the essence of all knowledge."

Strange that a being endowed with the most exquisite organization, the most wonderful mechanism and the most God-like position and capabilities, should become so utterly reckless of his own welfare, so interested with external objects, and so forgetful of his noble nature and his eternal destiny, as to so grossly neglect the study of his own being, and the laws which govern that being. It is strange, I say, very strange, that so few know themselves and the natural laws under which they live. Strange that with all the talent possessed by the American people, so little attention should be directed to the acquisition of so important a knowledge.

We hear and read a great deal with reference to the circumstances surrounding us, a great many speculations in regard to our future being. We struggle and toil year after year in one direction and another to procure a sustenance. We study surrounding nature, the science of the plants and herbage which adorn our dwelling-place. We study the chemical laws which exist in the universe of matter. We study and view with astonishment and awe, the starry heavens over our heads and the mundane ball beneath our feet. We study the science of numbers and the laws which govern the mathematical world, or we labor for years conning over the languages which we speak. Yet how seldom do we study ourselves.

We seek enjoyment, for which we will adopt almost any measure—run almost any risk. We will venture out into the surging billows of the mighty deep, traverse the sandy plains of scorching Africa, penetrate the wilds of Ethiopia, explore the lofty peaks of the Rocky Mountains, or scale the sky-towering summit of the Andes, now exposed to the burning sun of the torrid clime, and now freezing among the mountainous icebergs of the frigid zone. Thus the great masses of mankind are in one constant commotion, hurrying to and fro, always anxious for this one great end—present enjoyment. Yet how few seek in the right direction for this happiness, viz.: the proper development of their own being and the observance of its laws. While all creation is ransacked and studied that we may find the means whereby to please this "frail body," we neglect the crowning element of creation, the last and noblest work of God.

"When I consider Thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet, the fowls of the air, the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea. O, Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth." Psalms 8: 5—9.

The whole creation around us seems to be adapted to our wants; it was placed here for that purpose; we are made kings of the universe; we own all we can see. The whole object of creation seems to centre in man. All the elements and the laws which govern them, seem to point to him as the object for which they were created. Is it strange, then, that the Psalmist should inquire, "What is man?" Or is it strange that we consider that "the greatest study of mankind is man?"

The first requisite in the road to happiness is the possession of a sound constitution—a healthy physical system, without which we can have but little physical enjoyment, without which we can have but little mental enjoyment. Enjoyment depends upon life, which we may divide into five kinds (so to speak) which man must possess in order to a full enjoyment in this world and the world to come. These may be thus named: physical, mental, moral, spiritual and eternal life. Mentality is manifested only through the physical. The strength of these manifestations depends upon the strength of the physical; and as the physical is developed and strengthened, so will the mind be rendered clear, active and vigorous. The physical is first, then mentality. Our mental natures must be developed before we can exercise the moral. We must know that there is a God before we can worship him. We must know right from wrong before we can choose between them. Knowing these things we can then develop the moral nature, and not before.

Having our moral natures developed, we can then attain to spiritual life, and hope for a life beyond the grave. Then we say we must have the physical before we can have the mental, the mental before the moral, the moral before the spiritual, the spiritual before we can gain life eternal.

Then, christian, do you expect to have a happy life here, and an eternal one beyond the grave, and still pay no regard to your physical systems more than to heap on and into them all the abuses that a whole lifetime can earn; abusing, polluting, murdering your bodies, upon which depends the growth of your mental, moral and spiritual natures? By such a course you destroy your enjoyment here, whether physical or mental. Not only do we make ourselves miserable, but the effects of our abuses are transmitted to our posterity, to be again transmitted, with the effects of their abuses, learned of us, to another generation, and so on. Who can comprehend the crushing effects of our sinfulness, or measure the extent of its ravages? Is it not our duty, then, to pay the most strict attention to the development of our physical systems, that we may perfect them as much as possible, thereby giving strength and clearness to our intellectual and moral natures? We cannot do this unless we know ourselves physically. Who would attempt to repair, and keep in repair, a machine, of the structure and functions of which he was perfectly ignorant? Who would attempt to obey the laws of a nation if he knew nothing of the nature of those laws? Who will attempt to obey the laws of his system unless he knows what they are?

"Sin is the transgression of law." True, we cannot be held accountable for the transgression of laws of which we knew nothing, provided we have had no opportunity of learning them. A state would be considered very unreasonable in holding its subjects responsible for the fulfillment of laws of which it gave them no chance of obtaining a knowledge. But having given all an opportunity of learning the laws, it holds all responsible for the fulfillment of those laws, whether the subject has taken advantage of such opportunity or not.

The Creator has made no laws which are unimportant, nor which we cannot understand. He has made no law the disobedience of which is not fraught with ill. As remarked before, they are all adapted to our wants, and we are held morally responsible for their fulfillment.

"But," it may be asked, "if we disobey a physical law do we not receive a physical punishment, and if we disobey a moral law do we not receive moral punishment?" Yes. But by disobeying a law by which we jeopardize our physical systems, we disobey a moral law. "Man was not made in vain;" he was created for some great and glorious end, for the accomplishment of which he was placed in possession of a physical system. If man violates the laws of that system, by which he shortens its natural period of existence, and thereby thwarts the designs of his Creator, will he not be held morally accountable?

Nor is the study of man only necessary in order to understand the laws which govern him, for the purpose of observing them, but he furnishes the greatest evidence of the existence of an Almighty power, that is afforded us in the universe. Let the egotistical, self-conceited deist, but turn and study himself, and ask "Whence came such a being, and whither he goes," and

"——what in grander realms above
Is ransomed man ordained to be?"

and he will be pointed, at once, to him whom he denies.

The study of man is one great means of studying God. "So God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he them." If we are the image of God, then, by studying ourselves we ought to learn much about him.

To me the study of man is a great pleasure. He is a subject full of interest. Commencing the study from books at the age of fourteen years, I have for ten years pursued it closely, yet am a mere tyro. I find something new in his nature every day. He presents a vast field for research. A most delightful theme, a most wonderful being. Who can look into his grand mechanism—who can observe the mighty manifestations of wisdom and goodness displayed there, without a deep conviction of the existence of an all-wise and merciful Ruler? Who can survey the various workings of that soul, without an exclamation of wonder and reverence?

But how much soever interest and importance is attached to the study of man as a physical being, there is no less attached to the study of man as an intellectual being. But here I must pause. A field too wide—too deep—opens before me. Suffice it to say, that we possess a mind. That mind is subject to certain laws, as well as the system in which it exists. The mind, or any part of it, is susceptible of increase or diminution in its comparative manifestations. This change in the mind is within the power of the individual possessing the mind. Therefore what we need is a knowledge of the mind—the ability to determine what part of the mind is deficient, or what part excessive; in short we must know ourselves phrenologically.

It needs but a glance over society, beholding the discord and tumult in families, and the irritable, ungovernable, sensual and ignorant masses springing therefrom, to demonstrate the fact of the profound ignorance of mankind generally upon this great subject.

Should not ministers, the acknowledged expounders of duty, preach on this subject? As the people look to them for their whole duty, if they should expound natural laws and facts as connected with our being, and admonish and instruct the people with all the solemnity and unction of their exalted station, besides wielding their tremendous influence with most beneficial effects, they would soon effectually remodel society, almost banish vice and crime, and infinitely bless and adorn mankind.

"But our mission is Christ crucified, and nothing more," say they. Granted; but should you not prepare the soil, by showing mankind how to cultivate and perfect their being, in order that your preaching may take root and bring forth sixty or an hundred-fold of morality and happiness? How can we "love the Lord our God with all our might, mind, soul and strength," while we entail on his image physical maladies and moral blemishes and disorders? Teach mankind man, in the full sense of the word, to obey the laws of his being, and you transform the world.

For the World's Crisis.

A SOLDIER'S VISIT TO THE BATTLE FIELD.

A letter from a New York soldier gives the following thrilling description of one of the battle-fields of Gen. Grant's Virginia campaign:—

"Towards evening of the battle of Robinson's Cross Roads, where the fiercest of the 'eight days' battles' was fought, I went over the field. To the unaccustomed eye, it was a vast horror. Not a sound was heard save the ambulances, as they wended their way in search of the wounded; and all was quiet as though no cannonading had just rent the clouds, or death-scream chilled the air. Dead lay in the hollows—in the beds of brooks—behind knolls, supported by stumps or fallen nearly upright against heaps of brush; all splashed with the ensanguined hues of violent death, bloody and ghastly. And then the sun went down, its face a gory red, reflecting that crimson field of destruction,—sinking to his rest as if satisfied with the day's slaughter, with man's inhumanity to man. Blood, blood, everywhere, bending down the blades of grass with its coagulated weight, metamorphosing them into tiny blood lances. Blood in pools, where unfortunates had parted with the sudden life-stream and had been dragged off for burial. Blood upon the leaves and shrubs and trunks of trees, ~~spattered upon them by iron messengers of death~~. The stones were bloody, and little brooks ran crimson with the lives of hundreds. Tender forest flowers had sunk to the earth encarmined with blood, as though shrinking from the awful carnage that had raged above them.

Dead bodies lay in heaps, bloody and gashed and torn with frightful wounds, so calm and quiet, while numbers lay around with their brains crushed out by the unconsidering hoofs of cavalry, ~~spattered o'er everything far and near~~—bloody and horrible. Here lay a young man with his legs mangled off by a shell, swimming in his own blood. His hands were clasped across his breast; his lips were apart, and he seemed to have passed from life with an appeal to the Mercy-seat upon every feature."

This is only one among many of the terrible scenes of the war here described. If this is not included among the lusts of the flesh, what is? It is strife and variance upon a terrible scale. Now I ask, can a follower of Christ who has the graces of the Spirit, indulge in the lus's of the flesh? Not without coming into condemnation. But we read, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them . . . who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." We must be "free from the blood of all men."

May the glad hour soon come when wars shall cease under the whole heaven, when the Prince of peace shall reign triumphant in Eden restored. May we all be ready, is my earnest prayer to God. T. L. WAUGH.

THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE.—Dr. N. L. Rice says, "The world is now approaching another great epoch, the most important in the history of our world. The time cannot be distant when great changes are to take place amongst the nations. It is our wisdom, therefore, both to examine carefully and prayerfully the prophecies whose fulfillment is yet future, and to watch passing events which throw light upon these prophecies. It is a great misfortune to mistake the character of the age in which we live, and to fail to understand the signs which God gives, that his people may act with him their part."—Signs of the Times.

☞ Labor is of noble birth, but prayer is the daughter of heaven; labor has a place near the throne, but prayer touches the golden sceptre; labor, Martha-like, is busy with much serving, but prayer sits with Mary at the feet of Jesus.

For the World's Crisis.

AN EASTERN TOUR.

On Thursday, Oct. 27th, I started (my wife with me, as I thought it the best thing possible for her health) east, to visit and feed the flock of God, as in providence I might meet with them, and attend a conference at West Poland, Me. Saturday, 29th, I made my way to Haverhill; called upon Bro. Ring, and by his request concluded it duty to stop and spend Sunday with the church.

Sunday was pleasant, and a goodly company came together with hearts beating high for glory, life, and immortality. They are in love with Jesus and his immediate coming, and can feed upon truth adapted to the present age Yea, they can bear strong food. The signs of redemption are specially cheering to them; their heads are uplifted; love and good will prevail, with a reformation spirit; and it was like earlier times, when the candle of the Lord shone brightly around us. It was blessed to witness their desire to see the work of God revived more among them. I could but hope that my stopping would prove a blessing, that they might grow thereby and be like a city set on a hill reflecting great light. I think it would be a great blessing to the cause in Haverhill to have a conference of days there.

Monday we had a pleasant ride to Rye Beach. Found the old pilgrim home of Bro. Moses Philbrick; were bade welcome, and rested for the night. Tuesday, by the blessing of God, we went to Portsmouth, and soon found ourselves at Mt. Ephraim, enjoying the hospitalities and good fellowship of the loyal subjects of King Jesus. In the evening went to the chapel, found the church gathered for worship, and it was a stirring meeting, all anticipating the inauguration of a new peace government that will be abiding; and with this "blessed hope" all hearts were made glad, resulting in shouts of glory, hallelujah.

I next day drove thirty miles to Kennebunk, and put up with Bro. Mitchell and son, the family where so many pilgrims have found a welcome stopping place. Here we staid one day, visiting those of like precious faith, attending one evening meeting, when a large gathering came out to hear the word of exhortation. And as Bro. Ross had an appointment there the following Sunday, and Bro. Burnham coming to commence a protracted meeting, I concluded it duty to go into the "regions beyond"; so on Saturday, Nov. 5th, I went to Hollis, and here I found a desire to hear the word of life. They circulated the appointment, and Sunday had a full meeting at their house of worship, when I did the best I could to feed the church with the truth adapted to their needs, and I really think I was in the right place, for they had had no preaching for some time in the past, and were hungry for the bread of life.

It was an interesting day, and I could but hope it might prove a blessing to all. I am in hopes they may learn more perfectly the pilgrim life of separation from earthly governments, and stand ready to bear reproach, if need be, for Christ's and the gospel's sake. They have had additions to their numbers and strength the last year. Brn. Mitchell and Emery have rendered efficient service in the ministry among them. I had a good time with them, feeling the assurance that our labor was not in vain here. God bless them, and send them the living preacher. It is a good place for missionary labor, and the Brn. are not backward to help you in the work.

Here I left my horse, took the cars for Portland, went to the Advent Hall in the evening, heard a stirring discourse from Bro. A. Ross, and all seemed to be quickened together. The soldiers stationed here are ready for moving orders. Wednesday morning I expected to move on with Bro. Ross to Yarmouth, where he had an appointment; thence to Poland. But while here he had a telegraphic dispatch to return and go to Brookfield, N. H., and attend the funeral of Bro. Lindsey Churchill's wife; so I went to Yarmouth in his stead. It was a bad time for meeting, but the "steadfast and unmovable" were out, and we had a comfortable time in looking over the prospects of the future, if faithful. This is the home of Brn. York and Wellcome, who are full of interest in this blessed cause. Our next appointment was at the West Poland Conference. When we arrived we found they had come and were coming in from all the region, and were in working order and briskly at it. Reinforcements from Norway, Bryant's Pond, Raymond, Casco, Otisfield, and other places were there to answer the call, and all ready to give battle to the enemy. The conflict began in earnest, and the interest increased. No lack of ammunition; all seemed to have drawn a full supply from the gospel armory, and the movement was harmonious. The Lord was with us, and it was a warm engagement.

Saturday our numbers increased, but there was no lack for homes. Our brethren at Poland Hill opened not only their hearts, but their houses and their stables, bidding all welcome. The Bible, christian, common interest had a development here, and none made poorer, but all the richer. I will assure you it was a blessed, good, soul-cheering, faith-strengthening meeting. There was union and harmony, with the working spirit fully manifest, all desirous for the salvation of their fellow men, all taking hold of the work with zeal. This was a good day. Bro. Ross came Friday, prepared for the work. Brn. Hanscomb, Libby, Partridge and Jordan, preachers in that region, were with us ready to lend a helping hand, and the work of the Lord prospered gloriously.

Sunday morning the snow began to come, with a strong breeze from the north-east, but at nine o'clock it became evident the house would be full. This was the hour for the commencement of a conference meeting, and the spirit of prayer and exhortation with energy prevailed all the forenoon. All seemed filled with truth and the Spirit of the Lord. It was a sweet, blessed, heavenly meeting, a revival meeting, sure enough. The stream ran all in one channel, and moved you right onward to the haven of everlasting rest. Thirty minutes intermission, and the meeting began as it left off, the time all taken up till after two o'clock, when there was an opening for preaching, and also in the evening. The Lord was indeed with us; conviction rested upon the congregation, and many were almost persuaded to be christians. Some manifested that desire, and stepped into the pool as the waters were troubled. I thought it the best day and one of the best meetings I ever attended.

But we are homeward bound, and we may expect better times as we near the port of glory. Our love for Jesus' coming will increase, our faith will grow stronger, unfeigned love of the brethren will be prominent, a common interest will manifest itself, and we shall joyfully bear one another's burthens, and lay hold on eternal life. Our meetings continued Monday and Tuesday. I left leaving Bro. Ross to do the gleaning. God's great blessings rest on our Poland brethren. Amen. L. BOUTELL.

TEACHING OF DEMONS.

"NO SIN."

The following is from a spirit, as published in the Banner of Light, Sept. 24th, 1864. The question was asked the spirit;—"What is your opinion of the origin of sin?"

Ans. "It is our opinion that all sin originated in the ignorance of the human mind. When you, as intellectual human beings, shall have outlived the ignorance of the past and present, you will know as we do, that in reality there is no sin."

The spirits and their followers often affirm that Spiritualism is "ancient christianity" revived in its purity. One has only to compare the two, to be satisfied that they have nothing in common. They are no more alike than Christ and Belial.

"NO STANDARD OF RIGHT."

Another spirit was asked the following question:—"Is there any absolute standard of right? If so, what is it?"

Ans. "We believe there is none. . . . Each mind must erect a standard for themselves."—Banner, Nov. 12, '64.

If each erects his own standard of right, we think some will not have very high ones. And if his own is right, it follows that no state should make any laws to interfere with his standard; and as every standard is right, of course no laws could be made for the regulation of the conduct of men. This is setting the Bible wholly one side. Does this look like "ancient christianity"? On the contrary, it may well be called the religion of the Devil.

"NO GOD."

The same spirit, in answer to another question, says we are "accountable to . . . no God outside of ourselves."

This looks just like the doctrine of the real "antichrist," who is to be known by his denying both "the Father and the Son."—1 John 2: 22.

When defining "the distinction between soul and spirit," this spirit says:—"One may be called a principle, the other the body of that principle. You may call either soul or spirit principle, it matters not, for both soul and spirit are only terms used to signify conditions of mind."

As a principle is not a being, but only a law of action, it follows that it has no intelligence by itself; consequently is not a personality, and can never act independently, by itself. It is not an accountable agent,—not a living organism, "Terms" which represent only "conditions of mind," are not that which they represent. Our minds are in a great variety of conditions,—sometimes in a sorrowful one, at others in a joyful, angry, or peaceful condition; but these varied conditions are not so many souls, which will exist in "the spirit land," when the man is dead. It is true that the words soul and spirit are often used in the Bible to represent a condition of the mind; as, the proud in spirit, the haughty in spirit, the humble in spirit, a meek and quiet spirit, and so on; but none of these "conditions" of the mind are personal entities that live and move when the men are dead.

Before this spirit began to communicate through the medium, it moved her to pray, as is frequently done. A person present asked the following question:—

"To whom, or what was your prayer of this afternoon addressed?

A.—To that Power by which you and I live, by which you and I act, to which you and I ever pray.

Q.—Is that anything but an idea?

A.—No, certainly not, nor can it be aught else; for the soul ever measures its Deity by itself.

Q.—It addresses itself, then, does it not?

A.—Yes."

The questioner then remarked that he thought it hardly proper to pray to a principle. The spirit answered that it was "quite as proper . . . as to pray to a personal God, or Deity, when we feel that there is none at all."

Another spirit says, "the spirit is thought." If "spirit is thought," then it would follow that a man has as many spirits as he has thoughts. The Bible tells us that in the day a man dies, "in that very day his thoughts perish." Then according to the foregoing his spirits perish at the same time.

Another spirit was asked the following question:—"Do spirits take possession of individuals, and affect them mentally, so as to produce aberration of mind, or disordered mental action and insanity?" The spirit answered: "We know that the disembodied spirit does often influence the spirit in the body through the medium of mind and matter, in such a way as to produce temporary, and sometimes permanent, insanity."

This is a frank confession, and corresponds with the teaching of the primitive christians.

"NO FORM."

A spirit was asked the following question: Q. "Have spirits any personal form by which they would be recognized by us in the spirit world?

A. If we should speak that which is the highest truth with regard to the case, that we are capable of perceiving, we shall answer that the spirit has no form."—Banner of Light, Nov. 12, 1864.

What kind of a being is that which has "no form?" We think such an one might well go to such a place as is described in the following

"SUMMER LAND."

The following description of "the summer land," or what is commonly called the "spirit land," was given by a spirit through Mrs. Cora L. V. Hatch, at Clinton Hall, New York City, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 15th, 1853, and published in the Banner of Light, Oct. 8th, 1864. The reader will perceive from the spirit's description of the place, that it must be the one some of us used to sing about, that lies "Beyond the bounds of time and space," which is simply nowhere, and where no body goes; and more than that, we should be nothing when we got there.

Mrs. Hatch was entranced, or mesmerized by the spirit, when she was moved to pray, and then spoke as follows:—

"You cannot take with you beyond the grave your physical structures. You cannot retain in your heavenly habitations a single atom of the substance which surrounds and supports your existence here; not the smallest sparkle of an insect's wing—not the faintest breath of flowery perfume, shall salute your senses in that far-off land. The mind lives upon thoughts; the spirit dwells in the world of spirit, without consciousness of physical surroundings. Such is the difference between mind and matter. Yet many even among so-called Spiritualists, will not understand you if you tell them of an existence which is without anything analagous to material influences. The mind requires no place, no time, no light, no darkness, no sun, no moon, no earth, no water, no air. It is absolute thought, and the soul in its secret space requires no bodily investment, no garment, aside from that thought. There is need to it of no sight, no smell, nor hearing, nor touch; but it possesses an ever-present omnipotent faculty, as absolute existence. To be absolute is to be independent of all human appetites and occupations, of all the conditions of materiality. The spirits gather flowers in the spirit-land! If flowers, they must have their seasons of growth, maturity and decay, else they cannot be really flowers. No; the immortal world possesses no flowers. . . . You will build no structures but the palaces of thought. . . . Nor will you need the ministering aid of angels on your path of beneficence and joy. There are actually no such beings as angels. That idea was long ago exploded. They are but fancied embodiments of the spirit's own thoughts and purposes, by which others are led to be and to do good. There is no heaven but the consciousness of virtue, no hell but in the soul which is eaten by remorse. Remember, then, this: the mind is not matter, neither can it be likened to any form of material existence. It requires not fruits, nor flowers, shores nor rivers, upon which to move; no ocean breezes, no sunshine, save that which belongs to the light of knowledge. Give ear to no deluding fantasies. . . . Remember, then, this whole conception of the Summer-Land is an empty dream, or the pretended revelation of a false prophet; as much so as the Paradise of Mahomet."

That must be a strange "summer land," that is in "no place," and has "no time, no light, no darkness, no sun, no moon, no earth, no water, no air;" but where all is "absolute thought." The foregoing is the best description of the "spirit-land" we have ever seen. How would you like to live there?

LIVING SOUL.

When speaking of Gen. 1: 24, which reads, —"And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind," Dr. Clarke truly remarks that nephesh chaiyah, the words rendered "living creature," is "a general term to express all creatures endued with animal life, in any of its infinitely varied gradations, from the half-reasoning elephant down to the stupid potto, or lower still, to the polype, which seems equally to share the vegetable and animal life."

But nephesh chaiyah is the same term that is rendered "living soul," in Gen. 2: 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a (nephesh chaiyah) living soul." As the term nephesh chaiyah is applicable to "all creatures endued with animal life," of course it does not signify "immortal soul." But it would be just as proper to say that the words represent an "immortal soul" when applied to animals, as to men; for it has the same meaning in the one case as the other.

DO NOT JUDGE.

The following story shows the evils of judging, and the importance of always going to the individual first, whom you think is out of the way, as our Lord has directed us in Matt. 18: 15. We cannot be too careful of each other's characters; nor too slow in judging our neighbor. We are taught that if we "judge not" we "shall not be judged." "Let us not therefore judge one another more."

"When I was eleven years old my mother removed to the country. Our nearest neighbor was a minister, by the name of Wayland, who in addition to his ministerial duties owned and cultivated a large farm. One night my attention was attracted to a bright light in one of the upper rooms of our neighbor's house. In a moment I saw the wife fly past the uncurtained window, closely followed by the husband who was armed with a huge fire shovel—round the room she went, still pursued, and as I listened breathlessly, I thought, nay I was sure, I heard a scream. I hastened to my mother and told her what I had seen, and we both looked out, but the light was gone and all was quiet. Notwithstanding my mother's judicious warning to say nothing about it to any one, before school was out next day I had confided it to my bosom friend, and in a week half the village new it, and a great talk it made, I assure you. Finally it reached the ears of the deacons, who at once proceeded to investigate its truth. My mother looked grave and troubled when they called, but conscious of having told only the truth, I met them fearlessly and related what I had seen. Then they left, taking a "bee line" for the minister's to call him to an account. With many apologies they made known their errand, when to their surprise, the minister burst into a hearty laugh. 'Wait a moment, said he, till I call Polly.' You see, that night I found a big rat in the meal chest, and came down for the shovel, and bade her hold the light while I killed him. Finding no other place to hide, the rascal took refuge in the folds of her dress, and she ran screaming till I managed to dislodge and kill him.'

I have ever since been careful not to repeat an unfavorable report about my neighbors, at least until I knew the whole truth."

DYING RICH.

The following note from one who is preaching, shows a fault in those who hear the word. While the wages of laboring men and produce have advanced from fifty to one hundred per cent., many seem to forget that it costs the poor preacher's family much more to live now than before the war began; hence they should give him more, if they would have him be comfortable, and unburdened from a heavy load of care and anxiety. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

"BRO. GRANT:—Seven years ago last September I was called to preach 'the gospel of the kingdom,' and taking any one year of the seven preceding (save A. D. '52, in which I was burned out), as a standard of prosperity, and allowing the same for the last seven, and I find myself as many hundred dollars worse off, pecuniarily, than I should have been if I had not preached. And if I should take into consideration the increased facilities and opportunities for making money during the last three years, I may safely calculate myself minus one thousand dollars in the 'Second Advent cause.' Brethren 'don't see it.' I do, and feel it too. But all this is to be expected, and yet it is not right, if the church members are annually increasing their capital, or if it remains the same, and their liabilities are decreased. A certain Deacon Smith of New York, after the Albany and Buffalo R. R. was completed, said 'he did not know how in the world he was going to pay the preacher. Before that R. R. was built, he had no difficulty about it, but now there was not an apple, or a chicken, or a bundle of straw, an ounce of butter, or a soup bone, but what was equal to money; even skim-milk cheese, and pine slabs, 'after harvest,' were good for cash, and how to pay his preacher under such circumstances, he could not tell!'

Now I do not say this is true of Deacon Smith in Ohio, for I can testify to the reverse; but I do say it does make a wonderful difference in the amount received in the minister's family, when butter is forty cents per pound instead of ten; meat twenty or twenty-five, and not six and one-fourth; sugar thirty-three, and not eight; coffee sixty, in lieu of twelve and a half; wheat two dollars per bushel instead of seventy-five cents. The quantity produced, or grown, is nothing; but the price it sells at is magical. And yet I trust I am richer, richer by far than I should have been if I could not have preached. O, to die rich! not in this world's goods, but in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and heirs of the kingdom. Bro. Grant, I cannot afford to take the Crisis."

THANKSGIVING.

The annual period set apart by our ancestors as a day of public thanksgiving to Almighty God for his great mercies toward them is about to occur—will have passed ere this greets the readers of the Crisis. Many seem to forget, or do not realize, at least, how and where this practice first originated, the trying circumstances just preceding the first public thanksgiving, etc. But it is good, because it is quite in harmony with the commands of inspiration, to take a retrospective view of a low and obscure pedigree that humility may properly balance aspiring prosperity.

God gave particular instruction to the people of Israel when they came into the goodly land which flowed with milk and honey, that they should remember the indigent circumstances of their fathers. Their numbers and wealth had increased so that they might forget and become proud, and thus God told them when they offered the first fruits of the earth to him,—the priest having placed the offering before the altar of God,—they should declare the humiliating circumstances they and their fathers had experienced, commencing thus: "A Syrian ready to perish was my father," etc. Please turn to Deut. 26: 5 to 11, and read the whole.

Again in Isaiah's day God repeats the same thing in other words, lest his people should become proud, and when they do he always leaves them, for God hates a proud look. "Hearken to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the Lord: look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged."

In view of these things from the pen of inspiration let us glance at the trying circumstances of our pilgrim fathers, landing in a dense forest in mid-winter, and one of the most severe winters ever known. Necessitated to use improper food, and greatly exposed, they sickened, and in about four months lost nearly half their nmuber. Those who survived were weak and feeble, but with a calm trust in their Creator they labored most assiduously to prepare the soil for their first crop.

At last the tiny, sickly blade appeared, and the atmosphere so cold and dry as almost to extinguish hope. "But man's extremity is God's opportunity," and these pilgrims seemed to retain the spirit of the man of Uz—"Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." They appointed a day of fasting and prayer, earnestly beseeching God to send rain. The dark natives saw them assembling for worship, and wonderingly inquired, "Why you worship on dis day?" The matter was frankly explained to them, and now the red man says, "We see if de Great Spirit answer de white man."

O Lord, what a momentous day had now arrived! Not only were they in danger of perishing for want of food if the Lord failed to answer their prayer, but the matter was now to be tested before savage ignorance whether there was a God who heard and answered prayer. Blessed be God! he did help in this their time of need.

In a few hours the atmosphere mellowed to blandness, the clouds gathered and distilled a gentle rain, and thus it continued for many days until the earth was saturated, savage skepticism convinced, the hearts of God's people encouraged and more firmly established. Thus God gave them a harvest sufficient for their subsistence, and when they had gathered it, they were so grateful as to desire to express it publicly; hence they set apart a day expressly for this purpose, to render thanks for mercies and benefits received.

This, in brief, was the origin of our annual Thanksgiving, and our pious ancestors have ever thought best to perpetuate the same until the present; and is it not meet to do so? Especially this season have we been reminded of our dependence upon Him who controls the elements. How many fears were entertained during the scorching suns of the last summer months relative to our harvest! Yet the Infinite has wonderfully filled our cellars and granaries, and now does it not become us individually, as well as nationally, to render thanks unto Him that "causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man: that he may bring forth food out of the earth"? Ps. 109: 19.

But more especially have the church of God reason to render thanksgiving for an overruling Providence, which sustains her situated as she now is within the perils of the last days, while avarice, war, and all the grosser passions of men create an atmosphere perfectly uncongenial for spiritual prosperity. It seems to be conceded on all hands that men wax fearfully and desperately wicked, so that the earth is being filled with "violence," as in the days of Noah,—an unprecedented rashness since the antediluvian age. Notwithstanding all this "the little flock" ride safely ensconsed within the old ship Zion, passing ever and anon the greedy adversary, who would devour her but for the restraining grace of God.

But this little flock are precious in his sight. Hear his comparison: "He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye." O let us rejoice with thanksgiving that the great I AM thus interests himself in our welfare! No marvel that the sweet singer of Israel so often reiterates the fact that "it is GOOD to give thanks unto the Lord." It is, because it elevates the moral nature while it subdues the gross passion of selfishness.

When thankfulness is manifested it is evident love is at the bottom. Why is it that men do not like to receive a favor even when needy, from an enemy, or one particularly disagreeable to them? The idea of being any way indebted to such is more than the natural heart can brook. Can we in reality ever thank any being for favors unless we love that being? We may be glad of the favor, but will that warm benevolence flow out towards the giver in desires that would make some returns by word or deed? Where there is true thankfulness there exist benevolent desires towards the donor. The poet is in harmony with this idea when he inquires,

"What shall I render to my God,
For all his kindness shown?"

Why is it that the ungodly whom Providence has favored with an abundance remain unthankful? Because they do not LOVE the Donor.

We may cultivate a grateful spirit by a proper reflection on our deserts and the many mercies we have already received. If we are not thankful to our Creator we may set it down that we are wanting in love. Let us do as we are commanded from high authority "in everything give THANKS," because ALL things shall work together for our good if we love God.

But let us give particular heed to the excellent proclamation of our Governor where he says, "Let us praise Him for the hope set before us in the gospel; that, through the merits of Jesus Christ, our Savior, we may with confidence look for a glorious resurrection and a blessed IMMORTALITY."

One idea more relative to praying with thankful hearts, and I must close. The apostle has taught us how to pray in order to be heard. He says, "Let your requests be made known unto God with THANKSGIVING!" That is, when we ask for blessings, we should at the same time remember those already bestowed upon us, and thus bring our minds into a grateful frame when we pray. Is it not to be feared that the reason so many prayers remain unanswered is because they are offered with an unthankful heart? Let us then see to it that we heed the admonition of the apostle in offering our petitions with THANKSGIVING. B. MATHEWSON.

For the World's Crisis.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

We would call the attention of the brethren and friends of the cause of truth in N. H., at this time, to the following vote passed at the last session of the Advent Christian State Conference, held at Alton Bay, Sept. 1st, 2nd and 3d, 1864, namely: That we make an effort to raise a Tract Fund of $200.00, with which to purchase tracts for free distribution throughout the bounds of this conference.

This sum can be raised easily, if brethren will take the matter in hand, and make an effort in this direction. We need the whole, or a part of it at least, at this time, with which to procure tracts to scatter; that persons who now are perishing for want of knowledge may have their minds called to the great and all-absorbing theme—the coming of the King of kings, and the requisite preparation to meet him in peace.

Come, brethren, let there be a waking up, and an earnestness felt in this matter. We hope the preachers of this conference, as well as other brethren and sisters, will make a vigorous effort in the State, that tracts may be flying and accomplishing their mission; that the old "Granite State" may be thoroughly enlightened on the great prophetic and practical truths of the inspired volume, especially with those that relate to this age and generation.

Any amount from a five cent scrip to a fifty dollar greenback, forwarded to the Treasurer, J. Knowles, Lake Village, N. H., or to Elds. A. Ross, Exeter, N. H., T. W Piper, Melvin Village, N. H., A. W. Sibley, East Boston, Mass., will be properly cared for and acknowledged. A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

VOICES FROM THE POOR.

FROM AN AGED PREACHER.

I thank you, Bro. Grant, for your paper. Should like it continued, for the present at least, as it is the only paper we take. I am seventy-one years old, If life continues, the time is not far distant when we must be dependent on some body else for a living; yet, as the times are, I cannot ask you to keep sending it. I shall not consider you unkind if you do not, and shall leave it to your best judgment. My lungs are in such a state, I cannot preach. Can labor with my hands but a little. Your Bro. looking for redemption,

Berkshire Co., Mass. M.

FROM A POOR WIDOW.

My husband died a little more than a year ago. Soon after he died I was taken sick, and have not been able to earn anything since. I have had the Crisis now for three years, and feel to thank you and the Lord that I have had it to read. It has cheered me in my lonely hours, and my heart has been made glad in hearing from those of like precious faith. It is all the preaching I have, and I would be glad to have it continued, if it could be. I would rather go without my supper every night than be deprived of the Crisis.

Hampden Co., Mass. L. H.

FROM THE FATHERLESS POOR.

My father is dead. He was a great lover of the Advent faith, and dearly loved to read the Crisis. It is a paper that we prefer above all others; but we are poor, and cannot pay anything for it now. If you feel disposed to send it to us still, we shall be very grateful.

Waldo Co., Me. MARIA.

THE BANK OF THE LORD'S POOR.

RESPONSES FROM SHAREHOLDERS.

FROM BRO. J. K. BELLOWS.

My soul is exceedingly moved. I have been reading in the Crisis the soul-stirring appeals of the poor for its continuance. I thought how could I do without it (though away from home most of the time); and my dear companion, how could she do without it, in her lonely moments? I pray the good Lord to open the hearts of those that are able to do something in this direction; for the poor must have the Crisis. But reading and praying are not enough; I must do. So I send my mite. The salary of a traveling preacher is small, especially in the circuit of my labors. And when I think of my own dear family and their wants, I am sometimes almost discouraged; but the Lord is good, and has thus far bountifully provided for me and mine; and I am glad I feel willing and have a little to give.

And now let me appeal to my brethren in the ministry to do a little, if it is no more than I have done. Let us pray for it, and, if able, pay for it; and thus show our determination that this mighty organ of truth shall not cease to the poor until the Lord comes and gives us something better,—even the glorious kingdom. Amen.

Shelburne Falls, Mass.

FROM A READER IN MICHIGAN.

I have been much interested, of late, in reading the "Voices from the Poor;" and, today, while reading the response from that poor afflicted sister in Connecticut, who has been confined to her bed for thirty years, I felt that I could no longer withhold my mite from aiding one, who has so long been a sufferer, with the reading of your much valued paper. Enclosed you will find $2.50 for the Crisis for Sister Chloe (if not already provided for). May its richly laden pages be a source of comfort and consolation in her hours of suffering and sorrow, and may the truths of the gospel which it advocates be like a beacon light to guide her to that haven of rest where she will no longer say "I am weary," or, "I am sick."

I am glad to see so many interested in contributing to the Poor Fund, and I trust that not one of the worthy poor will have to be stricken off for the want of means to send it to them. May the injunction, "Freely ye have received, freely give," come with renewed weight to every heart. MARANDA E. ORR.

FROM A FORMER TOBACCO-CHEWER.

I am happy to inform you that I have not suffered any inconvenience from throwing away my tobacco. I bless God for it, and and send you 50c. for the Bank of the Lord's Poor.

Merrimack, Wis. CONNOR SWEENEY.

Worthy of imitation. By giving up a useless, filthy, and expensive habit, you feel all the better for it, and have more means to do good with. There are others who ought to go and do likewise, and, instead of serving, as they now do, a tobacco-god, consecrate themselves and their money to the Lord.

Michigan Free List.

It is proposed that the churches and brethren, in each town and county, do what they can to supply their own poor with the Crisis for the coming year. Will the brethren in the following places take the matter in hand, and see what they can do?

ARE THERE ANY MORE?—A free subscriber in New Hampshire writes:—

"You will please put my name on the paying list, and send the paper free to some one less able to pay than I am. When Mrs. H. first received the paper, I was not able to pay for it; now I am, and will pay a little each month, if my health remains as good as it now is." F. P. M.

Another in New York State writes:—

"Being a preacher, you have sent me the Crisis for some years free; but as I am in business at present, and not dependent on the precarious income of an Advent minister, I wish you to put me down as a paying subscriber. With thanks for past favors,

Your Bro. in Christ, I."

DISTRIBUTE TRACTS!

Now is the time. The long evenings of winter are come, and men and women have time to read. Darkness covers the land, and gross darkness the people. Who will give them light? Iniquity abounds, and men are perishing for lack of knowledge. Who will go forth to save? The great day of doom is at hand. Who will send out the warning cry,—"Behold! He cometh!"

Come, brother, sister; up, and begin anew. Your Master calls. Enlist in the good work now. Go from house to house with these little messengers of truth and salvation; go with prayer, and love, and holy zeal; and the blessing of the Lord go with you. Who knows how many souls you may save thereby from error, sin, and death, and how many gems you may add to the crown of your rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus? What you do, do quickly! The end approaches, and the Master will soon be here! W. B. H.

"I have no Money."

No money for what? "To buy tracts with for free distribution." Well, the Lord has; and, as fast as it is needed, he will send it on by those in whose hands he has put it. Give what you have. You have time; give that. Others will give the money to print them with, if you will give the time to circulate them when they are printed. They are made to be circulated—widely as possible; and the sooner they are scattered broadcast over the land the better.

With or without money, then, send for tracts, and the Lord bless you in the work of distributing them. Let the calls come in from every quarter. Ah, here comes one already. It is from a brother in Providence, R. I.:—

"I am in want of tracts, for free circulation in this city and vicinity the coming winter, upon the subjects of our faith. Men will buy error rather than truth, fiction rather than facts; and hence, if the truth is ever placed in their hands, it must be without cost to them. I have bought and distributed, from time to time, many of the tracts of the Christian Publication Society, and they have done good service. But I would like to have more than I feel able to give away at my own expense, and if you see fit to donate to me more than the amount of the $3.00 enclosed, they shall be faithfully distributed. I have contributed to the funds of the Society heretofore, and shall probably do so again."

The Society sends you $8.00 worth to scatter freely, and may the good seed sown upon the waters return an hundred fold after many days.

For the World's Crisis.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Such little histories seem to be prized by many, for thus they see how others are doing in these perilous times. To do the readers justice, a fair account of things should be reported, as the apostles did, to warn and reprove, as well as to encourage. After visiting my brethren east, it seemed to be a privilege as well as duty to see my friends in Ct., Vt., N. Y., etc.

Cheshire St., Ct. Found the church in good working order, having kept their armor bright by use. They hold meetings regularly, whether they have preaching or not. The only way to secure a healthy church is to have a principle to work.

Hoosick, N. Y. Found this good church, which had stood united for years, planted by Bro. Batchelor, confused and split up by those that make it their business to enter into other men's labors and distract by selecting a few susceptible to a mesmeric influence and thirst after office in the church. These two characters always did and always will divide the flock of God.

Next to Poultney. Found them not broken up, as reported in the account by chaff peddlers. They think and let think, and unite on the great principles of the gospel. We had a large congregation. They have no pastor since Bro. Carpenter left; yet it is the largest congregation by one half in the place. Such singing I have not heard since our old Methodist campmeeting times. They sang everything I named. The old-fashioned body music went off straight—Exhortation, L. M., Buckfield, Liberty, New Jerusalem, Complaint. Their singing would have made an organ leave the house, if it had life and legs. I wish the brethren would practise those old tunes more before the new hymn book is out, and you forget it. There is no need of having such a dead, lazy kind of singing. A little practise will revolutionize our singing.

Rutland. Spent three days with Bro. Carpenter. They are in a very good state. Their debt on the house has been paid. This removes a great burden. Thanks to Bro. Sherman, of Castleton, for lifting five hundred dollars of the load. I think Bro. Carpenter will see a reformation there soon.

Next to Castleton, with Bro. Mathewson two days. Found them in good working order. Bro. M. is laboring in the neighboring districts, which will advance the cause in that region. He is preaching six times a week, and getting better all the time. Had a blessed good time with my old friends Samuel and Beulah, who enlisted in Ct. twenty years ago, and have not run from the enemy yet, nor deserted the field.

Sandy Hill, N. Y., with Bro. Fassett three days. Found them well settled in their new home, with a good church and congregation, and all seemed to go well. This family are in good order to work for God, and are at it. Isms have not done much mischief there. Called on Bro. Parry, but found no one at home. Back to Poultney over the third Sabbath, and heard more of that good singing. A man can afford to preach for less where they have good singing. Thence to Hoosick. Found that same magnetic stubbornness ruling with a rod of iron. Thence to North Adams, where they are in a low state, yet some are trying to live amid the difficulties of the times. They have had some of the same elements to contend with as in Savoy and Hoosick, but some are getting their eyes open about these fanatical moves, such as discerning of spirits, judging, etc.

I am happy to say for the benefit of Bro. George Otis and others, that he has seen his error and has returned to his right mind, and is now influenced by the Spirit of God instead of that mesmeric spirit that led him astray, that made him so wild and fanatical. He mourns over his course, and tells me that he would say he had no religion in those fanatical movements; then he would say they were from the Lord. He is out straight, and wants the world to know it. He is at work for good wages on the Hoosac Tunnel week days, and preaches Sundays, and is doing well. Pray for him, for the fanatics oppose him for denouncing this delusion.

We had a good time with the North Adams brethren preaching on the signs. They still love the coming of the Lord, and are rising again. A number of prominent citizens were out and listened with good attention, and bought a good number of tracts, which will continue to preach. While at North Adams, I visited the great Tunnel in the mountain. It looked to me like the greatest piece of foolishness the State ever undertook. Just imagine a mountain ten to twelve hundred feet high, four and a half miles long, to be bored through solid rock large enough to let through two trains of cars side by side; then take the time the work has been going on, and only one mile of the easiest of it bored in eight years. How doubtful the end looks. Going to the first well or shaft, and see men let down in a great iron bucket three hundred and fifty feet under ground, each having a candle to see to work by, I thought of a Papal purgatory or Protestant horrible pit. This hole is to let in air and draw out the blasted stone. One ten-bore power pump to take up the water, and a fan to blow down air, all operated by an engine, which appears both splendid and foolish. The next well or shaft is going to be eleven hundred and twenty feet, and men have got to go down into the lowest hell to work for twenty cents an hour. If time should last, men can not to dig three and a half miles in such a place as this. I came away satisfied to keep above ground as long as possible. I left a wiser man viewing the foolishness of others, satisfied with the work of God and his promises for working for him. HIRAM MUNGER.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Benj. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—Since writing before, I have visited Hope, where I found a good company of believers, and a good interest to hear. There is much encouragement to labor in that town; they will be glad to receive any who may come to hold forth the truth. I was well received, hospitably used, and helped on my journey. I stopped at Washington and got up a meeting, and had a good hearing. Next day traveled ten miles on foot, scattering tracts and papers, and then took the stage and traveled ten miles more, and arrived at Augusta, where is a good company of believers, firm in the faith, rooted and grounded in the truth. But there is a lack of union; they do not draw together. I am grieved to see so many churches of Advent believers scattered and divided about forms and ceremonies, and points of doctrine. The church in Augusta might, no doubt, be greatly increased, if union and harmony prevailed among the brethren. They have three who preach occasionally.

I next visited Mechanic's Falls, where Bro. Hastings held his tent meeting, and saw some of the fruit of his labors. A happy company of believers are there gathered, and have lately set up their banner.

Visited West Poland, an old, well established body of believers, with a neat, commodious house of worship, and two preaching brethren, with three at Mechanic's Falls. Thanks be to God, he is raising up young men after his own heart, who will feed the people with true knowledge. It rejoices my heart to see how God is providing and qualifying men to preach the gospel of the kingdom.

Went to Casco, where live two families of Adventists, Brn. Staples and Watson. They are a little away from any great traveled route, but would be glad to receive calls from any of the servants of God who feed the people with truth. It is a good place to build up the cause. The people heard with respect and attention, and I felt it good to be there. They did what they could to help me on my journey.

I next came to Windham Centre. Found a few good souls here alive, active, and loving the truth, willing to make sacrifice for it. Then came to South Windham, where until lately the cause has been low, yet this season it has revived and quite a number have put on Christ by baptism, and are going on their way rejoicing, growing in grace. I enjoyed my visit among them, had a good hearing, and felt that good was done.

I am now in a region of country where I began my missionary labors in 1841, twenty-three years ago, and it fills my heart with joy as I visit among the families I then visited. I called on a family, where there were a number of children, and a young man who did not belong to the family. I began to exhort them. A woman sat at the loom in the room weaving. She watched with interest my exhortations, as I exhorted one and another, until I had said something to all. The young man began to oppose and to reprove me for frightening the family, as he said, for I held up the idea of Jesus' soon coming. I asked who was frightened; are you yourself frightened? "No," said he, confidently, "you never can frighten me with such stuff. No, never!" I turned to the oldest girl, and inquired, are you frightened? "No," and to the next, putting the same question. "No;" and to the next, and so on, until I had put the question to all the children; all answered "No." Then I turned to the woman still sitting at the loom. I had observed the loom had stopped, and she was listening. I put the question to her, Are you frightened? And she burst out crying like a child. And that young man was completely silenced. Her tears spoke louder than words, and a solemnity came over all. Now I could exhort them all, even the young man and the woman, and I saw the Lord had given me the victory, by the tears of that woman, though she spake not a word. Other scenes of interest I well remember.

Twenty-three years have past away, and again I am on the same ground, doing the same work, having passed through many scenes of sorrow and joy, seen much to grieve me, and make me sigh, and much to rejoice my heart, and fill my whole soul with gratitude and praise. I find myself an old man, much worn with cares and much labor, yet I love the work as well as ever. The Lord has raised me up to praise his name and declare his truth to the people, and I love to do it. I am satisfied with my field of labor (the highways and hedges), and with my salary, too, though I do not get so much as Paul did. I never have had thirty-nine lashes, never was stoned all but to death, have been in some perils, had some little persecution, yet out of them all God has delivered me; yes, and he will deliver me, and be with me to the end. I know in whom I have believed; blessed be the name of God! and I can trust in him, and not be afraid; though the earth be removed out of its place; though the times of trouble come; though there is terror by night and arrows (or bullets and shells) flying by day; though pestilence rage, and destruction come at noon-day; though a thousand fall at my side, and ten thousand at my right hand, yet it will not come nigh me; because I make the Lord my trust, even the Most High my habitation.

Hold on, brethren and sisters, a little longer; soon we shall see the King in his beauty, even Jesus, in all his Father's glory, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and join with the blood-washed company in singing blessing, and honor, thanksgiving and power, to God and to the Lamb, in a world without end. Amen. Yours, looking for Jesus, BENJ. SPAULDING.

Windham, Me.

From Bro. H. Rockwell.

BRO. GRANT:—After confessing that I have done many foolish and wicked things in departing from the living God, I would now with shame and deep, heartfelt contrition and almost overwhelming sorrow, pray God to forgive, and I here anew consecrate my all, my life, and my only surviving child, with the world and all things that are therein, to the immediate service of my divine Master and the good of his cause. O, my brother, when I retrospect the past, and come to that place in the old Clifton sawmill, where you called upon me long time ago in the silent watches of the night, when all others were locked in the embrace of sleep,—while I sawed for the bread that perisheth, and you wandered lonely and oppressed, endeavoring to find a bride for your Master, and trying to persuade others to seek that bread which cometh down from God out of heaven, when the gate being shut, and the whole place being as silent, and to me as solemn as the house of death, when nothing was heard but the gentle ripplings of the water, and the refreshing breeze of the atmosphere, you and I, then and there, bowed the knee before God in holy consecration to him. Thank God! Bro. Grant has nobly redeemed his pledge, while I have gone in the ways of the wicked one, and stood in the way of sinners, and brought leanness and death to my own soul. O! I do repent, and I have commenced a return in these last days of the church's time of peril, trial and temptation, and I do fully believe, that the time of her triumph and complete victory is but a little in the future. Tell all the holy brethren to pray for me, that I may overcome myself, and having done all to stand. O! I long to be saved.

I labor at present with my hands, while my evenings and Sabbaths are to me sweetly spent in trying, in my poor way, to arouse the slumbering church in this region, and hold out the word of life to the impenitent. And I think the prospect grows brighter, and the field of labor widens, and I do believe that soon I shall be able to lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset me, and run with patience the race set before me.

If time and life permit, I hope to have one more interview with you. But if I have to deny myself this privilege, with God's help and your prayers, I will strive to meet you where no separation, sin, sorrow, pain or death can ever come. So let us ever pray that the Great Master may reach forth his plastic hand, all bathed in hallowed blood, and wipe all tears from off all faces.

New Hartford, Ct. H. ROCKWELL.

From Bro. Wm. Sheldon.

BRO. GRANT:—I rejoice that the long night of darkness upon the time of the Savior's coming is ending, and that which has been so long "sealed" is now being understood. This is no vain speculation; it is a movement of heavenly origin, and will bring the Lord.

I became acquainted with Bro. Thurman at the Illinois campmeeting, and promised him I would give his "Chronology" a thorough examination. You and I looked it over a little at the Wisconsin campmeeting. After I separated from you, I went home and spent over a month, day and night, often sitting up a large share of the night, in studying the question over and over, scarcely stopping to preach on Sundays. I was totally unwilling to lend my feeble influence in helping precipitate the church into another bitter disappointment.

I thoroughly analyzed Thurman's Chronology, and am fully satisfied that it is correct in the main. We are upon the eve of a time movement far exceeding that of '43. No failure this time. 1868 will bring the King of glory. Amen. W. SHELDON.

☞ Mrs. Sarah Hutchins, a leading Baltimore sympathizer with the rebels, has been convicted of having sent a sword to Harry Gilmor, and sentenced to pay a fine of $5000 and to be imprisoned for five years at hard labor in the Fitchburg, Mass., House of Correction.

AMY FRANCES WHITE.

Fell asleep in Jesus in Greenville, Ct., Nov. 12th, 1864, Amy Frances, wife of Henry White, aged thirty-seven years and nine months.

For many years the christian religion has been her comfort and support. At the early age of fourteen years she gave her heart to God, and united herself with the Baptist church, of which she remained a member until about seven years previous to her death, when it was her privilege to listen to the joyful news of a soon coming kingdom. She became a believer in the same, and united with the church of Second Advent believers in Danielsonville, Ct. Her christian character was unblemished, and when death came it found her ready for the summons. As the fondest ties which bind mortals to earth were about to be severed she was enabled to say, "God's will be done." She has left a companion and five children, besides a large circle of relatives and friends, to mourn her loss. May the bereaved family have the consolations of the gospel, and be comforted with the thought that the wife and mother sleeps in Jesus. May they all love and serve the God in whom she trusted, and be prepared to meet her in the morning of the resurrection. E. M. FREEMAN.

LIVIA WILKINS.

Died in Rutland, Vt., Oct. 10th, from a complication of diseases, Miss Livia Wilkins, aged thirty-six years.

The deceased, although for sometime frail, was constant at the means of grace, prompt in duty, steadfast in faith and hope. She rests from labor and from sufferings, but the comfort of hope is left her sisters and surviving friends. H. F. C.

MARRIED.

In Searsport, Me., Nov. 24th, 1864, by Rev. John Adams, Mr. EZRA F. TREAT, of Searsport, to Miss MARY E LARRABEE, of Frankfort, Me.

In Concord, N. H., Nov. 23d, by Rev. Dr. Cummings, Mr. A. DAMAN FOLLANSBEE, of Dorchester, to Miss SARAH M. MESSER, of Sutton.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 11th.]

The Shipping Gazette believes that the steamer to which Semmes and his men were transferred by the Laurel off Madeira, was the Sea King, of 1200 tons, which recently cleared from London for Bombay.

It is stated that the last vessel destroyed by the Florida before her capture at Bahia, was the Mandarin, from Rio Janeiro for Baltimore.

Under the influence of the details of the capture of the Florida, the English journals indignantly denounce the affair.

The London Herald believes that events such as these will speedily force European nations to interfere in the American difficulty for their own security.

There had been a great inundation at Florence. The streets were flooded, fields laid waste, and roads broken up. The damage was enormous. But few lives were lost.

New and more liberal press laws were spoken of in Spain.

The La France says Brazil has broken off relations with the United States on account of the seizure of the Florida.

TWO DAYS LATER.

Liverpool, Nov. 12. Capt. Semmes was on board the new cruiser Sea King, when she received her crew from the Laurel, off Madeira. He explained to the men what he expected them to do in the rebel service. Considerable of a row ensued, and out of about one hundred men, thirty-six declined to go.

The Paris Patrie asserts that England has called upon the great Powers to protest collectively against the seizure of the Florida.

The reported probable retirement of Drouyn De L'Huys is repeated by the Paris correspondent of the London Times.

King Victor Emmanuel and the Empress of Russia exchanged visits at Turin.

Insurrectionary movements are again reported in Venetia. Armed bands had made demonstrations in Friuli and Benzone. Troops were in pursuit of them.

The King of the Belgians is on a visit to Napoleon at Compeigne.

DOMESTIC.

The following is taken from the Savannah Republican of the 21st inst.:

Corinth, Nov. 18, via Selma, Nov. 18.

To the People of Georgia:

Arise for the defense of your native soil. Rally around your patriotic Governor and gallant soldiers. Obstruct and destroy all the roads in Sherman's front, flank and rear, and his army will soon starve in your midst. Be confident, be resolute; trust in an overruling Providence, and success will soon crown your efforts. I hasten to join you in the defense of your homes and firesides.

(Signed) G. T. BEAUREGARD.

St. Louis, Nov. 23. Advices from Fayetteville, Ark., say Col. Brooks, with 25,000 rebels, attacked that place Oct. 28th, but were repulsed with considerable loss. From that time to the 3d inst., the town was pretty thoroughly invested, when Fagan, with about 6000 of Price's retreating army, came up and bombarded the place five hours with two pieces artillery, but were held at bay until the next day, when Gens. Curtis and Blunt arrived, and the repels skedaddled. The rebels lost nearly 1000 killed and wounded. Our loss was one man killed.

A missionary, who traveled some forty miles with Price in Arkansas, reports that Price told him he lost over 10,000 men in killed, wounded and deserters, and that his expedition into Missouri had been most disastrous.

New York, Nov. 25. Sheridan's cavalry have had another successful engagement with Early's army. The Herald's dispatches say that on Monday last three divisions of cavalry, under Custar, Powell and Devin, set out to ascertain the rebel position and strength. No resistance of importance was met until Tuesday when the main army of the rebels, about 15,000 infantry and a division of cavalry, was found at Rood's Hill, a portion almost as strong as Fisher's Hill. Fighting immediately ensued and lasted six hours, during the greater part of the time very severe.

Early made repeated attempts to flank Custar and Powell, but was foiled every time. Some magnificent charges were made by the Union cavalry. The rebels showed but little spirit in the engagement. After gaining sufficient information of Early's strength our forces commenced to retire. Feeble attempts to follow and annoy them were made by the rebels. Our loss altogether was only sixty. The report that some of Early's men have been withdrawn from the valley is confirmed, but the rebels say they have been replaced by scattered detachments gathered from various sections.

New York, Nov. 26. The St. James, Lovejoy's and Belmont hotels were on fire last night, but suffered no real damage.

The fires last night were made with phosphorus, and it is thought for the purpose of robbery. In Barnum's Museum the panic struck audience was robbed most thoroughly in the great smoke and confusion that ensued. In the hotels the robbers did not succeed so well. A woman hailing from Baltimore was arrested at the Metropolitan Hotel under circumstances that involve her in serious suspicion. She strongly protests innocence. Several other arrests were also made.

It appears that the woman arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the incendiary fires last night arrived in the city but a few days since from Baltimore, and took a room at the St. Nicholas Hotel. Last night just before the fire broke out there she went to the Lafarge House, stayed a short time, and left just before the fire broke out there. She then went to the Metropolitan and engaged a room, the fire breaking out there very soon afterward. Although closely questioned she refused to disclose the nature of her business here. Certain papers found in her room pointed so strongly to a man stopping at the Lafarge House, who was recently discharged from Fort Lafayete on the ground that he was a British subject, as an accomplice, that he was also arrested. He was very nervous and excited when taken, and disclaimed any connection with the affair.

The manner in which the fires were produced showed a preconcerted plot. In the hotels the beds, clothes, trunks, etc., were covered with phosphorus. Matches were also scattered in the beds. The fires were then set and the rooms locked. As in the July riots the thieves swarmed about the hotel doors ready to rush in and plunder when the fire was under way. But the timely appearance of the police prevented this portion of the programme from being carried out.

The panic at the Museum was intense, but fortunately the fire was quickly subdued. The bottle containing the phosphorus was found, and is like those used by incendiaries elsewhere.

At the Winter Garden a terrible panic was created by [illegible]. The entire fire department was aroused, and together with the police, measures were adopted for the safety of life and property for the remainder of the night.

The attempt which was really well planned has failed. It has shown what might be done here and elsewhere, and will inspire increased vigilance throughout the North.

New York, Nov. 26. The Tribune's dispatch from Sheridan's army says Early has retreated with his whole infantry force to Staunton, abandoning the valley. It is thought he will go to Richmond.

The Macon Telegraph says: We have reliable information to the effect that the Yankees are advancing in two columns—one on the McDonoghue road and the other via Jonesboro. Our forces are at Griffin.

The Intelligencer publishes the following: The latest reliable news from the front in Georgia says Gen. Wheeler fought the enemy, who was advancing with a force estimated at 25,000 or 30,000 in two columns, ten miles above Griffin until late in the evening, when he fell back to Griffin. It is probable that by this time Sherman occupies Griffin, and will rapidly operate on Macon and Milledgeville. We learn that Gov. Brown's residence and outbuildings were burned to the ground at Canton, by the vandal foe, a few days ago. The officer in command only allowed the family fifteen minutes to remove their furniture from the house and all that was not removed in that time was burnt. The same party burnt the court house, academy, both hotels, jail and about two-thirds of the best dwellings and business houses in Canton.

It is now evident that Sherman has inaugurated a winter campaign, and that Georgia is the field, which be designs to desolate. A terrible crisis is therefore upon us. Every man in the State able to bear arms should rally to the rescue.

New York, Nov. 26. The Herald's New Orleans correspondent says that on the 18th inst. a Union expedition to La Fourche District attacked and defeated a rebel force, destroyed their camp baggage and a number of boats.

It is said that the would-be rebel Governor of Louisiana has organized at Shreveport ten regiments of negroes, to be armed and equipped from the proceeds of cotton sales at Matamoras.

It is reported that the rebel Gen. Buckner has 10,000 men at Alexandria, La., where, it is said, there are abundant supplies of beef and corn.

A gentleman has arrived in New Orleans with permission from President Lincoln to bring into the Union lines 20,000 bales of cotton.

Dispatches from the Army of the Potomac report all quiet. Weather fair, and roads improving.

GARIBALDI.—An English secessionist, who had represented Garibaldi as speaking adversely to the cause of our Government, is set right by Garibaldi himself, who says in a recent letter:

"My opinion on the American question is well known. Not only do I hope from it the abolition of slavery, but I consider the question to be one affecting all mankind, and woe to the world if the North does not come out victorious from this struggle."

Conference in Holden.

A conference will be held in Holden, Mass., at the Town Hall, commencing Wednesday, Dec. 21st, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Preaching by different ministering brethren. Prayer and conference meeting at 10 A. M., preaching at 2 P. M., and also at 6 in the evening.

All in Holden and its vicinity who love God and the salvation of sinners, and desire to know and understand the truth, and be prepared for the day of his coming, are cordially invited. Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, but exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. Pray for God's blessing upon the meeting.

In behalf of the church, H. K. FLAGG.

Dedication.

Providence permitting, the Advent Chapel at Chichester, N. H., (Pine ground), will be dedicated to the worship of God Saturday, Dec. 10th., at ten o'clock A. M. The meeting will hold over Sunday. Brn. N. Glidden, J. Pinkham, and others, are expected. J. G. SMITH.

Meeting at Lowell, Mass.

Bro. Grant will commence a meeting at Lowell, Sunday, Dec. 4th, and continue each evening through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Brethren and sisters from abroad are invited to attend. DANIEL CHURCHILL, for the Brn.

Conference at Lee, N. H.

A conference will commence at Lee, (Union House,) Dec. 18th, and continue as long as may be duty. Bro. C. S. Emerson will be expected; and all who feel like working for the salvation of sinners are invited to attend. WIER DAVIS.

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session with the church in Danielsonville, Conn., commencing the first Wednesday in January. The friends of Jesus and others are invited to attend. A. C. GREENE, Secy.

An Important Meeting.

GENERAL ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE OF THE NORTH WEST.

This conference will hold its first session in Buchanan, Berrien Co., Mich., to commence Dec. 8, 1864.

Eld. Wm. C. Thurman has been invited, and has consented to meet with us, and aid us in the examination of the "times and seasons." Other Bible students, sympathizing in this good work, are invited to be present and take part in our deliberations.

The following important questions may receive attention:

I. Are the "times and seasons" to be understood before the Advent?

II. The 2300 days of Daniel 8: 14. When did they begin? Are the 70 weeks a part of this number? What decree or commandment marks their beginning? that of Cyrus or that of Artaxerxes? and what year B. C. was the decree given?

III. The age of the world, and the Great Sabbath, or Millenium.

IV. The Seven Times. Lev. 26: 28.

V. The Great Jubilee.

VI. The year of Release.

VII. The 1260, 1290 and 1335 years of Dan. 7 and 12. When will Daniel stand in his lot?

OTHER QUESTIONS.

1. The gospel of the kingdom, Matt. 24: 14. Knowledge increasing, Dan. 12: 4. The first angel's message, Rev. 14: 6. Are they the same?
2. Can the second and third angels' messages be applied to the Protestant church by any correct system of interpretation?
3. Are the Jews to be restored to Palestine, and if so, when, and for what object?
4. Will the meek inherit the earth at the coming of Christ, and dwell therein forever? And will the wicked be finally punished with everlasting destruction; or live eternally, in indescribable misery and torment?

The conference will hold its sittings about ten days; all of which will be filled up with work, holding three sessions a day.

All are invited, who have an interest in, and can contribute to the good of the meeting. Look the subjects over; prepare your views; come prepared to present them—write them out, and then review them, and re-write, if necessary, and perfect them. Put them into the smallest possible compass. See that you apply the laws of interpretation rightly, and thus get the true meaning of the Holy Spirit.

We are in the "time of the end," and many are "running to and fro," and "searching to and fro," "and knowledge is increasing." There is more light to come! Let us be ready for it. Let us seek for it as hid treasure. According to the best authorities on Chronology and prophetic interpretation we stand on the margin of the new world. Only a few years are to elapse before we shall see the King in his beauty. And if this be so, then as watchmen, we ought to know, and proclaim the time of night. Let us, like Daniel, having found out by the sacred books (Dan. 9: 2) that the time is nigh for the deliverance of God's people, give ourselves to prayer, and fasting, and confession. Let us ask our God to give us light on these grand and all important themes, and he will help us, and show us wondrous things out of his law.

Until the conference shall meet, let us make it a subject of daily prayer. Let all the churches, and isolated believers do this. Let us be in earnest about this matter, and like Daniel, not give it up till all is plain. Let us confess our sins, as he did. "We have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts and thy judgments; neither have we hearkened to thy servants, the prophets, which spake in thy name." Let us plead for the scattered flock, for the tried and tempted ones without shepherds. Let us plead with him to raise up shepherds, to feed and prepare the flock for the judgment; and so gather his people out from all classes and associations, that they may be pure and all ready for the day of the Lord.

A Quarterly Conference at Portsmouth, N. H.

A quarterly session of the Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire, will be held in Portsmouth, commencing Dec. 1st, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope those who come to this meeting, will come filled with the spirit of the Master, prepared to labor for the upbuilding of the saints, and the salvation of those who are out of Christ, that great good may be done. A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Religious Notice.

Providence permitting, Elder Edwin Burnham will commence a series of meetings with the Free Evangelical Church in North Attleboro, Mass., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 20th, to continue several weeks. We earnestly hope and pray that many precious souls may, as the result of these meetings, be made ready for a home in the kingdom of God. We invite our friends in the surrounding region to attend and labor with us.

C. CUNNINGHAM.

Meetings at Rocky Brook, R. I.

If the Lord will, Albion Ross will commence a series of meetings at Rocky Brook, (Peacedale) R. I., on Saturday evening, Dec. 10th, and continue as long as may be duty. May God give the increase. H. L. HASTINGS.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co., now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. As the new hymn book is not to be published at present, we have contracted with Bro. Himes for the "Christian Lyre," so that we can supply those who want them in Maine at wholesale and retail. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. WELCOME & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit, and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

Address Wanted.

Can any one furnish us the address of the following persons, and confer a favor?

J. H. Merrill, E. B. Davis, Wm. Babcock, W. J. Thayer.

No Money Enclosed.

A subscriber writes from Red Bluffs, California:—"I enclose $10.00 to pay up arrears and in advance for the Crisis, and also for twenty copies of the Young Pilgrim, for which please give me credit."

Another writes from Jacksonville, N. Y.:—"Enclosed find $2.00, for which please send the Crisis to ——, Vt."

And another from Adams Centre, N. Y.:—"I enclose $2.00. Please send me the Crisis. Direct to ——."

These were all received within a week, and neither of them contained any money. As the envelopes had no appearance of having been opened, the writers probably forgot to enclose it. Such forgetfulness is not unfrequent, especially with the naturally forgetful and absent-minded. Sometimes the mistake comes to mind immediately after mailing, and then we very soon after receive another letter acknowledging the mistake, and enclosing the money; and sometimes the mistake is not discovered. Please be careful to enclose the money.

For the World's Crisis.

"I WILL COME AGAIN."

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—St. John 14: 1, 2, 3.

Let all whose hearts are troubled
At Jesus' long delay,
Behold the signs portending
The near approaching day.

Our Savior's gone before us,
A mansion to prepare,
He's coming to receive us,
We shall his glories share.

Soon in the clouds of heaven
The Bridegroom will appear,
And all whose lamps are burning,
Rejoice that He is near.

The mighty trump shall sound,
The heavens pass away;
The echo shall resound,
And death yield up its prey.

The dead in Christ shall rise,
And those who here remain,
Shall be with them caught up,
And in a moment change.

The kings and mighty men,
The rich, the bond, the free,
On rocks and mountains call,
And strive his wrath to flee.

In vain on these they call
To hide them from the Lamb,
They must be summoned all,
And in his presence stand.

The wicked in his wrath
Are from his presence driven,
They chose the fatal path
Which shuts them out of heaven.

Then all whose names are written
Within the book of life,
Shall hear the joyful welcome,
Receive a crown of life.

And then with shouts of praises
The heavens shall resound;
With honor, power and glory,
We will our Savior crown.

NUMBER SIXTEEN.

Israel at Sinai.

Wild and terrible in its grandeur rose Sinai in the pathway of the tribes. Before its frowning crags remained the pillar of cloud, and there in the vale was pitched the tabernacle, and round it were spread the white tents of Israel. There the people had paused in their journey and sanctified themselves to witness the awful presence and power which Moses had announced would soon appear. A terrible awe filled each heart as the solemn preparations went on, and bounds were set around the mountain's base that the people might not trespass upon the holy ground, for Sinai was to be consecrated forever by the majestic presence of Deity and the sublime surroundings of his glory.

At length the time for the consecration had passed, and the terrible voice of the trumpet of God's angel announced his presence upon the mount. In a moment every eye was gazing upon the lofty mountain's summit, and lo! Sinai was bathed with the effulgent beams of Jehovah, then robed with the pavilions of his presence. Then from the thick folds of the clouds issued the lightnings forth; the adamantine rocks shook with thunders, and the earth trembled at the touch of the footsteps of the Almighty.

In the midst of Sinai's fiery baptism Moses called upon God, and he answered him from the cloud-wreathed summit. And Moses went up into the mount and held converse with God, then returned to see that no one should trespass upon the hallowed ground. But awe had filled each heart; none dared to come even near the mount that quaked beneath the sapphire throne of the Eternal; they even besought Moses to speak to them the words of the Lord, that they might no more listen to his awful voice. Again Moses returned to the presence of Divinity to receive those laws which were to govern a nation through the stormy years to come, till Shiloh should descend and a new dispensation arise.

Alone on the solitary heights of Sinai, alone with Jehovah, Moses received the statutes and ordinances for the government of the hosts of Israel. All the minute particulars for the guidance of their future course were woven into a code to be handed down from generation to generation. The Lord was to be their lawgiver, the Most High their guide in all things.

For forty days and nights Moses remained upon the mount with God, enwrapped in the clouds that veiled the brow of Sinai from the view of the people. Then Moses received the tables of stone engraven with the ten commandments by the finger of God, and prepared to visit the people from whom he had been so long absent.

But in that interim in which Moses was communing with God for the future welfare of Israel, a change sad and strange had come over the people who had so lately consecrated themselves to the service of God. Beneath the very folds of God's pavilion they had turned to idol worship. They had daily seen the evidence of the divine presence upon the mount, and at each return of night the awful crags and towering cliffs of Sinai had been bathed in the lambent flame of Jehovah's glory, which lit up all the scene with effulgent light.

For all this, they feigned to believe that Moses had perished or never more would return to lead them on to the land of promise. Then the gods of Egypt rose before their idle fancy, and they importuned Aaron till he allowed them to gather their golden ornaments, and casting them into the fire there came out a golden calf around which the foolish people bowed and offered up incense.

It was during this scene of wild revel and idolatrous carnival that Moses appeared in view. He beheld the blasphemous scene with astonishment and holy wrath. So lost to all sense of reverence for the covenant that had been made with God did the people seem, that Moses in the terrible mental conflict of the moment dashed to earth the tables of the decalogue and rushed into the midst of the idolatrous scene. He cast the golden god into the fire, and grinding it to powder strewed the dust upon the water that the people drank. The host that so lately was lost in the wild scene of vain idolatry shrank back with guilty fear as the zealous form of their prophet leader swept by. A stern resolve clouded his brow that made every sinner's heart quake with boding vengeance.

Moses stood in the gate of the camp and said, "Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves unto him." And they girded on their swords for the conflict, to vindicate the cause of God, for his law had been trampled on, and his will scorned by the people. It was a terrible ordeal, that controversy of Jehovah with sinful Israel.

Inspired by the divine command, the sons of Levi went forth among the tents of Israel to slay without mercy the transgressors. None were to be spared whose lips had sung the praise of the graven god. A wild cry of anguish went up from the idolatrous camp as the ministers of vengeance approached. At every stroke of the death-dealing swords fell those who had grown up from childhood together, they who had sown in bondage, and had seen the deliverance of Israel, and they who had trod together the dried bed of the Red Sea; the memories of olden years could not intervene between duty and friendship.

When the sun went down that day behind the cloud-environed Sinai, there was death in every tent of Israel, where the transgressors of the law had fallen. The work of God went on till three thousand had fallen victims to the vengeance of Heaven. Then Moses besought the Lord for the people that the avenging hand might be stayed. Those who still survived stood in awe at the doors of their tents as the pillar of God went by to the tabernacle, and the people bowed before the divine presence and worshiped, and the avenging sword was sheathed from slaughter. Again Moses went up to commune with God and have the decalogue engraven once more upon new tables.

It was then that Moses beheld the awful majesty of God after he had passed by, for with mortal eyes Moses could not gaze upon the face of Deity; and on the rock-paved floor of the sublime audience hall of Jehovah he bowed and worshiped with heart of awe and gratitude. Once more he returned to the people with the tables of law. His face shone with a light that dazzled the eye of the beholder, for the glory of the divine scenes still followed him as he divulged the laws he had received for the guidance of the people. For a year the tribes tarried around the base of the solemn mount of God to receive still further the ordinances of Heaven.

Never other people received law with such awful surroundings, and with such scenes to impress the heart with their sacredness. Sinai was made sacred forever by the footsteps of the Eternal, where his law was proclaimed amid the terrific pageantry of his glory. It is vain for the human pen to attempt to picture the solemn scenes there enacted. The mind is lost in wonder while contemplating its scenes, and is dazzled by the brightness of the vision that swept over the horizon of that far distant age when Jehovah talked with man and his footsteps echoed on the high places of earth. Orrin P. Allen.

THE REWARD OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

BY A. FRIESE.

III.—THE MANNER OR MEANS OF ITS RECEPTION.

As immortality is the medium through which the life of the righteous must be perpetuated, the question will now arise, by what means, or in what manner, shall this inestimable "gift of God" be bestowed upon them? The knowledge of this particular is likewise requisite for the perfecting of our "hope," in order that we may see clearly and comprehend fully, our future and eternal destiny. For this purpose was it made known, that we might have hope. We shall, therefore, again resort "to the law and to the testimony:"

"And this is the will of Him that sent me, (says Christ), that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I WILL RAISE HIM UP AT THE LAST DAY."—John 6: 39, 40, 44, 54; 11: 24, 25. "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (the first resurrection). Luke 14: 14; 1 Cor. 15 and 1 Pet. 1: 3—13.

The Psalmist says: "As for me, I will behold Thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I AWAKE with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15; Job 19; 25—27. Again: "But God will redeem my soul (life or being) from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me." Ps. 49: 15; Hosea 13: 14.

Paul desired to have the righteousness which is of God by faith. Says he: "That I may know him, and the power of his RESURRECTION, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of (from, or out from among) the dead." (Paul's earnest desire evidently was to have a part in the first resurrection, FROM the dead, as it should be rendered). Phil. 3: 8—21; Rom. 8: 11, 22, 23; 1 Cor. 6: 14. "By man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead:" i. e., by (the first man), Adam's disobedience was while by (the second man) Christ's obedience and fulfilling of the law was brought forth the resurrection of the dead. Death is the wages of sin so where there is no sin death hath lost its dominion; as Christ, therefore, was without sin; the tomb could not hold him; but he burst the bars of death and hell, (the grave), and rose triumphant. Thus he opened up "a new and living way," or a way to a new life by the recovery from death, and established the resurrection, by means of which he completed the stupendous scheme of human redemption.

"Death brought into the world, and all our woe;"

This truth presents to our understandings the objects and merits of Christ's suffering in obedience under the law, and of his death and rising again to life. Therefore Jesus is called our "REDEEMER." Oh, the beauty and the sweetness in that name! Without him there would have been no future life for mankind. 1 Cor. 15: 21, 29, 42, 45, 50—54, etc. 2 Cor. 4: 14; Acts 26: 6—8; Ezek. 37: 12—14; James 5: 7, 8.

Let no man say that we seek to be wise above what is written; we only desire to know and understand what is written, which is our duty as well as our privilege. Would the many professed teachers (?) of Christendom but confine themselves to "what is written," we are certain they would find enough to learn and to teach, to employ all their time. But, instead of acquainting themselves with the truth, as it is written, and becoming capable of giving proper instruction to others, they pursue their own course—to use a vulgar expression—"go on their own hook," the Lord not having sent them. They study popular fables, such as "the immortality of the soul," etc., and search bigoted and sectarian works and commentaries for their authority. Then, in order to be popular, and please the formal, worldly church, they preach error and presumption—speaking "smooth things," and "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

You may think I am rather severe on the so-called churches and ministers of the times, but not more so than the word of God warrants. Paul says we fight not with carnal weapons; or "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strongholds"—that is, the strongholds of sin and wickedness in high places. 2 Cor. 10: 9–6. Pardon this digression from the main subject.

Those things which have been revealed by God are true and accurate. And "whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Rom. 15: 4.

To resume the subject of the saints' reward or final inheritance, Paul says, again, "I would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, (unconscious in their graves), that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For, if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring (from the dead) with him." "For the Lord himself shall descend... and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and SO (there is no other way) shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words!" 1 Thess. 4: 13—18.

For the World's Crisis.

NAPOLEON III.

An article has lately appeared in a French paper, the "Debats," which for startling significance has hardly been surpassed. It openly announces the revival of the Napoleonic age. It says: "Don't deceive yourselves as to the signs of the times. Did you read that gloomy and solemn sitting of the British Parliament, in which the spectres of the past seemed to arise from the tomb, to utter a cry of warning and alarm? . . . What must be their thoughts on beholding the phantom of their dreams, rising from those ashes, which they themselves had restored to France? They thought the tomb had closed on him forever. Now the deluge has come again, the tide is rising again. In real life, an event so grand and romantic has never before occurred. They thought that the tomb had closed on him forever,—over Napoleon the First. But when we conveyed his ashes from St. Helena, it seems as if his brooding spirit had hung over the hearse. His soul seemed to have attended upon his ashes. It passed away from the Tombs of the Invalides and possessed the body of Napoleon the III. It has impregnated his heart with one idea,—'Vengeance on the Conquerors.' Napoleon actually lives on this one thought. . .

"Fifteenth of August, Napoleon's birthday, the three Napoleons have met together,—the 'Was, and is not, and yet is,'—the fatal three. In vain all Europe united to put them down. In vain Napoleon slept beneath the willow tree, on the Atlantic rock. His son died broken-hearted and forgotten, his nephew lived in exile, or in prison. In spite of spite, Napoleon has risen again, not even singly, but in that triple cord, 'That is not quickly broken.' They thought that the tomb had closed on him forever. They met together as if to revel upon his grave,—when, lo! he rises in their midst, a frowning phantom—extends his sepulchral hands to his exiled nephew; and his exiled nephew stretches out his living arms, and beckons home the ashes of the son. The fatal three meet together amidst devoted legions of armed men, and look with defiance upon mankind. The silent dead and the inscrutable living utter no voice. Their presence alone is a signal sound of fear, and a cry of warning and alarm."

"Is it not the hand of God which has brought together from afar, the fatal three, who make up the characteristic of the wild beast, 'That was, and is not, and yet is? The living and the dead are buried together into one. The cord that unites them is spun by phantom hands, and drawn out through the gates of death, as if to transmit to the living every pulsation of the dead."

Thus we see the Holy Alliance laughed to scorn, which decided that no one of the Bonaparte name, should ever rule France again, and yet Napoleon is the crowning monarch of all. John Taylor.

THE POWER, WISDOM AND GOODNESS OF GOD.

"All nature speaks that Thou art love,
Thy word reveals the same;
All things below, and all above,
Thy boundless love proclaim."

No sooner are the eyes of our understanding opened upon the world around us, than an infinite variety of scenes and objects present themselves to our view, which cannot fail to interest the imagination and to engage the attention of every admirer of the works of creation. The book of nature is full of instruction, and is ever open before us, as if to invite, and to urge us to peruse its beautiful and instructive pages, on which is written in golden capitals of love, the unbounded power, infinite wisdom, the impartial benevolence, and the unsearchable goodness of its great and glorious Author.

Turn to whatsoever part we may, we find that every line and word speaks in the most impressive, though silent language, of the character and attributes of the great Parent of the universe, and declares the glory of his perfection. There is not a benighted corner in the whole range of creation where the most consummate wisdom and intelligence is not manifest,—where the finger of Deity may not be traced,—where his presence is not felt, and his wisdom and power displayed; where the intellectual student of nature does not find himself amidst exhaustless fountains of knowledge and wisdom, at which the intelligent and virtuous mind delights to drink and enjoy gratifications, of which the ignorant and vicious can form no conception, and which are as far superior to the slavish gratifications of man's corporeal senses as the station which he occupies in the scale of beings, is above that of the rude beasts of the field or the wild fowls of the air.

God stretcheth forth his hand and satisfieth the desires of every living thing. And while he is prolonging our lives from day to day and hour to hour he is displaying the glory of his power in worlds unnumbered, far beyond the reach of human vision. And while he is ruling the destinies of nations on earth he is supporting the invisible animalcule in a drop of water. Well then may we adopt the language of the Scripture: "The earth is full of riches," "The heavens declare thy glory, and the firmament showeth thy handiwork," "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty," "Who by searching can find out God?" "Who can find out the Almighty to perfection?" "Who can utter the mighty operations of Jehovah?" "Who can show forth all his praise?" The human mind in its highest capacity can never comprehend the glory of his perfection,—it can form but a contracted conception of the excellences of his character. And his love is as extensive as the works of his hand. His benevolence is unbounded as the richness of his goodness. "Who can feel in his heart to limit the Holy One of Israel?"

God has given us many precepts to obey, in order to secure our salvation. And shall we not strive to do his will, which shall terminate for our best good? Let us ever bear it in mind, that we are dependent on him for life and every breath we draw, and also for every good thing that we receive. Therefore let us worship him and obey his commandments,—obey and put our trust in his all-wise power; for he that puts his trust in God need fear no evil, but may look forward to that life wherein dwelleth righteousness, joy and peace.

The watchman on Zion's wall saith the day dawneth, therefore we should awake out of sleep and be at work in God's vineyard. We should exhort one another daily, and so much the more as we see the day approaching,—the great day of the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior to judge the earth, and cleanse it from all unrighteousness, and to set up his kingdom.

Dear reader, to be a faithful subject in this kingdom should be our highest aim. God grant that we all may be true and loyal subjects, and eventually be permitted to sit down in the kingdom of our Lord and Master, which is shortly, according to prophecy and the signs of the times, to be set up here on the earth. J. Elkins.

WATCH AND PRAY.

In the morning's glowing light,
When the noontide sun is bright,
When the day-beams fade away,
Guard thy spirit, watch and pray.

When with duty's cares perplexed,
Be not overcome nor vexed;
Think not from thyself to stray,
In thy labors watch and pray.

When thy hopes are all fulfilled,
When each anxious thought is stilled,
Clouds of gloom all cleared away,
Then remember, watch and pray.

When in health thy pulses fly,
And the hours pass gaily by,
Then forget not all the day,
That 'tis best to watch and pray.

When temptation lurks around,
Luring to forbidden ground,
Heed not what her voice may say,
Keep thy distance, watch and pray.

When in deep affliction cast,
Deem not all thy sunshine past;
Joy will yet thy spirit sway,
If thou wilt but watch and pray.

And when sickness comes, and pain,
Deem not that their work is vain;
They will make thy darkness day,
If, resigned, thou watch and pray.

SPIRITUALISM.

Some time last January, Miss —— (I do not remember her name), the "inspirational medium," delivered a lecture on "Jesus, the medium," to which I listened. She repeated the Lord's Prayer, and continued thus:—"When man shall have arrived above Jesus, he will not have to say 'Our Father in heaven,' for he will see God, being pure in heart." And further on in her prayer she said, "O God! save us from idol worship; whether it be Socrates, or Jesus, or God; for thou art a Spirit, and we must worship thee in spirit," etc.

After hearing this extraordinary prayer, I was prepared, I thought, for whatever else she might say; but was perfectly amazed at what followed. I can only give a short sketch of her most striking assertions, but as near as possible in her own words. She said Jesus taught false doctrines, viz: "that he was coming again to destroy the world; thet he taught eternal damnation, a personal God, a personal devil, and gave his disciples to understand that he would soon return. Why did he not undeceive them? Of his death and resurrection, it was said his body was raised from the grave. Well, suppose it was so? How is it recorded? Matthew says an angel came and rolled back the stone, and sat upon it, etc. Mark says they saw a young man in a long white garment, etc. Luke says they saw two men in shining garments, etc. John says two angels were sitting, one at the feet, the other at the head, where the body of Jesus had lain.

"One says one was seen in a long white garment. John says Mary saw two men. Now which will you believe? But we are only supposing it was so. Of his crucifixion, one was sent to break his legs, but on coming there it was found he was dead. Now mark you, his legs were not broken, though those of the others were. And then Joseph, one of his disciples, begged his body. It is said a soldier thrust his spear into Jesus' side,—John is the only one who mentions this fact. Commentators say that perhaps John was the Apocalypse writer and that this is figurative language.

"Joseph was a rich man; and you all know what money will do. But we are only supposing. All those who had the matter in hand were Jesus' friends. It was John—the beloved—who said the soldier thrust a spear into Jesus' side; it was Joseph who took him to a tomb where man never was laid. Now how can you believe he ever was laid there? He comes to his disciples; Mary sees him in the garden, and does not know him; others see him at other places. * * * Suppose he did not die? Joseph was rich, and money, you know, will bribe most men to do almost anything. Now money might be a temptation to the Roman soldiers to say what they did in the matter. Now if that was so (if he was not really dead), he escaped from the tomb (even if he was put there) by the stone being taken away. Suppose he did not die? It was a very innocent deception to say that he was dead, after being taken from the cross to put in the tomb. He might have been concealed till he saw fit to let his disciples see him.

"Of his birth. Some of the evangelists give a long list of his ancestors, naming each one far back; others give but a few of them. They contradict each other in this, as they do in other events of his life and death. His birth was unnatural. Does it look reasonable that such a birth, which never before happened, and never has since, ever did take place? Does it look reasonable that the record of what purports to be facts, which is contradictory, is true? Would such testimony be taken in any court of justice? I do not say it is false; I only suggest that it may be so. * * In his teachings he says some shall sit on the right hand, and some on the left of his Father in heaven,—just as though one hand was better than the other."

I have endeavored to give as briefly as I could her remarks. If I have erred any, it is unintentional; and if any who may have heard the lady see any mistake in the above, they will please point it out, and I will stand corrected.

In a poem entitled "The Famished Heart," which she delivered at the close of her lecture, the doctrine of free-love, licentiousness, and hero-worship was cautiously advanced: for instance, such as this:—

"Man's cruel, sensual, selfish love,
Is better than no love at all."

though it may seem to have been denied in another verse. And when the "famished heart" had "passed on" to the "spirit land," its spirit met a spirit, and inquired, "Where is the Son of man?" "Which 'son of man'? the spirit asked." "The one who died on Calvary, I said." "To which he said, 'I'm he!'" and the "famished heart" was about to fall down at his feet, when he pointed to Socrates' spirit for comfort and rest, etc., saying,

"Before I lived, lived he;
And he it was that died for me";

and much more of a similar nature. It was a well delivered poem, and very beautiful language; but it lacked the most important thing, viz: truth.

Now when language like this is used concerning the Bible and its teachings; when such bold blasphemy is spoken against the Savior, and much more that is worse, it is time that christians stood firmly up against such a doctrine. When they so defiantly arraign the Son of God as a deceiver, calling his declarations in question, ridiculing his doctrine, his sufferings and death, as this medium did, throwing doubt over his resurrection, and making him only a very good man at the most; let us bear in mind who it is that is to judge the world, and pass a final sentence, never to be disputed by the boldest God-defying mortal that ever lived; and never to be revoked—no, never. And then it will be seen who is right; then people will not be in doubt who or what to believe. But then it will be too late to learn. And then may we all be on the "right hand" of our Father; for to those only will He say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." And then Spiritualists and all will see which hand is the best. J. N. Berry.

PREACHING.

There is preaching, and what is it? "O Lord, help thy servant to preach, and teach him by thy Spirit what to say." Then out comes the manuscript, and they read it. A pure insult to Almighty God! We have preaching, but it is of this order. It is not preaching. It is speaking very beautifully and very finely, possibly eloquently, in some sense of the word; but where is the right down preaching such as Whitfield's? Have you ever read one of his sermons? You will not think him eloquent; you can not think him so. His expressions were rough, frequently coarse and unconnected; there was very much declamation about him; it was a great part, indeed, of his speech.

But where lay his eloquence? Not in the words you read, but in the tone in which he delivered them, and in the earnestness with which he felt them, and in the tears that ran down his cheeks, and in the pouring out of his soul. The reason why he was eloquent was just what the word means. He was eloquent because he spoke right out from his heart—from the the innermost depths of the man. You could see when he spoke that he meant what he said. He did not speak as a trader, or a mere machine, but he preached what he felt to be the truth, and what he could not help preaching. When you heard him preach you could not help feeling that he was a man who would die if he could not preach, and with all his might call to men and say, "Come! come! come to Jesus Christ, and believe on him!"

Now, that is just the lack of these times. Where, where is the earnestness now? It is neither in pulpit, nor yet in pen, in such a measure as we desire it; and it is a sad, sad age, when earnestness is scoffed at, and when the very zeal which ought to be the prominent characteristic of the pulpit is regarded as enthusiasm and fanaticism. I ask God to make us all such fanatics as most men laugh at—to make us all just such enthusiasts as many despise.—Spurgeon.

Supposed Fulfillment of Prophecy.—A London paper calls attention to the fact that "the year 1866, which Louis Napoleon has fixed on as the time for withdrawing his troops from Rome—which will be virtually leaving the Papacy in that city to its fate—is the very year which nearly all our most eminent commentators on the New Tesment and writers on prophecy, from the time of Bishop Newton downward, have, by a wonderful concurrence of opinion, named as the year in which Popery is to receive its death-blow."

Toilet for Gentlemen.—For preserving the complexion—Temperance.
To preserve the breath sweet—Abstinence from tobacco.
For whitening the hands—Honesty.
To remove a stain—Repentance.
Easy shaving soap—Ready money.
For improving the sight—Observation.
A beautiful ring—A family circle.
For improving the voice—Civility.
The best companion at the toilet—A wife.

A Powerful Disinfectant.—The fumes of burning coffee have long been known to act as a powerful disinfectant. Experiments have been made to prove this. A quantity of meat was hung up in a closed room until decomposed, then a chafing-dish introduced, and five hundred grammes of coffee thrown on the fire. In a few moments the room was completely disinfected. In another room sulphureted hydrogen and ammonia were developed, and ninety grammes of coffee destroyed the smell in about half a minute.

Sealing Wax for Fruit Cans.—Take resin, eight ounces; gum shellac, two ounces; beeswax, one-half ounce; and if you desire to have it colored, English vermillion, one and a half ounces. Melt the resin and stir in the vermillion if used. Then add the shellac slowly, and afterward the beeswax.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

HEADACHE.

It may have a multitude of causes. A blow on the head may occasion it. A tumor may be the exciting cause. Ardent spirits may excite it. Intense excitement of the nervous system, exposure to a cold, damp atmosphere, or to foul air in which is much carbonic acid gas, or to hot sunshine, often produce headache. By far the larger share of headache, however, has its origin in the following circumstances, to wit: That foul state of the system, particularly the stomach and bowels caused either by bad dietetic habits, or by an insufficient elimination of morbid matter thro' the bowels, skin, lungs or kidneys. A stomach overloaded with indigestible food, obstructions in the bowels, an inactive liver, skin or kidneys, all have a tendency to produce that morbid condition which results in sick or other headache. I have little doubt that it is often caused by bad air in persons whose habits otherwise are in the main correct. The tendency of the confined and impure air in unventilated bedrooms, crowded and overheated churches, school-houses and places of public resort to produce headache, is proverbial. Anything that tends to prevent the complete aeration of the blood, as sedentary habits, want of exercise, improper bodily positions, as bending over school desks, stooping, as in sewing, may and often does result in this disease. Corsets and tight clothing about the waist prevent the complete oxygenization of the blood by thorough respiration, in the same way that confined air and want of exercise do, and often result in headache.

Excessive exercise of any function may produce headache. An extra exertion of the muscular system, particularly if in close rooms or where the feet are kept cold and damp, and the head dry and hot, or the violent exercise of any passion or emotion may not unfrequently produce this disorder. Many cases occur as the effect of exposure to hot sunshine. Hot cakes with melted butter, bakers' bread, rich gravies and condiments, the indigestible and obstructing dressings used on turkeys and chickens on thanksgivng and other similar occasions, produce much of the headache, and often more dangerous diseases, which so often occur after holidays. I once knew a person who almost always had a headache after eating old cheese, and another who rarely failed to have an attack after eating buckwheat cakes covered with butter and molasses. Headache is not a dangerous disease, but it is a very annoying one. To feel as if you must be a martyr to it periodically for a lifetime is not very pleasant, particularly when it is prone to appear at those times when you have, or desire to make more than ordinary exertions. To be unable to make any engagement without fearing that it may either prevent your fulfilling it, or destroy your pleasure or usefulness, is certainly most annoying.

In its treatment much can be done by way of prevention. In a multitude of persons it can be almost or entirely prevented; in others it can be more or less modified in its severity, and shortened in its duration. To eradicate it from the system, its causes, be they prominent or obscure, must be sought out. This is not always an easy matter, particularly when the patient is sure his or her habits are perfectly correct. It is not easy to see with the eyes the connection between certain habits in which we think we take pleasure in indulging, and their logical consequence, headache, because we cannot look at the effects produced. A horse breaks into our corn-field and destroys the grain. We see the spoiled ears, the horse's tracks, the broken fence, and trace the effect back to its cause, the unruly horse. Perhaps we go still farther back, and find out that the field was not well guarded by a good fence, or the watchful care of the husbandmen. In almost all cases the farmer who finds his crop destroyed can trace back the effect to a cause, or, if he cannot, he knows some cause exists. This comes in great part from the fact that occular demonstration makes the matter evident. In headache, however, those who are not physiologists cannot trace the connection between them; hence they are apt to attribute it to anything but the true source. The last thing that they did they think produced it, and that was unavoidable. The horse may, however, jump into the corn-field because the fence is low, and the last thing the patient did may have produced headache—often does—because the system is in just the condition to allow it. A person lives on fine bread, hot rolls, pork, gravies, does not bathe, and has headache. These habits are all perfectly simple! True, but they most surely produce constipation, and obstruction of the channels of circulation, and these produce headache.

The preventive means are thorough, most scrupulous cleanliness, not alone of the skin and external surface, but of all the avenues, all the large and small channels of circulation for the fluids of the body. Cleanliness is next to godliness, but it must not stop with the external surface, when the internal is of much greater consequence. Cleanliness can be secured only through the means appointed by nature for that end. These are the bowels, the skin, the kidneys and the lungs. How these different channels for depurating matter may be kept in the highest state of healthy activity, is a matter of much importance to those who would retain or improve their health. The laws which regulate bodily cleanliness will now be considered.

In the domain of organic life there is constant activity. Activity begets a using up of the substance of the active organs, a breaking down of its parts. Take the brain for instance. In using it vigorously for an entire day a portion of it is used up by being converted into debris, or broken down tissue. In this state it is little different from decayed flesh, but it is still in the body, and kept there produces uncleanliness. It is this decayed, unclean matter that causes fetid breath and unpleasant odors to arise from the skin and from the evacuations. In other words, the body becomes unclean by the decay of its own substance—at least this is one of the sources Another is the eating of too much food. The law which relates to the quantity of food is, as much as the system requires and can properly digest, and this depends upon the person, his habits, and various other circumstances. No doubt in health, and when the appetite is normal, we can to a great extent be guided by it, but in too many cases the appetite is more likely to lead us astray than to the right quantity. Superfluity of food is not only useless but injurious. It cannot be well digested nor assimilated, but passes into the circulation, partially or wholly decays, and thus adds another source of uncleanliness and obstruction. I am no advocate for low and meager diet. Every human being needs and must have sufficient food to be well nourished, but persons of sedentary and inactive habits are very apt to take more than nature requires, and this excess often occasions headache. Still another cause of uncleanliness of the body is the indigestion of food that is not of the best quality. It is not enough for the healthy support of the body that the amount of food ingested should be sufficient; it is equally important that it be wholesome.

Dr. Carpenter says in his Physiology that "It is a fact familiar to German Toxicologists, that cheese, bacon, sausages, and many other articles may spontaneously undergo such deleterious alterations as to give rise, when employed as food, to all the symptoms of irritant poisoning, and which may even pass on to produce fatal consequences." I am strongly inclined to believe that the large amount of pork and lard, gravy and fine bread in the shape of hot biscuit and cakes has much to do with producing a filthy condition of the stomach and alimentary canal, and such thickness of the blood as results in headache and often in more serious diseases. Of all the kinds of flesh used for food in America, pork is the worst. It possesses very little nutritive power, and that of the lowest order. Just now pork costs forty dollars a barrel; corn costs less than one sixth as much by weight! The corn crop of the state of Iowa this year is estimated at eight millions of bushels, and the only remark the estimate calls forth is: "A fair and much needed prospect for the hog of which our state has such a large share." Who will estimate the number of headaches Iowa hogs will occasion? People who live in the city will often inquire: "Why is the hog unwholesome?" And the answer might be: "If for no other reason, because he is always kept so filthy." The same necessity exists for purity and high quality of food as exists for good timber in constructing a ship that is to withstand the blast of the ocean. Food is the timber from which our bodies are constructed. and their quality depends, digestion and assimilation being equal, upon its quality.

It is a common belief that the hygienic system of medicine advocates an unnutritious, meager, insipid diet. It advocates just the reverse, a nutritious, abundant and luxurious diet. I have occasionally dined at a boarding-house table where the subject of diet has been discussed, and while boarders and others have taken occasion to pronounce anathemas against a hygienic table as one that produced starvation, they have done most of the starving themselves. Many a man becomes starved on the diet of boarding-houses and hotels, for want of sufficient nutrition, and purity of food. I have been led to these remarks on food, because cleanliness of the body depends so much upon it, and headache is so often the result of uncleanliness.

Nature's method of removing the broken down and decaying portions of the body is accomplished through the bowels, the skin, the kidneys and the lungs. Even with the best of food, if these organs become obstructed, uncleanliness will inevitably be the result. The bowels are kept free by coarse bread, ripe fruits, hominy, cracked wheat, an absence of concentrated substances, and abundant exercise. Where the patient is unable to take sufficient exercise, an attendant should percuss and otherwise manipulate the abdomen in a great variety of ways as performed in the Movement Cure. Very often all that is needed to prevent headache, is to remove constipation, obstruction, and torpidity of the liver, stomach and bowels, and the operations of the Movement Cure, with wholesome food, are almost always sufficient.

The skin is kept active for its duties by clothing, friction, exercise, and thorough bathing. If the patient has few of the conveniences for the bath, thorough friction with a damp towel and the hand are often the very best.

The lungs are made to do their duty by giving them all the pure air they need at all times and under all circumstances. If they are contracted so as to do less than they should, they must be trained or educated in the gymnasium, and by means of the Movement Cure, or medical gymnastics, so as to increase their size.

The kidneys need only pure water as a beverage in addition to the fluids found in ripe fruits to be sufficiently active, in addition to exercise, which, when judicious, provokes all the excretory organs to their duty.

To treat a case of sick headache in addition to the preventive measures mentioned, we may use during the attack the following: The patient should occupy a cool, dry and well ventilated room: place the feet in hot water for a few minutes to increase the circulation in them and withdraw it from the head; drink rather freely of warm water, so as to either produce vomiting, or to dilute the offending matters in the stomach, and make their removal more easy. If there is fever, a sponge bath will afford much relief. Cloths wet in the coldest water should be applied to the head and frequently changed. Sometimes a showering of the head in cold water will give instantaneous relief. Warm or cold fomentations as are most agreeable over the stomach and the abdomen are very valuable. A copious injection of tepid water into the bowels will prove highly serviceable. Little or no food should be taken until the appetite returns. Pills and powders are of no use and do much harm. Observe quiet as far as possible, and in a majority of cases relief will be afforded, often in a few moments, almost always in a few hours.—Herald of Health.

The Hair.—Oils and most applications debilitate the hair-gland. Cold soft water is the best. By the persistent use of cold water, thin, poor hair will become rich and curly. Only the part of the hair next the scalp should be wet. It must then be thoroughly dried.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

RESURRECTION.

I long to see this hallowed earth
In new creation rise;
To find the germs of Eden hid
Where its fallen beauty lies;
To feel the spring-tide of a soul
By one deep love set free,
Made meet to lay aside her dust,
And be at home with Thee.

And then—there yet shall be an end—
An end how full to bless!
How dear to those who watch for Thee
With human tenderness!
Then shall the saying come to pass
That makes our hope complete,
And, rising from the conquered grave,
Thy parted ones shall meet.

Yes, they shall meet, and face to face,
By heart to heart be known,
Clothed with thy likeness, Lord of Life,
And perfect in their own;
For this corruptible must rise,
From its corruption free,
And this frail mortal must put on
Thine immortality.

Shine, then, Thou Resurrection Light,
Upon our sorrows shine!
The fullness of Thy joy be ours,
As all our griefs were Thine.
Now in this changing, dying life,
Our faded hopes restore,
Till, in Thy triumph perfected,
We taste of death no more.

WHEN DID THE ECLIPSE OCCUR?

A QUESTION IN THURMAN'S CHRONOLOGY.

I have made a little progress in my comparison of Mr. Thurman's book with the list of eclipses reckoned by Dr. Zech, of Tubingen, in the work referred to in my last. Dr. Z. identifies sixteen eclipses named by various ancient writers, the first of which he assigns to the year B. C. 477, and the last to A. D. 364. For each one he gives a formula of the elements, by which its time and place, or its course, are determined. And for two or three of them, especially the first, whose dates are disputed, he gives more than one such formula. He then quotes the allusions made by the various early writers, and treats the various questions that arise.

Of these sixteen eclipses, ten are examined, and assigned to certain dates, by Mr. Thurman. Respecting nine of these the two writers are agreed, except that for those occurring before Christ Mr. T. gives an earlier date by one year. A very simple table will give the years assigned by each, thus:

"	431	424	413	406	404	394	331	168;	"	14

This difference of one year B. C. may be connected with Mr. T.'s views of reckoning in the transition from dates before Christ to dates in the Christian era; but I am not certain of this. Whatever be the reason of it, it is doubtless the same for each case; and when it is understood, the two writers will be found to agree respecting the nine eclipses.

But respecting the first of the ten eclipses which they both treat, they differ by twenty or twenty-one years in time, and otherwise quite seriously. It is the eclipse mentioned by Herodotus (b. 7, c. 37) as occurring when Xerxes with his army was on his march to invade Greece. Dr. Z., after trying formulas for B. C. April 18, 480, April 8, 479, Feb. 27, 478, each of which fails, assigns the eclipse to Feb. 16, B. C. 477, and at Sardis in Lydia. Mr. Thurman assigns it to Dec. 16, 457 B. C., and at Celænæ, in Phrygia, which is about 100 miles east of Sardis. (Pp. 42–44, 155, 156, 234.) Let us see which date best agrees with the early accounts, and with neighboring facts.

Mr. T. makes use of Beloe's translation of Herodotus. This reads as follows: "The army had wintered at Sardis, but on receiving intelligence of the above" (i. e. the completion of the pontoon bridge across the Hellespont, connecting Abydos with the western shore), "they marched at the commencement of the spring for Abydos. At the moment of their departure, the sun, which before gave its full light, in a bright unclouded atmosphere, withdrew his beams, and the darkest night succeeded. Xerxes, alarmed at this incident," etc. With this Mr. Cary's translation mainly agrees. His words are: "The army, having wintered at Sardis, and being fully prepared, set out at the beginning of the spring from thence toward Abydos. But as it was on the point of setting out, the sun," etc., "and night ensued in the place of day."

The words I have italicized seem to leave no question of the place at which, nor of the season in which, the eclipse was seen. But Mr. T. is a bold man, and raises a question on both these points. He says: "The only question worthy of controversy is as to whether the eclipse was seen at Celænæ" (where Xerxes was in the autumn previous) "or Sardis." He admits that if Herodotus was not of the opinion that it occurred at Sardis, he must have "forgotten to mention this circumstance at its proper place," and "did not bring it in until he had reached that point in his history." (Think of the Father of History recollecting a most portentous event he had forgotten, and then dovetailing it in at the wrong place!) But let us hear Mr. T.'s argument. He says: "That this eclipse happened when Xerxes 'was on the point of setting out' from Celænæ appears almost conclusively from the circumstance of Pythius being present at the time; for it is very unreasonable to suppose that this old man, owning large possessions as he did, would have left all to follow Xerxes more than one hundred miles up to Sardis, and there spend the winter, while his sons and all those active men who had the management of his large estate had been drawn off in the army of Xerxes." (P. 44.)

Could not a man worth five and a half millions sterling, according to Prideaux's estimate, and who "entertained the whole army of the king and Xerxes himself with most sumptuous feasts," and offered money for the war besides, conveniently travel a hundred miles to see the king? And does this supposed inconvenience prove "almost conclusively" that nearly four chapters of the history are out of joint and out of place? Let the reader get, if he can, some copy of Herodotus. Cary's translation, published by the Harpers, can not cost over $1.50. Let him read the two pictures, one of Pythius and Xerxes trying to outgive each other (chs. 27–29); and then, after the pontoon is done, of the army setting out from winter quarters in the spring, and Pythius frightened by the eclipse, and going to Xerxes to beg off one of his sons. Incensed at any thing that crossed his will, Xerxes orders one of his sons cut in twain, and the army to be marched between the halves. The order of the procession is given. (Chs. 37–40.) And the next chapter (41) begins thus: "In this manner, then, Xerxes marched out of Sardis."

An error of Beloe's translation excuses the opinion of Mr. T. that Pythius lived at Celænæ, though it does not begin to warrant or even suggest his argument from such a supposition. Mr. B. reads: "In this city (Celænæ) lived a man named Pythius, son of Atys, a native of Lydia," etc. (c. 27.) But the verb hupokathemai has not the sense of to live or reside, but means to be in waiting; sometimes to lie in wait. Beloe calls the man a native of Lydia to relieve the difficulty made by his mistranslation. In the account Pythius is three times called "the Lydian," and in the Lexicon of Rost and Palm (by Passow), the basis of Liddell and Scott's, he is called "the rich Lydian." He lived, then, probably much nearer to Sardis than to Celænæ. And if we suppose he was confined at home by his wealth, the argument turns in favor of Sardis as the place where he desired Xerxes to release one of his sons. But, if the history is not dislocated, Herodotus plainly describes two visits to the king, one in autumn at Celænæ, and the other in the spring at Sardis, on the occasion of the eclipse.

The error here plainly made by Mr. T. annuls his identification of the eclipse. The eclipse offered by Dr. Zech as the true one appears at the right place and season. The objection that it was not total but annular, and the further objection that it did not occur in the fourth year of the Olympiad, are fairly recognized by the Doctor, and honestly replied to.

Respecting the first objection, it should be noted that Mr. Beloe says the darkest night succeeded, while Herodotus uses no such adjective. Mr. Cary's translation is literal and accurate.

Dr. Z. regards the objection to the year of the Olympiad as more serious. I am not sufficiently master of all the questions involved, to say whether his replies are answers, though with becoming modesty he thinks they are. He certainly treats the opinions of others more respectfully than does Mr. T., in the page where his argument so flies in the face of Herodotus (44). Dr. Z. remarks that this difficulty respecting the Olympiad is not the most serious that affects ancient chronology, and simply insists that no other eclipse occurring during all that time meets the historical account as this does.

And this brings us to another difficulty of Mr. Thurman's date, which, though not so palpable, is even more serious. He makes the Persian war begin only twenty-six years before the Peloponnesian war. Now the interval between these two wars is one of the most marked and eventful periods of Grecian history. We shall examine in our next the argument by which Mr. T. endeavors to cut down this period to nearly half the length usually assigned to it. C. F. H.

AHASUERUS.

As the interest now awakened in the study of prophecy looks in all directions for light; I copy from a recent work of great value and learning, edited by Dr. William Smith, the following remarks concerning Ahasuerus of Esther, for the benefit of Bible students who read the Crisis.

"The name Ahasuerus or Achashverosh is the same as the Sanscrit Kshatra, a king, which appears as Kshirshi in the arrow-headed inscriptions of Persepolis. . . . This name in one of its Greek forms is Xerxes, explained by Herod. (vi. 98) to mean areios, a signification sufficiently near that of king. . . .

3. . . . . Now from the extent assigned to the Persian Empire (Esther 1 : 1) 'from India even unto Ethiopia' it is proved that Darius Hystaspis is the earliest possible king to whom this history (Esther 1 : 1) can apply, and it is hardly worth while to consider the claims of any after Artaxerxes Longimanus. But Ahasuerus cannot be identical with Darius, whose wives were the daughters of Cyrus and Otanes, and who in name and character equally differs from that foolish tyrant. Neither can he be Artaxerxes Longimanus, although as Artaxerxes is a compound of Xerxes, there is less difficulty here as to name. But in the first place the character of Artaxerxes as given by Plutarch and Diodorus (xi. 71) is also very unlike that of Ahasuerus.

Besides this, in Ezra 7 : 1–7, 11–26, Artaxerxes, in the seventh year of his reign, issues a decree very favorable to the Jews, and it is unlikely therefore that in the twelvth (Esther 3 : 7) Haman could speak to him of them as if he knew nothing about them, and persuade him to sentence them to an indiscriminate massacre. We are therefore reduced to the belief that Ahasuerus is Xerxes (the names being as we have seen identical); and this conclusion is fortified by the resemblance of character, and by certain chronological indications. As Xerxes scourged the sea and put to death the engineers of his bridge because their work was injured by a storm, so Ahasuerus repudiated his queen Vashti because she would not violate the decorum of her sex, and ordered the massacre of the whole Jewish nation to gratify the malice of Haman. In the third year of the reign of Xerxes was held an assembly to arrange the Grecian war. (Herod.)

In the third year of Ahasuerus was held a great feast and assembly in Sushan the palace, (Esth. 1 : 3.) In the seventh year of his reign Xerxes returned defeated from Greece, and consoled himself by the pleasures of the haram. (Herod. ix. 108.) In the seventh year of his reign 'fair young virgins were sought' for Ahasuerus, and he replaced Vashti by marrying Esther. The tribute he 'laid upon the land and upon the isles of the sea' (Esther 10 : 1), may well have been the result of the expenditure and ruin of the Grecian expedition. Throughout the book of Esther in the LXX. Artaxerxes is written for Ahasuerus, but on this no argument of any weight can be founded."

If Dr. Smith and his authority, G. E. L. Cotton, Lord Bishop of Calcutta, are correct in thinking Xerxes the Great to have been the Ahasuerus of Esther, and the reasons given must be allowed some force, then the decree against the Jews recorded in the book of Esther must have been earlier than B. C. 426, and therefore can not be the starting point of the vision (Dan. 8), nor of the seventy weeks of Dan. 9, as claimed by Eld. Thurman's Chronology. H. F. C.

"DON'T PROFESS HOLINESS."

Why not, friend? Is it not your duty to profess to be holy, and also to live holy,—to love the Lord with all your heart, soul, and might?

By not professing "holiness to the Lord," and living holiness, you are openly disobeying a positive precept. The command is,—"Be ye holy, for I am holy." If you do not profess holiness, how do you expect to live holy, die holy, to enter the kingdom holy? Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is holy let him be holy still." Is not this refusing to profess holiness, and to live holy, an apology or excuse to live as you list; conform to the world and worldliness; indulge in lust and pride? At least is it not a manifest unwillingness to come out and be separate, take up your cross and follow Jesus through good report and evil report?

Recently a beloved husband dropped a gentle reproof in the ear of his wife for aberration of deportment or inconsistency in her daily walk. What the response of his "help-meet"? "O! I am not perfect yet!" This reply was an apology for her remissness in duty, also as a slur upon her husband, who professed to enjoy the blessing of perfect love. Her motive was not pure; she answered not in a spirit of meek, modest humility. She knew likewise the expression used would grieve her husband.

This woman understood full well it was her duty and privilege to obey God in the higher christian life, and yet she was not disposed to renounce her besetting sin—give up all for Jesus. She had light enough; she knew her duty and did it not.

Is not this true of very many who believe the doctrine of holiness, of entire sanctification in this life? What, then, the difference between these professed followers of Jesus and the unregenerate or openly rebellious? "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life." "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." John 3 : 20. And yet the plea for neglect of positive duty is, "I do not profess holiness." "Strange words, truly," says a beloved writer. But strange as they are, they have fallen from the lips of many a professed christian as an apology for his general looseness of life, and his frequent indulgence of what he chooses to denominate "trivial sins." When accosted by the voice of friendly reproof for manifest inconsistencies in his daily walk, he quickly replies, with an air of self-satisfaction,—"I do not profess holiness." But responsibility is not so easily thrown off. Evasions can never be accepted as a palliation for known deficiencies. If you do not profess holiness, you are under the most solemn obligations not only to profess, but to possess the state of christian purity this very hour. There is no excuse. Abundant provision is made for the destruction of every lurking evil, and the complete restoration of the divine likeness. The healing waters are already troubled. The trickling blood of Calvary, the echoing wails of a dying Redeemer, bespeak your privilege in thrilling accents.

But, stop. You say you "don't profess holiness," and hence deem yourself licensed to say and do a multitude of things which you clearly see and frankly acknowledge would not comport with such a profession. But what kind of theology is this? You have evidently committed two grand mistakes, which ought to be corrected ere they prove your ruin. In the first place, you do profess holiness if you profess to be the disciple of Jesus. You would not, surely, have us understand that you profess unholiness! In general terms, then, the gospel is a holy gospel, and you have subscribed to its precepts and principles; Jesus is a holy Savior, and you profess to be his representative. But in particular, what mean those solemn baptismal vows, registered in heaven and on earth, to "renounce the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh," so as no more to "follow or be led by them"? Did you make them with the honest intention to fulfill? What, then, is their plain import, but that you would separate yourself from all ungodliness, and become fully identified with virtue, holiness, and truth? Verily, then, although you may not have experienced the eradication of all original depravity from your heart, yet you have so committed yourself as shortly to obtain such experience, if you are true to your positions. To subscribe to the vows already upon you, is to profess a belief in the theory and importance of holiness of heart; and to carry them fully out, is to lead you to an experimental acquaintance with the all-cleansing blood of the Lamb.

But a second mistake is, the supposition that because you do not make the loftiest pretensions to spirituality, you can therefore indulge in a carelessness (not to say sin), which would be incompatible with the profession of entire holiness. And yet, this accords with the relative standards of justification and sanctification which many have erected; placing the former down, and the latter among the clouds. In opposition to this sentiment, however, let it be stated—and we would echo it in thunder tones—it means something to be freely justified by grace; and whoever professes this state is expected to be just as consistent and irreproachable in his outward demeanor as though he possessed "a heart from sin set free." The moment he commits sin he becomes identified with the devil. He cannot remain justified without walking in all the light he has. Hence, so far as his knowledge extends, he must be as plain in his dress, as faithful in his duty, and as single in his aim, as the holiest saint on earth, or condemnation will be the inevitable result.

In vain, then, are all apologies for sin. Whether we profess to be saved or not, the responsibility rests upon us, and nothing in all the universe can remove it. We may frame apologies with the show of plausibility in the eyes of men, but in the eyes of God they are as destitute of weight as an empty sound. They may drown conviction, and parry off the earnest appeals of those dear brethren who sympathize with Christ, and care for our souls; but they will also appear against us in that day when every mouth shall be stopped.

THE PROPHETS.

Do the writings of those holy men of God, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, receive as much notice, or are they as much read, as it would be for the profit and edification of christians to devote to them? "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

The Adventists, in the aggregate, are at the present time, no doubt, devoting more attention to the prophecies than all other believers in the Bible throughout Christendom. Why they are not more universally made a study, and why preachers do not more frequently take their texts for sermonizing from them, and give expositions of their sublime and important themes, seems to me paradoxical. I have sat under the preaching of one minister for the last four years, and do not recollect that his subject has been deduced from the Old Testament prophecies but once, and then it was a sermon wholly relating to our country's present struggle. For years I have devoted a part of my daily reading of the Scriptures to them, formerly, with commentaries—but must confess from the comments of man, I have gathered but very little light; while by carefully noting the context, and referring to the marginal references, with prayer for the teaching of the Holy Spirit, I daily find them more interesting and instructive.

For a time after I became a professed disciple of Christ, I almost ignored the prophecies. I did not see their devotional bearing, nor that I could derive any help in the divine life from the perusal, nor, could I then see the beauty or importance of their utterances. We should think the holy and sublime passages contained in them, would be sufficient inducement for the lover of God's word to ponder with delight their heavenly teachings. Now I am taught that, for several reasons, they are worthy to command our careful research.

Though parts of prophecy thought somewhat obscure have received various interpretions, yet many of those most important for us to understand have been given with similar construction by able commentators, coming to their conclusions by long study and deep investigation of their various symbols.

Let us bear in mind that we are not obligated to receive the opinions of others, only so far as we believe they are in harmony with God's word. By seeking divine guidance and comparing Scripture with Scripture, our opinions have as much weight as those of other lovers of truth.

Many paragraphs contained in the major and minor prophets, are terse and full of grandeur, and challenge our highest admiration. We may realize the importance of their teachings to us, as we learn how much so they were to that people to whom they were more immediately addressed. In them, we may see a picture of our own hearts, in the rebellion, unbelief and self-will of the Jews; in their wicked disregard and departure from the Lord's commands, which had been reiterated again and again for their obedience by his faithful servants, and in the fulfillment of the threatenings made to that people for their sins, more especially their idolatry, that the word of the Lord will stand, and not one jot or tittle fail, until all be fulfilled.

The prophecies are an important part of the Scriptures, which our Savior in the days of his flesh commanded his disciples to search, for they testify much of Him, who was to be the redemption of Israel; containing the sure word of prophecy relating to Him who is to come "the second time without sin unto salvation." Of Him all the prophets spake ever since the world began, and of the restitution which would follow, and the glorious days which should then be ushered in, of Christ's personal reign, when he shall come conquering and to conquer, and all his enemies be in subjection.

The prophecies substantiate other parts of the divine record, and should awaken in us a watchful and devotional spirit; lest we be left as the several nations and individuals to whom they spake were left, to follow the devices of our own wicked hearts; lest we go astray in forbidden paths, and receive like them, the just punishment awarded those who depart from the commandments of the Lord. May we read, and prayerfully obey, the whole word of inspiration. M. C. ALLEN.

THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE.

The opinions of learned men do not, of course, alter the truth, or affect the facts in the case; but it is interesting to know that they have held such views concerning the times in which we live. It corroborates the significant fact that the world is living in anticipation of great and eventful scenes.

Macauley, the essayist, wrote, in 1831, "Many christians believe that the Messiah will shortly establish a kingdom on the earth, and reign visibly over all its inhabitants. Whether this doctrine be orthodox or not, we shall not inquire. The number of people who hold it, is very much greater than the number of Jews residing in England. Many of those who hold it are distinguished by rank, wealth and ability; it is preached from pulpits, both of the Scottish and of the English church. Noblemen and members of Parliament have written in defense of it,—who expect 'that, before this generation shall pass away, all the kingdoms of the earth will be swallowed up in one Divine Empire.'"—Essays on the Jews.

Prof. George Bush, says, "If we take the ground of right reason, we must believe that the present age is one expressly foretold in prophecy, and that it is just opening upon the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations."

These are the declarations of christians. The Jewish mind has been brought to like convictions and anticipations. Rabbi Carillon, of Jamaica Island, affirms that "There is every reason to believe that the latter days are not far off; let us, therefore, be on the watch and in continual prayer." It is said by a European writer, that "Jews, who never before thought of a Messiah, begin now to say, 'These are the days of travail which precede his coming.'" Solomon Herschel, rabbi of the chief synagogue of the Jews in London, is represented as saying that his people, after close investigation of the subject, think, with him, that the Messiah's advent cannot be delayed long. And it was announced in the public journals in 1852, that there were then thousands of Jews in Jerusalem, all anxiously expecting the Messiah.

And what divines have uttered as their learning of the Scriptures, statesmen and philosophers have also declared as their reading of the indications of events.—Ex.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF ISRAEL. WHAT IS IT?

"Being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise."—EPH. 2: 12.

The characters here spoken of were the unbelieving Gentiles, who of course were without Christ, having no real ground of hope, and therefore were without God in the world. Such are all unbelievers in or out of the nominal church at the present time.

What is designed or meant by the term "commonwealth of Israel"? The common and popular idea is that it is the means of grace secured by the churches generally, and the grace here secured to the believers. Perhaps also an etherial, mystical heaven hereafter in some far-off unknown part of God's great empire. These vagaries are exceedingly pernicious in their practical bearing, and in reality nullify the hope of the Israel of God; hence hope is not in this aspect either quickening, strengthening, or purifying. The truthfulness of this is everywhere manifest in our day. The popular church organizations are evidently without the needed motive power; hence to keep their machinery in motion every possible human contrivance and policy is here brought to bear on the various church enterprises called "benevolent institutions"; church festivals in every possible form, lotteries, grab-bags, show-post offices, and all else to raise the breeze, and have a good time. All very religious, of course, a good object; as if the end necessarily sanctified the means. If any should doubt the real religious character of these announcements, their doubts are if possible to be removed by the assurance that the preacher and pastor were present, and the exercises were opened with prayer.

Where are we drifting? The primitive church needed no such worldly policy and human machinery. They had a quickening, powerful christian hope, which rested down on the saints' inheritance, "the commonwealth of Israel," positively promised to Abraham and to his seed, which is Christ, in the Abrahamic covenant. All believers being led by the Spirit become "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," (Rom. 8 : 17), hence to what is embraced in the Abrahamic covenant, of which the apostle Paul thus speaks, "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Rom. 4 : 13. This scriptur leaves no doubt in reference to the domain embraced in the Abrahamic covenant. It is positively "the world,"—not this world under the curse, groaning for deliverance, but "the world to come."

The careless reader of the Scriptures, under the influence of modern theology, may still be so much in the dark as to ask, Is there a world yet to come? Most certainly. Hence the language of our Lord—"And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Matt. 12 : 32. Again, "But he shall receive a hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." Mark 10 : 30. The apostle uses the same words, "world to come," thus: "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come whereof we speak." Heb. 2 : 5. Again, "And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come." Heb. 6 : 5.

The commonwealth of Israel, then, is not this world or any thing therein, but "the world to come," the kingdom for which the saints of all ages have prayed, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Not this earth, with sin accursed, with tears bedewed, but the New Earth; for God has said, "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth." He further says, "But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create." Isa. 65 : 17. God further promises to his true Israel thus: "For as the new heavens and new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain."—Isa. 66 : 22. The apostle Peter, understanding this promise as it reads and as it is, says, "Nevertheless we according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3 : 13. Surely this must be the promised and purchased possession, the saints' inheritance, "the commonwealth of Israel."

Verily it is the burden of prophetic song through the entire sacred Oracles of God. In witness whereof we read as follows of the ascended Lord, "Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3 : 21. In the wording of the original covenant (Gen. 17 : 8), it is called "an everlasting possession." In the language of the apostle it is described, "An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation (full and final), ready to be revealed (brought unto us) in the last time." 1 Pet. 1 : 4, 5. OUR POSITION.

BRN. AND SRS.—Do we fully consider the importance of our position? Do we realize that we occupy the position of the angel spoken of by John, as having the everlasting gospel, which is, "Fear GOD, and give glory to him, for the HOUR of his judgment is come," (Rev. 14 : 6, 7) in the winding up of his mission? Do we fully realize the importance attached to our faithfulness? O that the Holy Ghost would operate powerfully upon our minds, and help us to duly consider these things! May it be said of us as of Daniel, "He was faithful, neither was there any error found in him." Dan. 6 : 4. Do let us consider our position, and do as required by our Father, viz., "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully." Jer. 23 : 28. "Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his own household, to give them their portion of meat in due season." Luke 12 : 42; Matt. 24 : 45.

To whom will it be said, "Well done, . . . enter thou into the joys of thy Lord"? Matt. 25 : 14–23; Luke 19 : 17; 12 : 42. Paul says, "It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." 1 Cor. 4 : 1,2; as Timothy, (1 Cor. 14 : 17) Tychicus, (Eph. 6 : 4) Epaphras (Col. 1 : 7) and Onesimus (Col. 4 : 9). By turning to his epistles to Timothy, we may see what he was required to be faithful in; and we presume that his faithfulness consisted in doing what was required of him faithfully. The Lord told John, by the mouth of "His servant," "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down." Rev. 3 : 21. That expression of qualification, "Even as I also," is worthy of notice.

Query. How did Christ overcome? By faithfully performing what was required of him. Paul says, "Consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; who was faithful to Him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house." Heb. 3 : 1, 2. John says, "From Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead. . . . Unto Him that loved us." "The faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." Rev. 1 : 5; 3 : 14. Then let us consider upon what our salvation depends; and those who have "the word," speak the word faithfully, "endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, and make full proof of their ministry.

Query again. In what shall we be faithful? God says, "When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou (the Watchman) givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul." Ezek. 3 : 17–21.

The Lord says, "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Matt. 24 : 46. Doing what? "Giving meat in due season." What is meat in due season? Doctrine that has a present application. What is meat in this season? Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." Rev. 14 : 7. "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21 : 31. Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Matt. 25. "Watch therefore." Matt. 24 : 42. Take heed unto the sure word of prophecy. 2 Pet. 1 : 19. "The heavens and the earth which are now . . . reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." 2 Pet. 3 : 7; Mal. 4 : 1. Sell that ye have and give alms." Luke 12 : 16–21; Matt. 5 : 6, 7. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice." Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the FLESH to fulfil the lusts thereof." Rom. 12 : 13.

THE CONDITION OF THE WORLD AS THE ADVENT OF OUR LORD APPROACHES.

An idea is abroad in christian society that through the progress of civilization and the gradual spread of the gospel, a millennium of peace and righteousness will be introduced, and this world will thereby be prepared for the Second Advent of our Lord. This is, without doubt, a grand theory, and one which is sure to obtain favor; but it is FALSE. The word of God has nowhere sanctioned such a notion: indeed, the direct contrary is clearly laid before us. Moreover, we ourselves are called to live in days when science and civilization have arrived at wondrous height. Men's talents never were so highly tutored; human skill was never so developed; refinement also has attained to exquisite perfection in almost every grade of life. But what of PEACE? It is needful to speak very cautiously respecting it, and to give all our science a direction which concerns the munitions of war. And what of RIGHTEOUSNESS? In every circle of society (clothed indeed in seemly garment, but all the more iniquitous in consequence) ungodliness abounds. Sin grows in presumption, and comes in with gentleness and plausibility, to take possession and to overthrow. We are not, therefore, making progress towards this visionary excellence. Nay, are we not departing further, day by day, from what is good and holy? I need not surely stay to offer proofs of these positions. They are patent to the most casual observers of the times. No one who mingles with society, or reads the daily newspapers, can help lamenting that the case is even thus. It does not seem, therefore, as if we were at present making progress towards millennial perfection. No one, I should suppose, can say that matters lead to any such conclusion.

But let us look, now, at our Bibles, and find what we must expect as time flies on, and the great day of Christ approaches. In the first place, we find that nothing is laid down in plainer terms than this, "Iniquity shall abound" in a peculiar and fearful manner as the time draws near.

Our Savior's words are powerful, which in the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthew, and elsewhere, foretell some of the wonders of that "end" for which we look. He cheers us indeed by the declaration that "the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," and by other gladdening assurances; but then, on the other hand, he forewarns us how that as the end draws near "iniquity shall abound" and "the love of many shall wax cold." He reminds us of the days of NOAH, when the world was totally regardless of the fear of God, when "every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually," and tells us "so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." He refers, likewise, to the days of LOT, when men were sinners before the Lord exceedingly, and declares, "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." And elsewhere we find the Savior asking the conclusive question, "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

But let us see now what the word of the inspired apostles was upon this subject. St. Paul deals therewith plainly, in his second epistle to the Thessalonians: "Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the Son of Perdition, . . . whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming. Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." So, likewise, in his second epistle to Timothy, we find him speaking of the "perilous times" which shall come "in the last days," when "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." St. Jude, also, in his short epistle, warns us how that in the last times there shall be "mockers" who shall walk "after their own ungodly lusts." To the same conclusion does the book of Revelation lead us.—Selected.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

RESURRECTION.

I long to see this hallowed earth
In new creation rise;
To find the germs of Eden hid
Where its fallen beauty lies;
To feel the spring-tide of a soul
By one deep love set free,
Made meet to lay aside her dust,
And be at home with Thee.

And then—there yet shall be an end—
An end how full to bless!
How dear to those who watch for Thee
With human tenderness!
Then shall the saying come to pass
That makes our hope complete,
And, rising from the conquered grave,
Thy parted ones shall meet.

Yes, they shall meet, and face to face,
By heart to heart be known,
Clothed with thy likeness, Lord of Life,
And perfect in their own;
For this corruptible must rise,
From its corruption free,
And this frail mortal must put on
Thine immortality.

Shine, then, Thou Resurrection Light,
Upon our sorrows shine!
The fullness of Thy joy be ours,
As all our griefs were Thine.
Now in this changing, dying life,
Our faded hopes restore,
Till, in Thy triumph perfected,
We taste of death no more.

WHEN DID THE ECLIPSE OCCUR?

A QUESTION IN THURMAN'S CHRONOLOGY.

I have made a little progress in my comparison of Mr. Thurman's book with the list of eclipses reckoned by Dr. Zech, of Tubingen, in the work referred to in my last. Dr. Z. identifies sixteen eclipses named by various ancient writers, the first of which he assigns to the year B. C. 477, and the last to A. D. 364. For each one he gives a formula of the elements, by which its time and place, or its course, are determined. And for two or three of them, especially the first, whose dates are disputed, he gives more than one such formula. He then quotes the allusions made by the various early writers, and treats the various questions that arise.

Of these sixteen eclipses, ten are examined, and assigned to certain dates, by Mr. Thurman. Respecting nine of these the two writers are agreed, except that for those occurring before Christ Mr. T. gives an earlier date by one year. A very simple table will give the years assigned by each, thus:

"	431	424	413	406	404	394	331	168;	"	14

This difference of one year B. C. may be connected with Mr. T.'s views of reckoning in the transition from dates before Christ to dates in the Christian era; but I am not certain of this. Whatever be the reason of it, it is doubtless the same for each case; and when it is understood, the two writers will be found to agree respecting the nine eclipses.

But respecting the first of the ten eclipses which they both treat, they differ by twenty or twenty-one years in time, and otherwise quite seriously. It is the eclipse mentioned by Herodotus (b. 7, c. 37) as occurring when Xerxes with his army was on his march to invade Greece. Dr. Z., after trying formulas for B. C. April 18, 480, April 8, 479, Feb. 27, 478, each of which fails, assigns the eclipse to Feb. 16, B. C. 477, and at Sardis in Lydia. Mr. Thurman assigns it to Dec. 16, 457 B. C., and at Celænæ, in Phrygia, which is about 100 miles east of Sardis. (Pp. 42–44, 155, 156, 234.) Let us see which date best agrees with the early accounts, and with neighboring facts.

Mr. T. makes use of Beloe's translation of Herodotus. This reads as follows: "The army had wintered at Sardis, but on receiving intelligence of the above" (i. e. the completion of the pontoon bridge across the Hellespont, connecting Abydos with the western shore), "they marched at the commencement of the spring for Abydos. At the moment of their departure, the sun, which before gave its full light, in a bright unclouded atmosphere, withdrew his beams, and the darkest night succeeded. Xerxes, alarmed at this incident," etc. With this Mr. Cary's translation mainly agrees. His words are: "The army, having wintered at Sardis, and being fully prepared, set out at the beginning of the spring from thence toward Abydos. But as it was on the point of setting out, the sun," etc., "and night ensued in the place of day."

The words I have italicized seem to leave no question of the place at which, nor of the season in which, the eclipse was seen. But Mr. T. is a bold man, and raises a question on both these points. He says: "The only question worthy of controversy is as to whether the eclipse was seen at Celænæ" (where Xerxes was in the autumn previous) "or Sardis." He admits that if Herodotus was not of the opinion that it occurred at Sardis, he must have "forgotten to mention this circumstance at its proper place," and "did not bring it in until he had reached that point in his history." (Think of the Father of History recollecting a most portentous event he had forgotten, and then dovetailing it in at the wrong place!) But let us hear Mr. T.'s argument. He says: "That this eclipse happened when Xerxes 'was on the point of setting out' from Celænæ appears almost conclusively from the circumstance of Pythius being present at the time; for it is very unreasonable to suppose that this old man, owning large possessions as he did, would have left all to follow Xerxes more than one hundred miles up to Sardis, and there spend the winter, while his sons and all those active men who had the management of his large estate had been drawn off in the army of Xerxes." (P. 44.)

Could not a man worth five and a half millions sterling, according to Prideaux's estimate, and who "entertained the whole army of the king and Xerxes himself with most sumptuous feasts," and offered money for the war besides, conveniently travel a hundred miles to see the king? And does this supposed inconvenience prove "almost conclusively" that nearly four chapters of the history are out of joint and out of place? Let the reader get, if he can, some copy of Herodotus. Cary's translation, published by the Harpers, can not cost over $1.50. Let him read the two pictures, one of Pythius and Xerxes trying to outgive each other (chs. 27–29); and then, after the pontoon is done, of the army setting out from winter quarters in the spring, and Pythius frightened by the eclipse, and going to Xerxes to beg off one of his sons. Incensed at any thing that crossed his will, Xerxes orders one of his sons cut in twain, and the army to be marched between the halves. The order of the procession is given. (Chs. 37–40.) And the next chapter (41) begins thus: "In this manner, then, Xerxes marched out of Sardis."

An error of Beloe's translation excuses the opinion of Mr. T. that Pythius lived at Celænæ, though it does not begin to warrant or even suggest his argument from such a supposition. Mr. B. reads: "In this city (Celænæ) lived a man named Pythius, son of Atys, a native of Lydia," etc. (c. 27.) But the verb hupokathemai has not the sense of to live or reside, but means to be in waiting; sometimes to lie in wait. Beloe calls the man a native of Lydia to relieve the difficulty made by his mistranslation. In the account Pythius is three times called "the Lydian," and in the Lexicon of Rost and Palm (by Passow), the basis of Liddell and Scott's, he is called "the rich Lydian." He lived, then, probably much nearer to Sardis than to Celænæ. And if we suppose he was confined at home by his wealth, the argument turns in favor of Sardis as the place where he desired Xerxes to release one of his sons. But, if the history is not dislocated, Herodotus plainly describes two visits to the king, one in autumn at Celænæ, and the other in the spring at Sardis, on the occasion of the eclipse.

The error here plainly made by Mr. T. annuls his identification of the eclipse. The eclipse offered by Dr. Zech as the true one appears at the right place and season. The objection that it was not total but annular, and the further objection that it did not occur in the fourth year of the Olympiad, are fairly recognized by the Doctor, and honestly replied to.

Respecting the first objection, it should be noted that Mr. Beloe says the darkest night succeeded, while Herodotus uses no such adjective. Mr. Cary's translation is literal and accurate.

Dr. Z. regards the objection to the year of the Olympiad as more serious. I am not sufficiently master of all the questions involved, to say whether his replies are answers, though with becoming modesty he thinks they are. He certainly treats the opinions of others more respectfully than does Mr. T., in the page where his argument so flies in the face of Herodotus (44). Dr. Z. remarks that this difficulty respecting the Olympiad is not the most serious that affects ancient chronology, and simply insists that no other eclipse occurring during all that time meets the historical account as this does.

And this brings us to another difficulty of Mr. Thurman's date, which, though not so palpable, is even more serious. He makes the Persian war begin only twenty-six years before the Peloponnesian war. Now the interval between these two wars is one of the most marked and eventful periods of Grecian history. We shall examine in our next the argument by which Mr. T. endeavors to cut down this period to nearly half the length usually assigned to it. C. F. H.

AHASUERUS.

As the interest now awakened in the study of prophecy looks in all directions for light; I copy from a recent work of great value and learning, edited by Dr. William Smith, the following remarks concerning Ahasuerus of Esther, for the benefit of Bible students who read the Crisis.

"The name Ahasuerus or Achashverosh is the same as the Sanscrit Kshatra, a king, which appears as Kshirshi in the arrow-headed inscriptions of Persepolis. . . . This name in one of its Greek forms is Xerxes, explained by Herod. (vi. 98) to mean areios, a signification sufficiently near that of king. . . .

3. . . . Now from the extent assigned to the Persian Empire (Esther 1: 1) 'from India even unto Ethiopia' it is proved that Darius Hystaspis is the earliest possible king to whom this history (Esther 1: 1) can apply, and it is hardly worth while to consider the claims of any after Artaxerxes Longimanus. But Ahasuerus cannot be identical with Darius, whose wives were the daughters of Cyrus and Otanes, and who in name and character equally differs from that foolish tyrant. Neither can he be Artaxerxes Longimanus, although as Artaxerxes is a compound of Xerxes, there is less difficulty here as to name. But in the first place the character of Artaxerxes as given by Plutarch and Diodorus (xi. 71) is also very unlike that of Ahasuerus.

Besides this, in Ezra 7: 1–7, 11–26, Artaxerxes, in the seventh year of his reign, issues a decree very favorable to the Jews, and it is unlikely therefore that in the twelfth (Esther 3: 7) Haman could speak to him of them as if he knew nothing about them, and persuade him to sentence them to an indiscriminate massacre. We are therefore reduced to the belief that Ahasuerus is Xerxes (the names being as we have seen identical); and this conclusion is fortified by the resemblance of character, and by certain chronological indications. As Xerxes scourged the sea and put to death the engineers of his bridge because their work was injured by a storm, so Ahasuerus repudiated his queen Vashti because she would not violate the decorum of her sex, and ordered the massacre of the whole Jewish nation to gratify the malice of Haman. In the third year of the reign of Xerxes was held an assembly to arrange the Grecian war. (Herod.)

In the third year of Ahasuerus was held a great feast and assembly in Sushan the palace, (Esth. 1: 3.) In the seventh year of his reign Xerxes returned defeated from Greece, and consoled himself by the pleasures of the haram. (Herod. ix. 108.) In the seventh year of his reign 'fair young virgins were sought' for Ahasuerus, and he replaced Vashti by marrying Esther. The tribute he 'laid upon the land and upon the isles of the sea' (Esther 10: 1), may well have been the result of the expenditure and ruin of the Grecian expedition. Throughout the book of Esther in the LXX. Artaxerxes is written for Ahasuerus, but on this no argument of any weight can be founded."

If Dr. Smith and his authority, G. E. L. Cotton, Lord Bishop of Calcutta, are correct in thinking Xerxes the Great to have been the Ahasuerus of Esther, and the reasons given must be allowed some force, then the decree against the Jews recorded in the book of Esther must have been earlier than B. C. 426, and therefore can not be the starting point of the vision (Dan. 8), nor of the seventy weeks of Dan. 9, as claimed by Eld. Thurman's Chronology. H. F. C.

"DON'T PROFESS HOLINESS."

Why not, friend? Is it not your duty to profess to be holy, and also to live holy,—to love the Lord with all your heart, soul, and might?

By not professing "holiness to the Lord," and living holiness, you are openly disobeying a positive precept. The command is,—"Be ye holy, for I am holy." If you do not profess holiness, how do you expect to live holy, die holy, to enter the kingdom holy? Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is holy let him be holy still." Is not this refusing to profess holiness, and to live holy, an apology or excuse to live as you list; conform to the world and worldliness; indulge in lust and pride? At least is it not a manifest unwillingness to come out and be separate, take up your cross and follow Jesus through good report and evil report?

Recently a beloved husband dropped a gentle reproof in the ear of his wife for aberration of deportment or inconsistency in her daily walk. What the response of his "help-meet"? "O! I am not perfect yet!" This reply was an apology for her remissness in duty, also as a slur upon her husband, who professed to enjoy the blessing of perfect love. Her motive was not pure; she answered not in a spirit of meek, modest humility. She knew likewise the expression used would grieve her husband.

This woman understood full well it was her duty and privilege to obey God in the higher christian life, and yet she was not disposed to renounce her besetting sin—give up all for Jesus. She had light enough; she knew her duty and did it not.

Is not this true of very many who believe the doctrine of holiness, of entire sanctification in this life? What, then, the difference between these professed followers of Jesus and the unregenerate or openly rebellious? "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life." "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." John 3: 20. And yet the plea for neglect of positive duty is, "I do not profess holiness." "Strange words, truly," says a beloved writer. But strange as they are, they have fallen from the lips of many a professed christian as an apology for his general looseness of life, and his frequent indulgence of what he chooses to denominate "trivial sins." When accosted by the voice of friendly reproof for manifest inconsistencies in his daily walk, he quickly replies, with an air of self-satisfaction,—"I do not profess holiness." But responsibility is not so easily thrown off. Evasions can never be accepted as a palliation for known deficiencies. If you do not profess holiness, you are under the most solemn obligations not only to profess, but to possess the state of christian purity this very hour. There is no excuse. Abundant provision is made for the destruction of every lurking evil, and the complete restoration of the divine likeness. The healing waters are already troubled. The trickling blood of Calvary, the echoing wails of a dying Redeemer, bespeak your privilege in thrilling accents.

But, stop. You say you "don't profess holiness," and hence deem yourself licensed to say and do a multitude of things which you clearly see and frankly acknowledge would not comport with such a profession. But what kind of theology is this? You have evidently committed two grand mistakes, which ought to be corrected ere they prove your ruin. In the first place, you do profess holiness if you profess to be the disciple of Jesus. You would not, surely, have us understand that you profess unholiness! In general terms, then, the gospel is a holy gospel, and you have subscribed to its precepts and principles; Jesus is a holy Savior, and you profess to be his representative. But in particular, what mean those solemn baptismal vows, registered in heaven and on earth, to "renounce the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh," so as no more to "follow or be led by them"? Did you make them with the honest intention to fulfill? What, then, is their plain import, but that you would separate yourself from all ungodliness, and become fully identified with virtue, holiness, and truth? Verily, then, although you may not have experienced the eradication of all original depravity from your heart, yet you have so committed yourself as shortly to obtain such experience, if you are true to your positions. To subscribe to the vows already upon you, is to profess a belief in the theory and importance of holiness of heart; and to carry them fully out, is to lead you to an experimental acquaintance with the all-cleansing blood of the Lamb.

But a second mistake is, the supposition that because you do not make the loftiest pretensions to spirituality, you can therefore indulge in a carelessness (not to say sin), which would be incompatible with the profession of entire holiness. And yet, this accords with the relative standards of justification and sanctification which many have erected; placing the former down, and the latter among the clouds. In opposition to this sentiment, however, let it be stated—and we would echo it in thunder tones—it means something to be freely justified by grace; and whoever professes this state is expected to be just as consistent and irreproachable in his outward demeanor as though he possessed "a heart from sin set free." The moment he commits sin he becomes identified with the devil. He cannot remain justified without walking in all the light he has. Hence, so far as his knowledge extends, he must be as plain in his dress, as faithful in his duty, and as single in his aim, as the holiest saint on earth, or condemnation will be the inevitable result.

In vain, then, are all apologies for sin. Whether we profess to be saved or not, the responsibility rests upon us, and nothing in all the universe can remove it. We may frame apologies with the show of plausibility in the eyes of men, but in the eyes of God they are as destitute of weight as an empty sound. They may drown conviction, and parry off the earnest appeals of those dear brethren who sympathize with Christ, and care for our souls; but they will also appear against us in that day when every mouth shall be stopped.

THE PROPHETS.

Do the writings of those holy men of God, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, receive as much notice, or are they as much read, as it would be for the profit and edification of christians to devote to them? "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

The Adventists, in the aggregate, are at the present time, no doubt, devoting more attention to the prophecies than all other believers in the Bible throughout Christendom. Why they are not more universally made a study, and why preachers do not more frequently take their texts for sermonizing from them, and give expositions of their sublime and important themes, seems to me paradoxical. I have sat under the preaching of one minister for the last four years, and do not recollect that his subject has been deduced from the Old Testament prophecies but once, and then it was a sermon wholly relating to our country's present struggle. For years I have devoted a part of my daily reading of the Scriptures to them, formerly, with commentaries—but must confess from the comments of man, I have gathered but very little light; while by carefully noting the context, and referring to the marginal references, with prayer for the teaching of the Holy Spirit, I daily find them more interesting and instructive.

For a time after I became a professed disciple of Christ, I almost ignored the prophecies. I did not see their devotional bearing, nor that I could derive any help in the divine life from the perusal, nor, could I then see the beauty or importance of their utterances. We should think the holy and sublime passages contained in them, would be sufficient inducement for the lover of God's word to ponder with delight their heavenly teachings. Now I am taught that, for several reasons, they are worthy to command our careful research.

Though parts of prophecy thought somewhat obscure have received various interpretations, yet many of those most important for us to understand have been given with similar construction by able commentators, coming to their conclusions by long study and deep investigation of their various symbols.

Let us bear in mind that we are not obligated to receive the opinions of others, only so far as we believe they are in harmony with God's word. By seeking divine guidance and comparing Scripture with Scripture, our opinions have as much weight as those of other lovers of truth.

Many paragraphs contained in the major and minor prophets, are terse and full of grandeur, and challenge our highest admiration. We may realize the importance of their teachings to us, as we learn how much so they were to that people to whom they were more immediately addressed. In them, we may see a picture of our own hearts, in the rebellion, unbelief and self-will of the Jews; in their wicked disregard and departure from the Lord's commands, which had been reiterated again and again for their obedience by his faithful servants, and in the fulfillment of the threatenings made to that people for their sins, more especially their idolatry, that the word of the Lord will stand, and not one jot or tittle fail, until all be fulfilled.

The prophecies are an important part of the Scriptures, which our Savior in the days of his flesh commanded his disciples to search, for they testify much of Him, who was to be the redemption of Israel; containing the sure word of prophecy relating to Him who is to come "the second time without sin unto salvation." Of Him all the prophets spake ever since the world began, and of the restitution which would follow, and the glorious days which should then be ushered in, of Christ's personal reign, when he shall come conquering and to conquer, and all his enemies be in subjection.

The prophecies substantiate other parts of the divine record, and should awaken in us a watchful and devotional spirit; lest we be left as the several nations and individuals to whom they spake were left, to follow the devices of our own wicked hearts; lest we go astray in forbidden paths, and receive like them, the just punishment awarded those who depart from the commandments of the Lord. May we read, and prayerfully obey, the whole word of inspiration. M. C. ALLEN.

THE DAYS IN WHICH WE LIVE.

The opinions of learned men do not, of course, alter the truth, or affect the facts in the case; but it is interesting to know that they have held such views concerning the times in which we live. It corroborates the significant fact that the world is living in anticipation of great and eventful scenes.

Macauley, the essayist, wrote, in 1831, "Many christians believe that the Messiah will shortly establish a kingdom on the earth, and reign visibly over all its inhabitants. Whether this doctrine be orthodox or not, we shall not inquire. The number of people who hold it, is very much greater than the number of Jews residing in England. Many of those who hold it are distinguished by rank, wealth and ability; it is preached from pulpits, both of the Scottish and of the English church. Noblemen and members of Parliament have written in defense of it,—who expect 'that, before this generation shall pass away, all the kingdoms of the earth will be swallowed up in one Divine Empire.'"—Essays on the Jews.

Prof. George Bush, says, "If we take the ground of right reason, we must believe that the present age is one expressly foretold in prophecy, and that it is just opening upon the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations."

These are the declarations of christians. The Jewish mind has been brought to like convictions and anticipations. Rabbi Carillon, of Jamaica Island, affirms that "There is every reason to believe that the latter days are not far off; let us, therefore, be on the watch and in continual prayer." It is said by a European writer, that "Jews, who never before thought of a Messiah, begin now to say, 'These are the days of travail which precede his coming.'" Solomon Herschel, rabbi of the chief synagogue of the Jews in London, is represented as saying that his people, after close investigation of the subject, think, with him, that the Messiah's advent cannot be delayed long. And it was announced in the public journals in 1852, that there were then thousands of Jews in Jerusalem, all anxiously expecting the Messiah.

And what divines have uttered as their learning of the Scriptures, statesmen and philosophers have also declared as their reading of the indications of events.—Ex.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF ISRAEL. WHAT IS IT?

"Being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise."—EPH. 2: 12.

The characters here spoken of were the unbelieving Gentiles, who of course were without Christ, having no real ground of hope, and therefore were without God in the world. Such are all unbelievers in or out of the nominal church at the present time.

What is designed or meant by the term "commonwealth of Israel"? The common and popular idea is that it is the means of grace secured by the churches generally, and the grace here secured to the believers. Perhaps also an etherial, mystical heaven hereafter in some far-off unknown part of God's great empire. These vagaries are exceedingly pernicious in their practical bearing, and in reality nullify the hope of the Israel of God; hence hope is not in this aspect either quickening, strengthening, or purifying. The truthfulness of this is everywhere manifest in our day. The popular church organizations are evidently without the needed motive power; hence to keep their machinery in motion every possible human contrivance and policy is here brought to bear on the various church enterprises called "benevolent institutions"; church festivals in every possible form, lotteries, grab-bags, show-post offices, and all else to raise the breeze, and have a good time. All very religious, of course, a good object; as if the end necessarily sanctified the means. If any should doubt the real religious character of these announcements, their doubts are if possible to be removed by the assurance that the preacher and pastor were present, and the exercises were opened with prayer.

Where are we drifting? The primitive church needed no such worldly policy and human machinery. They had a quickening, powerful christian hope, which rested down on the saints' inheritance, "the commonwealth of Israel," positively promised to Abraham and to his seed, which is Christ, in the Abrahamic covenant. All believers being led by the Spirit become "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," (Rom. 8: 17), hence to what is embraced in the Abrahamic covenant, of which the apostle Paul thus speaks, "For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Rom. 4: 13. This scriptur leaves no doubt in reference to the domain embraced in the Abrahamic covenant. It is positively "the world,"—not this world under the curse, groaning for deliverance, but "the world to come."

The careless reader of the Scriptures, under the influence of modern theology, may still be so much in the dark as to ask, Is there a world yet to come? Most certainly. Hence the language of our Lord—"And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Matt. 12: 32. Again, "But he shall receive a hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." Mark 10: 30. The apostle uses the same words, "world to come," thus: "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come whereof we speak." Heb. 2: 5. Again, "And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come." Heb. 6: 5.

The commonwealth of Israel, then, is not this world or any thing therein, but "the world to come," the kingdom for which the saints of all ages have prayed, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Not this earth, with sin accursed, with tears bedewed, but the New Earth; for God has said, "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth." He further says, "But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create." Isa. 65: 17. God further promises to his true Israel thus: "For as the new heavens and new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain."—Isa. 66: 22. The apostle Peter, understanding this promise as it reads and as it is, says, "Nevertheless we according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3: 13. Surely this must be the promised and purchased possession, the saints' inheritance, "the commonwealth of Israel."

Verily it is the burden of prophetic song through the entire sacred Oracles of God. In witness whereof we read as follows of the ascended Lord, "Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3: 21. In the wording of the original covenant (Gen. 17: 8), it is called "an everlasting possession." In the language of the apostle it is described, "An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation (full and final), ready to be revealed (brought unto us) in the last time." 1 Pet. 1: 4, 5. For the World's Crisis.

OUR POSITION.

BRN. AND SRS.—Do we fully consider the importance of our position? Do we realize that we occupy the position of the angel spoken of by John, as having the everlasting gospel, which is, "Fear GOD, and give glory to him, for the HOUR of his judgment is come," (Rev. 14: 6, 7) in the winding up of his mission? Do we fully realize the importance attached to our faithfulness? O that the Holy Ghost would operate powerfully upon our minds, and help us to duly consider these things! May it be said of us as of Daniel, "He was faithful, neither was there any error found in him." Dan. 6: 4. Do let us consider our position, and do as required by our Father, viz., "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully." Jer. 23: 28. "Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his own household, to give them their portion of meat in due season." Luke 12: 42; Matt. 24: 45.

To whom will it be said, "Well done, . . . enter thou into the joys of thy Lord"? Matt. 25: 14–23; Luke 19: 17; 12: 42. Paul says, "It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." 1 Cor. 4: 1,2; as Timothy, (1 Cor. 14: 17) Tychicus, (Eph. 6: 4) Epaphras (Col. 1: 7) and Onesimus (Col. 4: 9). By turning to his epistles to Timothy, we may see what he was required to be faithful in; and we presume that his faithfulness consisted in doing what was required of him faithfully. The Lord told John, by the mouth of "His servant," "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down." Rev. 3: 21. That expression of qualification, "Even as I also," is worthy of notice.

Query. How did Christ overcome? By faithfully performing what was required of him. Paul says, "Consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; who was faithful to Him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house." Heb. 3: 1, 2. John says, "From Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead. . . . Unto Him that loved us." "The faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." Rev. 1: 5; 3: 14. Then let us consider upon what our salvation depends; and those who have "the word," speak the word faithfully, "endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, and make full proof of their ministry.

Query again. In what shall we be faithful? God says, "When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou (the Watchman) givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul." Ezek. 3: 17–21.

The Lord says, "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Matt. 24: 46. Doing what? "Giving meat in due season." What is meat in due season? Doctrine that has a present application. What is meat in this season? Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." Rev. 14: 7. "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21: 31. Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Matt. 25. "Watch therefore." Matt. 24: 42. Take heed unto the sure word of prophecy. 2 Pet. 1: 19. "The heavens and the earth which are now . . . reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." 2 Pet. 3: 7; Mal. 4: 1. Sell that ye have and give alms." Luke 12: 16–21; Matt. 5: 6, 7. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice." Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the FLESH to fulfil the lusts thereof." Rom. 12: 13.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," says the "Faithful and True." Amen. J. C. RICE.

THE CONDITION OF THE WORLD AS THE ADVENT OF OUR LORD APPROACHES.

An idea is abroad in christian society that through the progress of civilization and the gradual spread of the gospel, a millennium of peace and righteousness will be introduced, and this world will thereby be prepared for the Second Advent of our Lord. This is, without doubt, a grand theory, and one which is sure to obtain favor; but it is FALSE. The word of God has nowhere sanctioned such a notion: indeed, the direct contrary is clearly laid before us. Moreover, we ourselves are called to live in days when science and civilization have arrived at wondrous height. Men's talents never were so highly tutored; human skill was never so developed; refinement also has attained to exquisite perfection in almost every grade of life. But what of PEACE? It is needful to speak very cautiously respecting it, and to give all our science a direction which concerns the munitions of war. And what of RIGHTEOUSNESS? In every circle of society (clothed indeed in seemly garment, but all the more iniquitous in consequence) ungodliness abounds. Sin grows in presumption, and comes in with gentleness and plausibility, to take possession and to overthrow. We are not, therefore, making progress towards this visionary excellence. Nay, are we not departing further, day by day, from what is good and holy? I need not surely stay to offer proofs of these positions. They are patent to the most casual observers of the times. No one who mingles with society, or reads the daily newspapers, can help lamenting that the case is even thus. It does not seem, therefore, as if we were at present making progress towards millennial perfection. No one, I should suppose, can say that matters lead to any such conclusion.

But let us look, now, at our Bibles, and find what we must expect as time flies on, and the great day of Christ approaches. In the first place, we find that nothing is laid down in plainer terms than this, "Iniquity shall abound" in a peculiar and fearful manner as the time draws near.

Our Savior's words are powerful, which in the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthew, and elsewhere, foretell some of the wonders of that "end" for which we look. He cheers us indeed by the declaration that "the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," and by other gladdening assurances; but then, on the other hand, he forewarns us how that as the end draws near "iniquity shall abound" and "the love of many shall wax cold." He reminds us of the days of NOAH, when the world was totally regardless of the fear of God, when "every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually," and tells us "so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." He refers, likewise, to the days of LOT, when men were sinners before the Lord exceedingly, and declares, "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." And elsewhere we find the Savior asking the conclusive question, "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

But let us see now what the word of the inspired apostles was upon this subject. St. Paul deals therewith plainly, in his second epistle to the Thessalonians: "Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the Son of Perdition, . . . whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming. Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." So, likewise, in his second epistle to Timothy, we find him speaking of the "perilous times" which shall come "in the last days," when "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." St. Jude, also, in his short epistle, warns us how that in the last times there shall be "mockers" who shall walk "after their own ungodly lusts." To the same conclusion does the book of Revelation lead us.—Selected.

For the World's Crisis.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IN PENNSYLVANIA.

An intelligent lady writes:—I wish you would tell me what you think of Mr. Armstrong's movement at Celestia. I suppose you have seen his paper, 'The Day Star of Zion.' I do not know as yet what to think of it. Do you think it is anything like the movement headed by Gorgas in 1844? Do you think Gorgas was sincere? Some think he was not."

I found no time to answer the above, and more recently I have met with persons who were talking of a move to "CELESTIA"; and a few days since a brother writes me that he is glad that some one has opened on "Celestia"; that it is too bad for persons to be deceived by it, and that he had near and dear friends who had been led astray by the movement.

I have had nothing to say or do about giving publicity to this concern. I know but little about it. But as "our paper" has been the medium through which tidings from "Celestia" have sometimes reached the public ear, until it came to have its own organ, "The Day Star of Zion"; and as I am interrogated concerning it, I feel that I may properly say a few words about it.

I. Then I would advise you not to believe every doctrine, embrace every theory, or receive every man you find mentioned in the columns of the World's Crisis. Should you do so, you may have occasion to regret it. Of course I, though President of the Society by which the Crisis is issued, being unconnected with the management of the paper, have no control over its contents, or its character. The editor has a good many to please. He tries to do the best he can, but still is unable to please all men in every thing. So there are many things published in the Crisis from time to time which I do not think are true, or in all respects profitable; and also some things in my estimation hardly worth reading,—and some articles from "Celestia" come under that head. And I do not care to trouble readers with my protests and objections to such things, for various reasons.

1. I have plenty of my own better business to mind. 2. I have already all the yelping about my heels, and buzzing about my ears, that is pleasant. 3. The Lord has not appointed me to straighten every crook, refute every error, or right every wrong, or expose every rascal who may afflict unsuspecting men.

II. "CELESTIA," as I understand it, is a very pretty name for a cleared patch in a hemlock wilderness, in Sullivan Co., Pa. I presume that the name looks a great deal more "celestial" than the place does, or ever will "in this present evil world." As to what Mr. Armstrong says of himself, or publishes about himself, it may be all true, or false, for aught I know. I know nothing about the man personally, except what he writes or publishes himself. I presume him to be sincere. Whether his position resembles that of "Dr. Gorgas," who made such a stir in Philadelphia in 1844, and led so many people out to meet the Lord by his visions in connection with the preaching and labors of others, I cannot say, as I had no personal acquaintance in that region with those operations, by means of which men wasted their time, strength, and money, and brought contempt upon the word of God, under the impression that they were advancing the cause of truth in those days of "midnight cries," "flat-rock sermons," believing "without a doubt," and visions of the "shut door," etc., etc. For aught I know, all these people may have been sincere enough; but sincerity is a poor substitute for christian prudence and common sense. Honesty is not always a guarantee against folly, and "believing without a doubt" may be good or bad, according to what you believe.

III. But as to this "CELESTIA," I understand that the gentleman who bought the land and has cleared the ground, Mr. P. E. Armstrong, has deeded the whole concern to the Almighty God, and has got the deed recorded in the County Clerk's office! What under heaven the Lord wanted of a saw-mill, a clearing, some houses, and a few hundred acres of hemlock wilderness in Sullivan Co., Pa., is more than I can tell. I doubt if the Lord ever wanted it, asked for it, received the deed of it, or thanked the good people for their gift. Once he said, "If I were hungry I would not tell THEE, for THE WORLD IS MINE, and the fulness thereof."—Ps. 50: 12. If it is said that Mr. P. E. Armstrong by this deed gave up all his right and title in the land, I reply, he had not much right and title to give. The right of "eminent domain" over every acre within the United States is claimed by the general government at Washington. This is the supreme human title, if we except that old bottom deed that runs to Abraham and his descendants, who were heirs of the world. Rom. 4: 13. Under the United States, Pennsylvania has the next claim; under Pennsylvania, Sullivan county; under Sullivan Co., the local Township; under the local Township, the first settlers or owners; under these, P. E. Armstrong; and under P. E. Armstrong, is found the right and title of the Maker of heaven and earth!! according to his deed recorded in the County Clerk's office, and published in "The Day Star of Zion."

Now under all these incumbrances, Mr. A. held title. If his predecessors in ownership had a defective title, or if any old mortgage should turn up against this land, the whole might revert to the original owners, and the deeding of the land to the Deity would be null and void. But if the title is good and "perfect," then there are the following incumbrances upon it: 1. It is under the civil and military rule of the United States, the State, county, and town governments; and all the officers of these governments have a right to enter there and, for cause, or upon complaint, force any of the citizens of this "CELESTIA" away to prison or to death, never perhaps to return. If "Celestia" had been a rod north of Canada line, none of these officials could have come there. But then England would have claimed it. 2. "CELESTIA" is under the tax-gatherers. The United States, the State, the county, and the town, all assess taxes on "CELESTIA," if anything there is worth taxing, and those taxes will not be like the temple tax which Jesus paid, but rather tributes to Cæsar, war taxes, government taxes, etc., and every cent of these taxes must be paid, or these government officers will, if needful, sell every inch of this land belonging to the Almighty, at auction, to the highest bidder, to pay taxes to the beastly governments of this world. Then where will be the title which the Creator receives from Mr. P. E. Armstrong and his wife? And who is authorized to pay the Lord's taxes to prevent all this coming to pass?

IV. But this "CELESTIA" establishment has, I think, been styled by Mr. A. "The Stone Monarchy," or something of that kind. Well, I have no doubt but that it is stony enough; but so far from its being the stone "cut out of the mountain without hands," I presume Mr. A. has already blistered his "hands" cutting and chopping there long ago. At all events, I do not believe that their inroad on the Pennsylvania hemlocks is the kingdom of God. There are too many such kingdoms stuck here and there over the country.

The Shakers are said to be a fine people, make good flannels, fine brooms, and excellent apple sauce, and all that, but they also say that they have got into the kingdom of God. They are "the stone monarchy." I stayed one night at one of their settlements,—a nice place, good farm, fine people and all that; but I could not find Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob, or any of the prophets there; while Christ said that they should all be seen, and seen by outsiders too, "in the kingdom of God"; and so I harnessed up my horse, and started on to preach "this gospel of the kingdom," and pray "Thy kingdom come" a little longer.

And now if any one will convince me that Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and all the prophets, are out in the hemlock woods of Sullivan Co., Pa., I will start directly and pay them a visit. But if they are not there, I shall doubt whether they have got the "stone monarchy" there, or whether the true "Day-star of Zion" shines anywhere in that region; and so I shall continue to take heed to "the sure word of prophecy" "until the day dawn and the day-star arise," for all listening to the teachings of this new Pennsylvania "DAY STAR."

V. I have also been led to understand that one will must be supreme in "CELESTIA," and that of course would be the will expressed by the founder of the concern. I have also understood that no persons are desired to come there to examine and try the concern, unless they are decided to stay. But this may work badly, for perhaps bad men will come into this new kingdom and stay too long; and if the kingdom be divided against itself—what then? Perhaps some of the good friends who have tried the Common Interest system in Providence and elsewhere, could give light on this subject.

VI. A word of advice. If any one thinks he has no duties to do anywhere else, and is willing to work hard, peel hemlock bark, butt logs, tend saw-mill, serve God, obey orders, he can probably earn a living at "CELESTIA," or almost any where else. And if he is sure it is his duty to do so, let him go there expecting to live, not in the "STONE MONARCHY," but among the big hemlocks of Pennsylvania, on soil that has God's curse, and man's government spread over it; and is also under the control of whoever stands as the exponent of the Divine will in "CELESTIA," Pa. But if any one expects to get rid of sins, sorrows, temptations, troubles, drafts, or devils, by going to "CELESTIA," I will guarantee him an excellent chance for a disappointment when he comes to try it.

VII. To those determined to go to "CELESTIA," I would say, 1. As it is not probable that the Lord wants any more deeds of wild land in Pennsylvania (since doubtless P. E. A. has to keep this one for him), it would be needless to carry much money there; and hence I suggest that you "sell and give alms" and "provide yourselves" thus with bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens, . . . where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth." 2. As to the manner of doing this, I suggest that "the half" of your goods you "give to the poor." Then if you have wronged, cheated, or robbed any one, that you restore to them four-fold, and see then if there is anything left over. If anything remains, it would be well to take it and go about doing good, remembering that it is more blessed to give than to receive; and as you go, you might preach, scatter tracts, work, take care of sick folks, instruct the ignorant, and do all the good you can. If after going about, praying and doing good, you at length find that there is no place in all this world where you can do more good than at "Celestia," and feel that the Lord wishes you to go there, then go, and let your light shine in "Celestia," all there is of it.

And when you get there, please tell Mr. A. from me, that I think he might have devoted his property to the Lord's use just as well without giving him a deed of it; but that, if he really wanted to get it into the Lord's hands, I think the shortest way would have been to have sold it for what it would fetch, and given the proceeds prudently and wisely to the poor, and then Christ might have said, "Ye did it unto me."

Tell him that I trust he means well and does well; and that I hope he will pardon the free use I have made of his name, which I only use in its public relations, and with no reference to his private or personal character, of which I know nothing. Tell him to be a good soldier and serve God, and then whatever he may bring to pass in "CELESTIA," I trust that he will soon be in a better kingdom than he can make among the Pennsylvania hemlocks. I have myself worked in hemlock woods, peeled bark, drawn logs, and tended saw-mill, and I know something about the matter.

I now leave this subject, begging pardon for what may seem to be personal in this communication, and praying God to hasten the coming of his kingdom, and gather us to partake its joys, where we shall be free from errors, and see as we are seen, and know as we are known. H. L. HASTINGS.

"THE SPIRITS OF DEVILS WHICH GO FORTH TO THE KINGS OF THE EARTH."—The London correspondent of the New York Herald, in a letter dated Oct. 15th, says:—

"I hear from a reliable source that Queen Victoria has been to see the Davenport Brothers, and has appointed a trial of their spiritual, dark lantern jugglery game at Windsor Castle. She has gone quite daft with Spiritualism, and these impostors have promised to bring back Prince Albert to this world for an hour, in the very room that he died. They have promised, moreover, I am told, to not only allow the Queen to have a conversation with him, but to actually touch him. As their performances are conducted in the dark, they will no doubt succeed in carrying out the delusion. Pray, what are the guardians of the poor Queen about to permit such a criminal imposture to be practiced on one who is already far on the road to lunacy? Such an arrant imposture is a melancholy exhibition of human weakness and folly."—Herald, Oct. 31st.

VISIT TO CONNECTICUT.

Saturday, Nov. 19th, we left home for Winsted, Ct. On our way, we called a short time on Bro. Dickenson and others in Hartford, with whom we had a pleasant interview. There are some faithful ones left in H., although death has made some heavy drafts upon their numbers during the past few years.

We arrived in Winsted in the evening, and received a hearty welcome by Brn. C. Goodrich, Ira Neal, and others. Winstead was our home for several years. There we first gave our heart to the Lord. In December 1842, we first heard some lectures on the prophecies of Daniel, given by H. A. Chittendon, in the Methodist meeting house, at the time Eld. Washburn was pastor. The first discourse brought conviction that the Bible was true; and at the close of that Sabbath day, we commenced praying for mercy, and four days from that time, on Thursday evening, at the first prayer meeting we had ever attended, we consented to serve the Lord, when we obtained pardon, peace and joy. Since that time, we have found the service of the Lord a delightful one, and continually growing more blessed; and we expect it will till the "perfect day."

It was pleasant for us to greet the friends of other days, and talk about the way of life. Some are pressing for the prize, while others have become victims of the Tempter's alluring snares. The seducer has been busy, and is still at work with his artful wiles. Some have departed from the faith. The spirits of demons have not overlooked Winsted. They are exerting a general influence in all lands, and preparing for a very earnest opposition against the truth of the Lord and those who are really his children. We think the worst is yet to come.

We had a large gathering of attentive hearers on the Lord's day, and received many happy greetings from the friends of Jesus, who came in from various towns, to help praise the Redeemer. We enjoyed our visit with Bro. C. Goodrich, who is a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord.

While in Winsted, we visited Mr. Borden's condensed milk manufactory, which is one of the most interesting mechanical arrangements we have ever seen, and gives evidence that Mr. Borden is master of his business. He has some three or four other similar manufactories, in N. Y. and Me., in all of which he condenses some thirty or forty thousand quarts of milk in a day. One hundred quarts of milk afford about twenty quarts after it is condensed. The condensation consists in extracting the water from the milk, while heated by steam to earnest boiling, in a large copper boiler, from which the air is mostly expelled. By this process pure milk is obtained. It is about as thick as the best cream, and when used, one quart of the milk will bear some six or seven quarts of water, when it will be like the best of new milk. The condensed milk is put up in tin cans, weighing a pound each, and sealed. Most of it is sweetened ready to put into coffee, and sent to the soldiers. That which is sweetened will keep good for years. We kept a can of it some three years and a half; and when opened it was still good.

He is also condensing meat for the soldiers, affording a very nice article of animal food, which is superior to any in the common state. Cider is condensed too into a nice apple jelly, which is much better than any preserved fruit, or ordinary jellies. One day in the summer he condensed some eighty bushels of blackberries and sent to the soldiers, making them a very healthy jelly. Potatoes are condensed in the same way; and, indeed, nearly all kinds of food may be thus treated, and then kept for years, for long sea voyages, or for other purposes. The discovery and invention is one of great benefit to mankind. Mr. Borden is said to be a devoted christian, having prayers and songs in his family three times a day. He is an earnest, energetic, and executive man, whose influence is well calculated to make the world better wherever it is felt.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 22nd, we commenced meetings in Newfield, Ct., in the town of Torrington. This was the place where we began our ministerial labors in 1850, in company with Bro. S. G. Mathewson; when the Lord poured out his Spirit in a most wonderful manner, and many were made happy in the christian religion. It has been seven years since we have preached in this place; and during that time the enemy has not been idle, nor entirely unsuccessful in his work of mischief; but there are some bright fruits left yet; while others have been led astray from the narrow path that leadeth unto life.

Our meetings increased in interest daily till their close. On the Lord's day, Nov. 27th, we had a very large congregation, and a lively interest was manifested by the audience, while considering the practical duties required by the christian religion. The children of the Lord were present from twelve towns. It was quite a privilege to see so many whom we had met in other days, and find them still loving the appearing of Jesus, and preparing to give him a welcome when he comes.

Quite a number have been quickened during the meeting, and have resolved to live nearer to the Lord. We were rejoiced at the good fruit we saw manifested, and trust that more will yet appear. Our last meeting closed with the sacrament. We parted in hope of meeting again at "the marriage of the Lamb," when Jesus comes to gather his loved ones from the four winds of heaven.

Monday evening, Nov. 28th, we held a meeting in the "Young Men's Christian Association Room," in the city of Waterbury, Ct; also the following two evenings, and had a pleasant and profitable time in worshiping the Lord. Bro. Ira Morgan, from Meriden, Ct., was with us to assist in the exercises, also Bro. S. B. Munn, who resides in the city, and is engaged in the medical profession. We felt the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit. Four requested prayers and resolved to serve the Lord in newness of life. Things looked very encouraging for a good work, if the meetings could be continued.

THE NATIONAL FAIR.

A noted "National Sailors' Fair" was held last month, at the Boston Theatre, for the purpose of raising funds "to build a home for disabled heroes." One method of raising money was by means of theatrical performances, at the Melodeon; another by raffling. Large amounts were realized from these gambling operations. Among the many articles won by raffling, we noticed in their published list the following: "Lolling Chair, $75," "box cross, $50," "Life of Christ," $60," "revolver, $60," "cannon, $75."

Such fairs are crowded by church-members and ministers, blacklegs and gamblers. Does not this look like eating and drinking "with the drunken?" Our Savior has given this as one of the signs of the last days. While such places are thronged by professors of religion, the prayer-room is almost deserted. But very few go to the solemn assembly to worship the Lord, and praise his holy name.

Is it not time for every true follower of Jesus to "put on the whole armor of God, "that he may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil? Only "the pure in heart" have any promise of eternal life.

A STRANGE CONCLUSION.

In the course of a lecture by Henry Ward Beecher, at the Music Hall, Boston, Nov. 16, 1864, when speaking on the effects of the war of the rebellion, he was reported to have said:—

"I have looked narrowly at this matter—my very vocation requires it—and I say the truth, that I can see no signs of corruption in the people in anywise as the result of this war, whereas I do observe many signs of growing excellence; and I believe that this war is worth more to the nation than any revival of religion that ever took place in the land." (Applause.)

We think no fact in morals can be more fully established than that the war has caused thousands and tens of thousands to backslide from the Lord, while as many more have become notoriously wicked, that were before the war good moral people. The drunken debauchery, swearing, and licentiousness, that have resulted from the war, are terrible; and the tide of iniquity is rapidly rising. Revivals of religion are very rare at the present day. The spirit of war and bloodshed is commended, and the peace principles of Jesus are hooted at by popular professors. We have no knowledge of any war since the commencement of the christian dispensation that has been a benefit to those who entered into the spirit of it. The sweet, gentle, lamb-like spirit of Jesus, and the horrid scenes of the battle field, have nothing in common.

DATE OF THE CRUCIFIXION.

It is well known that modern chronologers have assumed that Christ was crucified Friday afternoon. If this were true, it would be impossible to have him rise on the morning of the first day, as declared by the Scriptures, and be in the grave "three days and three nights." We read in Matt. 12: 40, "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." If he was crucified Friday afternoon, Friday night would be one, and Saturday night two, which would be all the nights from his crucifixion to his resurrection. For this reason, we could never believe that the Savior was crucified on Friday. Jesus informed his disciples "that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day."—Matt. 16: 21. Being crucified on Thursday, and laid in the tomb at the close of the day, then he would be "in the heart of the earth" Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, making three, as he said; and Friday, Saturday, and part of Sunday, rising on "the third day," thus making prophecy and history correspond perfectly.

The following from Bro. Thurman's Chronology will set the whole matter forth in very clear light. See "The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," pp. 193—198:

A. D. 30. THE YEAR OF THE CRUCIFIXION. Our Lord was crucified on the day of the passover,—that is, the 14th of the first month, which in that year fell on the fifth day of the week. This enables us by the aid of astronomy to decide on the year of the crucifixion. Christ did not commence his ministry before "the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar" (Luke 3: 1); hence, not before Aug. 28, A. D. 25. During his ministry there were four passovers; the crucifixion, therefore, could not have been earlier than A. D. 29, nor later than A. D. 36; for it was during the government of Pontius Pilate, whose rule could not have continued later than the 28th of August, A. D. 26, as Luke informs us that Pilate was "Governor of Judea" during "the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar," whose fifteenth year ended on August 28, A. D. 26; and according to Josephus, Pilate was governor but ten years, and lost his authority during the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, who died January 22, A. D. 37. We are consequently limited to eight years for the time of the crucifixion, which was on Thursday, the 14th of the first month, when, according to Josephus, the sun was in Aries.

The Paschal full moon, during these eight years, fell thus:—

A. D. 29	....	April 17	Sunday.
" 30	....	" 6	Thursday.
" 31	....	March 27	Tuesday.
" 32	....	April 14	Monday.
" 33	....	" 3	Friday.
" 34	....	March 23	Tuesday.
" 35	....	April 11	Monday.
" 36	....	March 31	Saturday.

From this table, it will be seen that the only Paschal full moon within the limits of these eight years that fell on Thursday, was in A. D. 30. We thus prove that the crucifixion took place on April 6, A. D. 30.

We will now show that all the records of antiquity can only be reconciled upon the supposition of this being the day and year. The Roman calendar was divided into Calends, Nones, and Ides, by which they dated their transactions; but the Jews refusing to employ these terms,—by which the Romans pointed out the time of their heathen festivals,—used the calendar in the same way we do at the present day. In proof of this, the death-warrant of Christ is dated on March 27, instead of the 6th of the calends of April. This being the custom of using the calendar in Judea, they dated the crucifixion on the 6th of the calendar of April instead of on the 8th of Ides, according to the Roman method. Others merely gave the date at which they were writing, without mentioning at what time the crucifixion took place; hence, one is dated on the 8th of the calendar of April, two days after the crucifixion; another on the 10th of April, four days after; another on the 13th of April, seven days after. Some of these records were dated on the nineteenth of Tiberius Cæsar, reckoning from the beginning of his reign as associated with Augustus; others, the seventeenth of Tiberius, computing from the death of Augustus. The nineteenth of Tiberius, reckoning from the first epoch, synchronizes with A. D. 30, which may be seen by reference to our Table of Chronology. According to Ptolemy's canon, the seventeenth of Tiberius, reckoning from the death of Augustus, also answers to A. D. 30. (See Chronological Table.) Hence, there was but one opinion as to the time of the crucifixion until towards the end of the second century, when it was discovered that Tiberius's reign did not commence with January 1, but on August 19, A. D. 14; and reckoning from this, the passover of A. D. 31 was in the seventeenth of Tiberius. This circumstance orginated a considerable difficulty; for the crucifixion was dated on the 6th of the calendar of April at the time of the passover, which always falls on the 14th of the first month; and they could easily discover by their lunar cycles that the 6th of April in A. D. 31 was on the 24th of the first month. As the Paschal full moon for that year fell on March 27, which was the 6th of the calends of April, it was but natural for them to suppose that those who had written on the subject had dated according to the Roman method. Therefore, that which was dated on the 6th of the calendar of April, they now understood to mean the 6th of the calends of April. This mistake was very easy to be made since calends was not written out in full, but only put thus: "cal," or "calend," which as properly stand for calends, as for calendar. At that time they had not learned to find the day of the week by the Dominical letter; hence, were unable to detect this error by discovering that March 27 of that year did not fall on Thursday. It therefore became the settled opinion that A. D. 31 was the year of the crucifixion. But the supposition that those authors who had dated according to the calendar of April meant the calends of April, caused great confusion; for their writings were thus thrown back before the day of the crucifixion. By this method those who wrote on the 8th of the calendar of April, two days after the crucifixion, were now supposed to date on the 8th of the calends of April, answering to March 25, two days before the Paschal full moon, which fell on March 27; those who had written on April 10, four days after the crucifixion, were thought to mean the 10th of the calends of April, which is March 23, four days before the full moon; and those who had written on April 13, which was seven days after the crucifixion, were supposed to mean the 13th of the calends of April,—the 20th of March, seven days before the Paschal full moon of A. D. 31. In the midst of this confusion the Council of Ephesus, in A. D. 196, settled upon the 8th of the calends of April,—March 25,—A. D. 31, as the date of the crucifixion; but after the establishment of the Christian era,—arranged by Dionysius in A. D. 527,—it was thought that by the fifteenth year of Tiberius, Luke meant the fifteenth of his reign, reckoning from the death of Augustus, which synchronizes with A. D. 29. As the ministry of Christ continued three years and a half, this gave them A. D. 33 for the time of the crucifixion; and having learned to tell the day of the week by the Dominical letter, Roger Bacon, in the thirteenth century, discovered that the Paschal full moon of that year fell on Friday. This led him then, and the larger portion of the Christian world since, to suppose that the crucifixion took place on Friday, which accounts for the want of decision at the present day as to the year of the crucifixion; for since it has been decided that Christ was born at least four years before the beginning of the Christian era, they cannot reach A. D. 33 without the absurdity of supposing that our Lord's ministry continued seven years. In addition to this, the Paschal full moon fell on Friday in no other year during which they can reasonably suppose our Lord was crucified; but having observed that the crucifixion took place on Thursday, we are now enabled to settle this much-disputed question by astronomy.

The sentence of death as passed on Jesus of Nazareth, which was found among the ruins of antiquity, in the kingdom of Naples, A. D. 1280, and which is considered of undoubted authority, dates the time of the crucifixion "in the year seventeen of the Emperor Tiberius Cæsar and the 27th day of March." If this and the corroborating testimony of all the early Christians who composed the Council of Ephesus in A. D. 196 can be received as authority, the controversy will thus be limited to but two years; for by the above-mentioned authority, the crucifixion must have been either in A. D. 30 or 31. If it was on Thursday, it could not have been in A. D. 31; for the Paschal full moon in that year fell on Tuesday, March 27; and since the Jews were so very strict in regard to the time of the passover that they would not commence the month until it was first declared on oath that the new moon was seen, this cannot be dated a single day higher. If cloudy, or they were unable to see the moon, they commenced their month on the next day; hence, we cannot go more than one day lower, which would be Wednesday. As it is well known that the crucifixion was neither on Tuesday nor Wednesday, it could not have been A. D. 31. Between these two years, then, we will have to take A. D. 30. We can again prove that our Lord was crucified in that year by the note at the end of the book of Nicodemus, dating it in "the nineteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar," which ended August 28, A. D. 30; hence, it could not have been later than A. D. 30; and as this same note dates the time of the crucifixion in the two hundred and second Olympiad, it cannot be before A. D. 30; for that Olympiad commenced July 11, A. D. 29. We are, therefore, restricted to A. D. 30 for the year of the crucifixion. It was by others dated on the seventeenth of Tiberius, which if reckoned from the death of Augustus, answers to A. D. 31. This is easily accounted for by observing that the seventeenth of Tiberius is here according to Ptolemy, who dates the reign of all from January 1, regardless of the day on which their reign commenced; and in order to reconcile this with the note we have alluded to, we must admit that they reckoned the reign of Tiberius from January 1, A. D. 14. The above-mentioned "death-warrant of Jesus Christ" was not taken to the "city of Aquilla, in the kingdom of Naples" before the gospel of our Lord was established there; hence, not earlier than the second century, when the Church was led to conclude that the crucifixion was A. D. 31. As by their lunar cycles they had then discovered that the Paschal full moon fell on March 27, in that year, which was the 6th of the calends of April, it was but natural for them to suppose that those who had dated the time of the crucifixion on the 6th of the calendar of April meant the 6th of the calends of April; for the 6th of the "calend" stood as properly for one as for the other; and it was only by finding the day on which the Paschal full moon fell that they were enabled to decide as to which was meant. Hence, as soon as by their lunar cycles they learned that the Paschal full moon in that year fell on March 27, it was but natural for them to conclude that by the 6th of the "calend of April the 6th of the calends of April was meant, which was March 27; therefore, in translating this it was not considered altering the date to put it on March 27, but only to make it plainer so that all might understand. Upon the supposition that the crucifixion was on Thursday, April 6, A. D. 30, we can thus reconcile all who have written on the subject, while it is impossible to do so upon any other day or year. For example, suppose we say March 27, A. D. 31; then we must understand those who dated their writings the 13th of the "calend" of April to mean the 13th of the calends of April,—that is, March 20,—which places the date seven days before the crucifixion. But if we take April 6, A. D. 30, every difficulty is removed. Then we will understand those who have dated the 13th of the "calend" to mean the 13th of the calendar of April, which is seven days after the crucifixion; or suppose we admit that the crucifixion was on Fridy, April 7, then we will be unable to reconcile those who dated the 6th of the "calend" of April; for if we understand them to mean the 6th of the calendar of April, it would date one day before the crucifixion; and if we understand them to mean the 6th of the calends of April, it would bear date on March 27, or eleven days before the crucifixion. Hence, to reconcile those authors we are compelled to fall back to Thursday, April 6, A. D. 30, on which day and year all may be reconciled, but on no other. The festival as observed by the early Christians, on Thursday until three o'clock in the afternoon in "remembrance of the sufferings of Christ," also shows that the crucifixion took place on Thursday.

The Jews were very strict in noticing the earliest appearance of the new moon; for it was a positive law: "In the beginning of your months ye shall blow with the trumpets" (Num. 10: 10), and "offer a burnt-offering unto the Lord" (Num. 28: 11); and they were able to tell the very day on which the new moon could be seen. All that is necessary, therefore, in order to find a given day of their month, or year, is to learn the age of the moon at that time. As the passover was celebrated "on the 14th of the lunar month when the sun is in Aries" (Jose. Ant. b. iii. c. x. s. 5), the first new moon after March 7 must be the beginning of their year. In A. D. 30 was a new moon on March 22, at 40m. after seven P. M. On March 23 the sun set at 3m. after six, at which time the moon was about one hour high; if clear, it may have been seen at about half-past six, or between that and seven in the afternoon, March 23; hence, March 24 was the first day of their month, commencing with the evening of March 23; and the 14th of their first month for that year fell on Thursday, April 6, commencing on Wednesday evening, April 5. A. D. 30 is thus astronomically proven to be the year in which the crucifixion took place. At B. C. 406, we observed that the wall as built by Nehemiah was completed on the 25th of the sixth month, B. C. 406. Daniel was informed that "after three-score and two weeks" from the completion of "the wall" "the Messiah the Prince" should "be cut off." (Dan. 9: 26). In 62 weeks there are 434 years; and if to 406 we add 29 diminished by 1, we will have 434: hence, the 434 years from the completion of the sixth month, A. D. 29, five months and eighteen days after that time "the Messiah the Prince" was "cut off."

TO CANADA SUBSCRIBERS.

Subscribers in the Canadas, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, will find it to their advantage, when remitting to this office, to do so in Provincial bank bills, or gold. For every $1.00 of such money sent us, we will give $2.00 credit, more or less, according to its current value when received.

For the World's Crisis.

TO EASTERN FRIENDS.

Many of you who take the Crisis are able to take the "Voice" also, and by so doing will be benefitted yourselves, and greatly benefit the cause. When the Voice was started, I doubted the expediency of the movement, and queried about its success. But the time question convinces me that a paper is now needed in the West to help spread the final message to a slumbering church and a perishing world,—and God's children must help support it, and it will help them in turn.

The Crisis must not be abandoned while it pursues its present course, but many of you are as able to take the Voice and Crisis, as we are to take the Crisis and Voice at the West, and thus help start a paper that is soon to be specially needed. The Voice needs a little help in its infancy, and it will soon be able to go alone. Let five hundred of our Eastern brethren send for the Voice for six months or a year. Do it at once. Direct to Eld. J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich. Just give it one lift. Do it now. Let ministers introduce it immediately. Do.

NOTICE.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through the dear Crisis that I have been invited to go to Rhode Island this winter, by Bro. Dixon, to present to the church there what I regard to be the truth touching the Sabbath question; and if there are any other churches troubled on that question, who desire a visit from me in the east, I will comply with their wishes if they will inform me of their wants by writing to me at Reading, Mich., or through the Crisis. Your earnest Bro., waiting for Jesus,

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

From the brother in Providence, to whom we sent last week the $3.00 worth of tracts from the Tract Fund for free distribution, we have received the following prompt and noble response:—

"DEAR BRO.:—The tracts were duly received. For your liberality and judicious selection please accept my thanks. And now allow me to own them entire, and to receive the full benefit of their gratuitous distribution. For this purpose you will find enclosed $5.00, which, with the $3.00 before sent, will pay for them. W. A. M.

VOICES FROM THE POOR.

AN AGED SISTER IN CONN.

Mrs. A. M. is 75 years old; and has not heard an Advent sermon for the last seven years. She is obliged to make her home with her son, where she is not allowed to talk her belief, nor to say anything about it in his family, but reads her paper, which is her only preacher, in silence. Her son is able to pay for it for her, but is not willing;—his god is Wealth. You have sent her the Crisis some time free, and, if it can be, she would be very glad to have it continued. C.

FROM AN OLD WAY-WORN PILGRIM.

You have sent me the Crisis free almost five years, for which I feel very thankful indeed. I don't know how I should get along without it, for I prize it next to my Bible. They are all the preaching I have. It is so much comfort and company to me that I sometimes walk almost two miles to get it from the office; and when there is a week that I don't get it, I miss it very much. But when I consider the hard times, and the cost of publishing, and that I can't pay you for them, I feel as though it is my duty to give them up, that you may send them to some one who can pay; and I will try and content myself with reading my Bible and the papers that I have got. I have lent them to my neighbors whenever I have had an opportunity, and then sewed them together and saved them, so that I and others can have them to read. This from an old way worn pilgrim and friend,

THE BANK OF THE LORD'S POOR.

RESPONSES FROM SHAREHOLDERS.

FROM A POOR WIDOW IN MAINE.

Please find enclosed $2.00 for the Bank of the Lord's Poor. I am a poor widow, but my heart yearns for the poor of the flock; and when I read their soul-stirring letters it often causes the tears to flow, and I almost wish that I was rich in the things of this world, that I might give bountifully to the suffering poor. But God has ordered it otherwise, and I must say, Amen. How glad I am that Jesus has said,—"Blessed be ye poor, for yours is the kingdom of God." We read also in the holy book that God hath "CHOSEN the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him." Blessed choice, and blessed promise! CAROLINE.

Levant, Me.

FROM A SISTER IN CONN.

I want to take a share in the Bank of the Lord's Poor. Please credit the enclosed $2.50 to Sister A. H., who has but one arm, and five children to take care of. Who that professes to believe in the soon coming of the Lord, and has the means, can refuse to hear the cry of Jesus from the lips of his suffering poor?—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of THESE, ye have done it unto ME." Dear tried ones, be faithful, and you will soon receive a crown of life, which the Lord will give "to all who love his appearing."

Wallingford, Ct. MRS. O. YOUNG.

FROM A BROTHER IN NEW YORK.

A reader of the Crisis, though not a subscriber, writes: "Perusing your paper one day, I noticed the letters from some of God's poor. My heart was touched with sympathy and love. I felt that the scripture applied to ME which says,—"If one member suffer, all the members suffer with it"; and the words of our Savior,—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." I felt that I wanted the privilege of casting in a mite for them, and therefore I enclose $2.00. These precious souls scattered here and there may have no money to give, yet their prayers and tears may water the seed sown by you and others, so that it shall bring forth fruit to the glory of God. CAN A CHRISTIAN VOTE?

1. If the government of the United States (or of any State) is vested in the people, does not each man that claims the right of suffrage form a part of this governing power? And if "all they take the sword shall perish with the sword," how can I thus aid to draw the sword, or be a part of that power which beareth the sword, and perish not?

2. The powers that be have drawn and use the sword, which my Lord commands me to put up; and if I cast a vote at the polls, there is no man in the United States that does more properly constitute a part of that power than myself.

3. If foreigners, before they take the oath of allegiance, cannot vote without practising deception on the government, how can those strangers and pilgrims, whose citizenship is not even on earth, (and who have sworn allegiance to the great King of heaven and earth), how can those claim the right of suffrage?—Visitor.

For the World's Crisis.

FROM NEW YORK.

Bro. Grant:—Bro. F. H. Burbank has just spent four weeks with the church in 24th Street, preaching three times each Lord's day, and on the intervening week evenings. The Lord has made his visit a blessing, and several new witnesses for Jesus have been raised up, the word of God, by the agency of the Holy Spirit, taking hold of them; the brethren and sisters have been strengthened also. Bless the Lord! Our love feast last Lord's day was one of the very best we have ever had.

We spent the first half hour in prayer, and so near did we get to the throne, and so blessedly was the presence of the Lord manifested, that some of us (at least) will not soon (if ever) forget it. Glory to God for what he is willing and ready to do, and is now doing for us! Samuel Curry.

OLD CLOTHES.

There are lots of old clothes lying useless, and breeding moths, that ought to be given to the poor. Many articles partly worn out would do good service if mended and made over for children. Hundreds might be made comfortable for the winter, if attention was paid to it in season. Come, brother, or sister, just look into your closets, and see if you can't find something—some garment—that will do for that poor boy or girl. Suppose you think of it. Such prayers are effectual. H. Correspondence.

From Bro. Sanford Hart.

Bro. Grant:—I am again at home after six weeks' experience in "Celesta." I will not tell the particulars in the work now. But O! the trials I endured were hard. I started from here the first day of October and parted with my wife and never expected to see her again. O Bro. Grant, you do not know the anguish of my poor heart. I thought I should die. It was like breaking my heart-strings. My wife begged of me not to go, and mother, with streaming eyes, bid her son farewell, thinking she would see me no more. The depot was crowded with friends to bid us a farewell forever. Bro. George and family went with me, and a sister from Derby. But O how disappointed I was, when I arrived at "Celesta;" not in temporal matters, but in spiritual. But I will say no more, unless you wish me to, Bro. Grant. I want Jesus to come. I am weary and worn, and sad. The night seems long, perils thicken, and the storm gathers blackness. Have I no friends but Jesus? He is enough. Let the storm come. I am safe while in Jesus. From your brother in Christ, Sanford Hart.

Unionville, Ct., Nov. 26, 1864.

From Bro. F. Platt.

Bro. Grant:—Truly God is good and his promises sure. I have just returned from a meeting at Bro. H. Mix's, whose doors have been open for religious worship for some weeks. We have had many good meetings, and the interest has been deep, but none appeared to have the courage to come out and take a decided stand for Christ until to-night, when some fifteen arose and manifested a determination to serve the Lord and prepare for his coming kingdom.

Brn. Woodruff and Hitchcock have been here and labored for us, as also have Srs. Mix and Burnham, and now we are encouraged to believe that the seed sown is springing up in good soil. Pray for us, that the good work may continue and many souls be brought to love our Savior and his glorious' appearing. To God we will give all the glory. Yours in the hope, F. Platt.

Yalesville, Ct.

From Bro. W. H. Mitchell.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord has been reviving his work among us. A number of sinners have been converted, and quite a number of backsliders reclaimed. Bro. Burnham preached for us two Sundays, holding meetings every afternoon and evening during the week. The result has been glorious. A number have come out since he left, and are now on their way rejoicing. Praise the Lord. The interest continues good. We are expecting Bro. C. Goodrich here soon to labor among us awhile. Pray for us, that the word of God may have free course. W. H. Mitchell.

Kennebunkport, Me.

From Bro. I. Damman.

Bro. Grant:—I am pleased to see light shining from the prophecy of Daniel and John. Blessed be the name of the Lord. We have something to encourage the whole length of the journey. Israel Damman.

Sr. Lydia ——, of Oswego Co., N. Y., writes:—"How can I express my thanks to those who have been so mindful of me in my afflictions as to contribute to my necessities. The Lord bless them in basket and in store, and give them an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. The $5.00 which the sister in Glastenbury, Ct., sent to the Crisis office for me is received. It came at a time when it was most needed, and if I had not suppressed my feelings, I should have given God the glory aloud, in the midst of the crowd, when I opened the letter and saw what it contained. My daughter had been very sick with diphtheria, but was then getting better; she is not well yet, but I hope with care, she will yet regain her health. I have no home, but the Lord has given me warm friends wherever I have been. I have no earthly arm to lean upon for support. The Lord help me to be reconciled to my afflictions, be they ever so great.

Thanks for the bundle of tracts which came, I suppose, from the Crisis office. I am giving them away where they will do the most good."

Obituaries.

Phœbe Washburn.

Died in Muscatine, Iowa, Oct. 20th, 1864, Phœbe Washburn, aged sixty-four years, ten months and five days.

She leaves a companion and four children, beside a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Yet we mourn not as those without hope, for we read, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; . . . for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Our dear mother earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, and lived out primitive christianity in all her daily walk and conversation. She experienced religion at an early age, and united with the Presbyterian church; afterward, on account of her husband going with her, with the Methodists.

About eight years ago her attention became aroused to the subject of the second personal coming of Christ, nearness to the judgment, life through Christ alone, and other doctrines clearly taught in God's holy word, which was her constant companion. Soon after that time Bro. P. B. Morgan came here to preach, organized an Advent church, and she with others united. She has ever maintained the character of a devoted follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, and most especially in her own family her christian virtues shone most brightly. I can never since my earliest childhood recollect of her neglecting family and secret prayer. She has left a bright and glorious example for her children to go and do likewise.

As we gathered around her dying bed the Sabbath evening before she died, she told us how precious Jesus was to her; wanted we should all promise to meet her in the kingdom; told us to tell that dear brother in California to meet her in the kingdom; that for the last fifteen years she had daily asked God to bless him, and prepare him for a home in heaven, and whatever else he neglected, to secure an interest in Christ. I have confidence to believe that should that brother die and I never see or hear from him again, I shall meet him and that beloved mother on the banks of deliverance; for I verily believe that God does and will hear and answer such fervent prayers as daily and hourly arose to heaven in his behalf. Thanks be unto God for the blessed promises that "those that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Helen A. Wate.

Sophronia Gay.

Died in Casco, Me., Nov. 3d, 1864, after a painful and lingering illness, Sister Sophronia Gay, aged forty-six years, seven months.

The subject of this notice was truly a "pilgrim and stranger on the earth," having for several years previous to her death walked in intimate communion with her Savior. Although quite retiring in her disposition, she was ever free to talk of Jesus and his truth. Having for a number of years the care of an aged father and mother, she was much confined at home, and thus deprived of many privileges that many enjoy; yet she murmured not, but cheerfully and faithfully performed every duty devolving upon her. To sustain and cheer the hearts of the aged parents in their last days was her joy; and when they "fell on sleep," and were numbered with the congregation of the dead, she had no regrets that she had not done what she could. She gave the brightest evidence to all acquainted with her that she knew by happy experience the joys of a Savior's love. As might have been expected, "her end was peace," and she rests in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. May the God of all comfort cheer the mourning circle, and bring them at last to meet Sophronia in that better land. R. R. York.

E. T. Campbell.

Died in Livermore, Me., Oct. 1st, 1864, Sister Emily, daughter of Eld. Z. and P. M. Campbell, aged nineteen years and six months.

She was a good girl, much loved and respected by all who knew her. She was a believer in the second advent of Christ from her youth, but did not profess the religion of Jesus until just before her death, when she gave her heart to God. We have reason to believe that it is well with her. Death has visited our family circle six times. One little brother, and five sisters now rest in yonder graveyard, but the hope of the gospel sustains us. We believe that they will come again from the land of the enemy, when Jesus comes. Funeral service by Bro. E. M. Haggett.

"O! can it be that they have left us,
Must we to the mandate bow?
O cruel death, it has bereft us,
'Tis hard to bear this stunning blow.
Burdened hearts pulsate with anguish,
Tears are streaming from the eye;
We are left alone to languish
O'er loved ones who in death now lie."

L. E. Small.

C. H. Robinson.

Died in the Cav. Corps Hospital, Army of the Potomac, Aug. 30th, 1864, Charles H. Robinson, aged twenty years.

Charles professed faith in Christ about three years ago, in Lowell, under the labors of Eld. F. Gunner, and by him was baptized and united with the Second Advent church in that place. About one year ago he enlisted in the service of his country, and continued there a few months, when he was seized with that dire disease which sweeps off so many in the army,—"Typho Malaria,"—and in a few days calmly fell asleep. He leaves parents, brothers and sisters to mourn.

We endeavored to comfort the mourning friends on Sunday last, assisted by Eld. F. Towne, from 2 Sam. 14: 14. W. H. Mitchell.

Arnold Crowningshield.

Died of consumption, at Philadelphia Hospital, (Chestnut Hill), Nov. 6th, 1864, Arnold Crowningshield, son of Caleb and Sarah Crowningshield, of Hinsdale, N. H., aged twenty years.

Bro. Arnold in early life embraced the Advent faith, which he lived and loved. He enlisted about one year ago in the United States army. He felt afterwards that he was not in the way of his duty, but he trusted in God, and looked forward with delight to the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ. He leaves a father and mother, brothers and sisters, who deeply mourn his loss. E. Cotton.

John Goodridge.

Died in Rome, Me., Oct. 7th, 1864, Bro. John D. Goodridge, aged thirty-three years.

The church has been robbed of one of its best members, and a wife of a most affectionate husband.

She has laid him away in deep sadness,
Yet not without hope in her breast,
That again he will join her in gladness,
And enter the heavenly rest."

God comfort Sr. Alice and her little son in their lonely hours. L. L. Howard.

Newman A. Whittier.

Died in Rome, Me., Nov. 8th, 1864, Mr. Newman A. Whittier, aged forty years and eight months.

Mr. Whittier found peace in Jesus on his sick bed. His sickness was protracted, which he bore with great patience. He sleeps in Jesus, and rests from all his pains and sorrows. God bless the dear companion and the little sons, and fit them to join him in the kingdom. L. L. Howard.

Benja. Croul.

Died in Oskaloosa, Iowa, Oct. 23d, 1864, Benjamin Croul, of typhoid fever and lung disease, aged fifty-two years and eight months.

This disease lasted five weeks and two days, which he bore with the patience of a christian. He was a believer in the word of God. Our brother lived a christian life, experiencing religion in his younger years. He was sensible of his death from the beginning of his sickness, and after making funeral preparations and giving notice to the weeping family, he sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss, but they mourn not as those that have no hope. I. O. Croul.

Edgar D. Brazee.

Died at Cold Spring, Otis, Mass., Nov. 23d, of consumption, Edgar D. Brazee, son of Eld. Samuel Brazee, aged twenty-one years.

May God give grace to the afflicted parents, and brothers and sisters. They sorrow, but not without hope. Funeral attended by the writer, who addressed an attentive audience from 1 Cor. 15: 57. George L. Teeple.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Avices of the 18th ult.]

The British Government contemplates a material reduction in naval and military expenditures, and have resolved to discontinue the transportation of criminals to Australia.

Muller was executed on the 14th in the presence of a large crowd, confessing his guilt at the last moment.

The treaty of peace between Denmark and Germany was ratified at Vienna, Nov. 16.

There was a severe engagement between the Italian troops and Garibaldians on the 16th, at Bagotia, Northern Lombardy. Many were killed and wounded on both sides. Part of the insurgents were captured and the rest dispersed. The official Turin Gazette denounces the insurgent movement, and proclaims that it is the intention of the Government to put it down.

DOMESTIC.

Baltimore, Nov. 29. The following are the facts as far as gathered of the raid on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. About one o'clock on Monday afternoon a rebel force, estimated at from 1500 to 2000 strong, appeared in front of New Creek station, which was defended by a small body of troops behind earthworks. The latter were soon overcome, and either surrendered or fled. In a short time the enemy were in full possession of the post. They blew up the earthworks and destroyed all temporary and other buildings excepting the residence of Col. Armstrong, who is either now or has been in the rebel army.

The cutting of the telegraph wire gave the alarm to the railroad men at Piedmont, whereupon all the rolling stock of the company and other movable property was sent off.

Soon after the enemy reached Piedmont, and destroyed the round house of the company, also a large workshop and considerable quantity of valuable stationary machinery. So far as is known no damage was done to the railroad track or bridges.

The enemy are reported to have left, going in a southerly direction. There is reason to hope that the raiders will be overtaken by a force sent in pursuit.

New York, Nov. 29. The Herald's Washington dispatch says information has been received here of the reformation of a peace party in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi for readmission of those States.

Nov. 30. Roger A. Pryor arrived here this morning and was taken to Fort Lafayette. He contradicts the report that he had said Macon and Milledgeville had been captured and that Augusta had probably fallen. He says Sherman is the ablest officer in our army, and that the South has more to fear from his movements than those in progress elsewhere.

Nashville, midnight, Nov. 30. The enemy at 3 P. M. to-day made a furious attack upon Gen. Thomas. They attacked with two corps and after very severe fighting were repulsed at all points with frightful loss. Their killed and wounded will number 6000. We captured 1000 prisoners.

Eye witnesses say that this engagement, in desperation and furious fighting, was hardly equaled by the battle of Stone river. Forrest in person was on the field rallying his men. There is a rumor in circulation that he was killed, but it lacks confirmation.

New York, Dec. 1. The Richmond Dispatch of the 28th says: "Georgia papers print much concerning Sherman's movements and about our own which it would be imprudent to copy. It was pretty well ascertained that the left wing of Sherman's army, when it reached Madison numbered 16,000 men. They burned the town when they left."

Augusta papers show that the excitement in that city a week ago Monday was very great, and it was proposed to impress the negroes. One of the papers was very fearful of treachery on the part of citizens on the arrival of Sherman.

Cairo, Ill., Dec. 1. Memphis papers of yesterday give detailed accounts of a plot by rebel agents to burn the Memphis and Charleston railroad depot and government stores worth $2,000,000. The plot was discovered by a U. S. detective, to whom the matter was entrusted by Gen. Washburne, and the incendiaries were caught in the act of firing the buildings. It is alleged that these emissaries were to receive from the rebel government ten per cent of the value of the property destroyed. Dr. McMillan, proprietor of the Charleston House of Memphis, is among those arrested. He is charged with being the agent of the rebel government and with concerting the plot. The prisoners are to be tried and will probably be hung.

New York, Dec. 1. Gen. Gilmore goes to New Orleans to-day to inspect the defenses in the West Mississippi military division.

The World's Fortress Monroe correspondent says the Florida was ordered to Norfolk to coal, and that just before starting she was run into by the transport Alliance and seriously damaged. The steam pump was set at work and kept going constantly immediately after her capture at Bahia. This last shock made her leak much worse, and another pump was put at work, and every effort made to keep her afloat, but all to no purpose, and before she could be towed to shoal water she went down.

The Herald's New Orleans correspondent says: "Gen. A. L. Lee, commanding the Union cavalry forces at Baton Rouge, returned to that point on the 22d ult. from an expedition to Liberty and Brookville, bringing with him three pieces of artillery, about 800 horses and mules, and 200 prisoners, including the entire staff of Gen. Hodge, all of which were captured after a spirited engagement with the enemy. It is reported that a large portion of Magruder's army is endeavoring to cross the Mississippi to reinforce Hood's army, but they are watched by Union troops and gunboats.

Georgia papers of the 25th and Richmond of the 29th are received. By these papers, which appear panic stricken, Sherman's movements must be very erratic. His army at times is omnipresent, then it is nowhere. It is here, there, and everywhere, and then it is not known where it is.

A special correspondent of the New York Times writes from Savannah river, Georgia, Nov. 27th, stating that there is much excitement among the rebels in Savannah on account of the mystery which shrouds the objective point of Sherman. The writer sums up the statements of the rebel papers as follows:

"To impede Sherman's progress, the bridges over the Oconee river have been destroyed and the country devastated in his front, so that he shall be unable to subsist upon it. The roads have been to a great extent rendered impassable by felled trees and pitfalls, and the rebels claim that during the past three days the progress of the Union troops eastward has not exceeded six miles. They also claim that their cavalry are picking up large numbers of our stragglers, by dashing upon our rear and flanks. From all that I can learn, I believe Sherman's main body to be within 125 miles of Savannah, with nothing to oppose him save the militia and such other unorganized forces as the emergency has brought together, and that the chances of his reaching the seaboard are at present altogher in his favor. A tremendously bold game is in progress on the military chess-board, and it is easy to see that the enemy believe it to be in our hands."

New York, Dec. 1. The investigation of the plot to burn the city is proceeding with the greatest vigor and secrecy. Gen. Dix is closeted daily with detectives and others who are engaged in this business. The city at this moment is under the strictest surveillance. Lists of arrivals from the South are sent daily from the hotels to headquarters, and all suspected persons who fail to report will be summarily punished.

New York, Dec. 2. Letters dated Port Royal, S. C. Nov. 25th, say that there is good news today by flag of truce that Sherman is within forty miles of Savannah.

Baltimore, Dec. 5th. The American has the following:

Advices from Fortress Monroe last evening report the arrival there of the steamer Gen. Lyon with 750 released prisoners. At the time the Gen. Lyon left Savannah—last Thursday night—the latest news received there was to the effect that Gen. Sherman occupied Millen, Ga., and that his cavalry was scouting several miles out from the town, meeting with little resistance.

Every effort was being made for the defense of the city. Our prisoners report boys of thirteen years and even women assisting in the trenches and earthworks. Sherman was slowly but surely advancing to the coast and no doubt of his success need be entertained.

Cincinnati, Dec. 5. Major Gen. Stanley, who was wounded in the battle of Franklin, arrived here yesterday. He says the reports of that battle that have reached the public are not exaggerated. The rebels met with their heaviest losses in attacking our trains, which were of enormous size and value, and filled the roads for twelve miles.

New York, Dec. 5. Considerable excitement was caused in this city yesterday among natives of the Southern States now resident here and others, supposed to have some knowledge of the recent extensive incendiary plot, by the arrest at the principal hotels, under orders from Gen. Dix, of some sixty of their number.

Prisoners brought in to day say Brig. Generals Gist, Stahl, Grambery and Brown of the rebel army, were killed at Franklin, and Cheatham lost every Brigadier in his corps.

Affairs in Mexico.—A correspondent of the New York Herald writes from the City of Mexico on Oct. 31st, representing the condition of the country under the imperial regime as very deplorable. Commerce is stagnant, and agricultural operations have been so much interrupted by the continual warfare, brigandage, murder and robbery throughout almost the entire Mexican territory during the past two years that the most necessary articles are in the greatest scarcity, and many people are said to be dying of starvation in the cities of Mexico and San Luis. To alleviate these sufferings, a special tax of one per cent. per month has been levied by the imperial government on all kinds of property. This, added to all the previous taxes with which the people were burdened, has caused great dissatisfaction. A number of the French troops have embarked for France, and Maximilian has been notified that it will be necessary to devise some new financial measures or cease the continuance of the war. The republican Gen. Romero captured a supply train on its way to the garrison of Morella, and immediately put to death all the Mexican traitors among the detachment accompanying it, which was commanded by the notorious Marquez. In the State of Michoacon between three and five thousand republicans have recently formed themselves into guerrilla bands, and scattered among the mountains, for the purpose of waylaying and harassing the invaders.—Journal.

Wholesale Robbery.—An extraordinary system of thieving by the master workmen and some of the minor officials has been discovered at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. Their robberies it is estimated will amount to one or two hundred thousand dollars. Resin, tin, lead, copper and other material purchased for the yard were conveyed from the vessels on cars to other parts of the city and disposed of. In one instance a large quantity of copper stolen found its way to New York, and in the course of trade was offered to the very individual who had in the first instance furnished it to the Navy Yard at Philadelphia. He gave the information which set the authorities at work. Several of the parties implicated, who were employed at moderate salaries, have lately erected expensive houses and furnished them in style.—Journal.

Attempt to Blow up one of the Sound Steamers.—A torpedo was found in one of the berths of the steamer City of New London. The fuse had been lit, but had become extinguished before the torpedo was ignited, and the hellish design of the perpetrators was providentially frustrated. It is thought that just before the steamer started on her regular trip from New York, some person entered the boat, placed the torpedo in the berth, lighted it, and returned on shore.—Traveller.

The Indian War.—Gen. Sully, having disposed of his troops in winter quarters, has gone to Washington for the purpose of procuring authority and means to negotiate peace with the hostile Indians. He reports that most of the hostile tribes have come into Fort Sully and made overtures of peace. Nothing has been done as yet, but he is confident that speedy peace can be concluded with all the Indians on the upper Missouri.

☞ Gen. Banks has received his orders, and will leave the last of next week for New Orleans to carry out the policy which he inaugurated in bringing Louisiana back into the Union as a free State.

☞ Gen. Butler has issued an order establishing free schools for the white children of Norfolk and Portsmouth.

MARRIED.

In Gilford Village, N. H., Dec. 3d, 1864, by J. G. Munsey, Esq., Mr. Enoch Flanders, Jun., of Gilford, N. H., to Miss Mary A. Foss, of Alton, N. H.

In Concord, N. H., by Rev. S. Utly, Bro. Henry Little, of Concord, to Sr. Hannah B. Winch, of Marshfield, Vt.

Notices.

Conference in Holden.

A conference will be held in Holden, Mass., at the Town Hall, commencing Wednesday, Dec. 21st, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Preaching by different ministering brethren. Prayer and conference meeting at 10 A. M., preaching at 2 P. M., and also at 6 in the evening.

All in Holden and its vicinity who love God and the salvation of sinners, and desire to know and understand the truth, and be prepared for the day of his coming, are cordially invited. Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, but exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. Pray for God's blessing upon the meeting.

In behalf of the church, H. K. Flagg.

Meetings in Dansville, N. Y.

Elder Edwin Burnham will commence laboring with the church of God in Dansville, N. Y., on the second Sunday in January, 1865, if the Lord will, to continue for a length of time, according to the will of God. The object of the meetings will be to convict sinners of the truth that they may be converted, whether in the professed church or out of it. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to visit us during these meetings, who will make it their sole purpose in visiting us to help on in this work. We believe in prayer; therefore, brethren, pray for us. F. Burr.

Religious Notice.

Providence permitting, Elder Edwin Burnham will commence a series of meetings with the Free Evangelical Church in North Attleboro, Mass., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 20th, to continue several weeks. We earnestly hope and pray that many precious souls may, as the result of these meetings, be made ready for a home in the kingdom of God. We invite our friends in the surrounding region to attend and labor with us. C. Cunningham.

Conference at Lee, N. H.

A conference will commence at Lee, (Union House,) Dec. 18th, and continue as long as may be duty. Bro. C. S. Emerson will be expected; and all who feel like working for the salvation of sinners are invited to attend. Wier Davis.

Postponed.

The dedication of the Advent Chapel at Chichester, N. H., (Pine Ground), which was announced to take place Dec. 10th, is postponed until further notice. The builder informs us that the house is not ready. J. G. Smith.

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session with the church in Danielsonville, Conn., commencing the first Wednesday in January. The friends of Jesus and others are invited to attend. A. C. Greene, Secy.

Meetings at Rocky Brook, R. I.

If the Lord will, Albion Ross will commence a series of meetings at Rocky Brook, (Peacedale) R. I., on Saturday evening, Dec. 10th, and continue as long as may be duty. May God give the increase. H. L. Hastings.

To the Brethren.

Bro. E. McCullock, of Savoy, Mass., purposes to devote his time and labors in the gospel field as the Lord may direct and the way may open. We, the undersigned, cordially recommend him to the different churches as worthy of their confidence and support.

J. Hemenway.
C. Goodrich.
H. Pratt.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co., now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. As the new hymn book is not to be published at present, we have contracted with Bro. Himes for the "Christian Lyre," so that we can supply those who want them in Maine at wholesale and retail. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. Wellcome & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $3.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit, and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

The Church in Springfield.

The Second Advent Society worshiping at No. 5 Oak Street, Springfield, Mass., have hired a new hall near the corner of Walnut and State streets, where they will hold meetings every Sabbath. They desire the help and co-operation of all of God's servants who love to preach the truth. All such are invited to visit them, and sound the note of warning to a perishing world.

P. S. Butler, for the Church.

Notice.

Preaching brethren who wish to send appointments to Northfield, Mass., can correspond with A. Gage, or Edwin Lyman. J. K. Bellows.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

For the World's Crisis.

"TO HIM THAT OVERCOMETH."

I read God's holy word,
Which teaches me the way
That leads us to that better land
Beyond life's fleeting day.

Yet when temptations come,
And trials me assail,
Like sinking Peter oft I feel
My hopes of no avail.

And then again I read,
"He that shall overcome,
Alone shall eat of life's fair tree,
In Eden's happy home."

And yet again I read,
He that shall overcome,
Shall of the hidden manna eat,
Be given a white stone;

And in that stone a name,
Which none but he shall know;
And unto him shall power be given,
To him shall nations bow.

His name will Christ confess
Before his Father, God;
Before his holy angels, too,
Who wait their Maker's nod.

And since such promises
To mortals here are given,
Shall we not seek, and toil and strive,
To gain that blissful heaven?

Then we from day to day,
On Him must still rely
For help, to keep us in the way
That leads to joys on high.

Morris, Ct. L. B. W.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 4.

BEGINNING AND ENDING OF THE TWENTY-THREE HUNDRED DAYS.

Having the clear light of Bible chronology before us, by the aid of which we can measure either forward into the future, or back into the past, from any given point, with accuracy, we are prepared to begin a search for the commencement and termination of the prophetic periods.

We will first look at the 2300 days of Daniel 8: 14. Where do they begin, and when do they end? Correct answers to these questions will reveal to us our chronological standpoint upon the stream of time. This measurement of time, 2300 days, is given in reply to the question, "How long shall be the vision?" which began with the pushing of the Medo-Persian Ram, and continued through the history of the Grecian Goat, with his first horn, through the history of the subsequent four horns, and through the history of that remarkable horn which grew out of one of the four, and waxed exceeding great, and continued till "broken without hand."

When Daniel had these symbols presented to his mind "in the third year of the reign of King Belshazzar," (v. 1,) this "Ram" with his two "high" horns was undeveloped; hence, the measurement cannot begin at the time Daniel gazed upon these symbols. What then? "Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." (v. 16.) Will he do it? Let us watch him. He begins the work by telling Daniel what powers were symbolized by the Ram, the Goat, and the "exceeding great" horn, and then takes his departure, after saying, "Shut thou up the vision, for it shall be for many days," (v. 26;) and Daniel adds, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." (v. 27.) Hence, at the departure of Gabriel some part of the vision had not been explained, for "none understood it:" therefore, if Gabriel obeys the command enjoined upon him, "Make this man to understand the vision," he will have to visit Daniel again to complete the task.

The time of the captivity was about expiring when Daniel "understood by books the number of years whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem." (Dan. 9: 2.) Daniel then supposing that the time had about come for the cleansing of the sanctuary, begins to pray, confessing first the sins of his people, and then prays for the cleansing of the "sanctuary," where God was wont to manifest himself to his people in their mortal state:—"Cause thy face to shine upon thy SANCTUARY that is desolate." The promise had been made that the sanctuary should be "cleansed"—and in due time it will be, and God's glory be exhibited once more, not only in Jerusalem, but in all the earth; but Daniel had harbored a wrong impression in thinking that this work was to be done at the expiration of the captivity; accordingly he adds:

"Whilst I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the VISION [to whom the command had been given, 'Make this man to understand the vision'] at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me . . . and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding . . . . therefore understand the matter, and consider THE VISION." (vers. 21–23.)

What vision? The very one he was previously commanded to make Daniel understand, and the very one of which Daniel affirmed, after his first departure, "NONE UNDERSTOOD IT;" in consequence of which Daniel was laboring under a mistake in supposing that the sanctuary was to be cleansed at the end of the captivity. Gabriel comes to rectify this incorrect application of the vision, by telling Daniel, "Seventy weeks [of years—490 years] are determined [literally 'cut off'] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." (Verse 24.) "Cut off" from what? Evidently from the measurement of time given in the vision, reaching to the cleansing of the sanctuary—the 2300 days. If "cut off" from the 2300 days, they must begin with them, and also be a shorter measurement. From this Daniel could easily discover his mistake: for if from that measurement reaching to the cleansing of the sanctuary, 490 years were to be "cut off," as the time allotted to Daniel's people and city before a certain "Prince should come and destroy the city and sanctuary" again, certainly the 2300 days must be prophetic—2300 years. But where do they begin?

1. If seventy weeks of years, or 490 years were assigned to Daniel's people and city, that measurement must have expired before the threatened "curses of the COVENANT" (Deut. 29: 21) were "confirmed" with them by the Roman "Prince" for one week, otherwise the time assigned them would be infringed upon. This could not be. They must have their full time first; then let the Roman Prince, the rod of God's anger, do his work—let Jerusalem be "encompassed with armies." This gigantic demonstration marks the time when their allotted measurement reached its end, namely: in A. D. 65, at the beginning of the seven years war. From this point run backwards just 490 years, and you reach the year B. C. 426. What do we find there? We find the Medo-Persian Ram "pushing" against Daniel's people, in the twelfth of Ahasuerus, alias Artaxerxes.—Esth. 3: 7–15.

2. The nature of the "pushing" of this Ram, may be inferred from another symbol of the same power,—the Medo-Persian "Bear," (Dan. 7: 5), which "had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it; and they [these ribs] said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh." These ribs must represent a relic of some obsolete people, and this relic now in the Bear's mouth ready to be crushed; but before being devoured, these ribs say to the Medo-Persian Bear, "Arise, devour much flesh." This sounds more like a request for unconditional slaughter, than for a war for the subjugation of people, in which case slaughter is not the object, but only the means to obtain the object in case of a refusal to submit. In the very mouth of the Medo-Persian power we find, according to Josephus, a relic of the Amalekites—Haman and his family—who were enemies of the Jews, and who said to the King, "Let it be written that they may be destroyed," or "Arise, devour much flesh," or make a mighty push against these people "westward, northward and southward." The pushing commenced with vigor, and the requisite preparations were made to "devour much flesh," or exterminate the Jews in obedience to the request of the "ribs;" but before the day arrived to blot out the people of God from the earth "in one day," the Medo-Persian power changed its mind, and "did according to his will," (8: 4), which was to save God's people, and crush the ribs; for "Haman, his wife and sons, were all slain." With this mighty pushing of the Medo-Persian Ram—sending its numerous messengers into 120 provinces, with death warrants against all of God's people in the year B. C. 426—Daniel's vision begins, the measurement of which is 2300 days, reaching to 1875.

But what marks their termination? Certainly not the coming of the Lord, but the cleansing of the sanctuary—an event subsequent to his coming. This measurement reaches to the "last end of the INDIGNATION," (v. 19), but when the Lord comes, the saints are to be "caught up" to meet him, and remain in their "chambers" "until the INDIGNATION be overpast;" (Isa. 26: 20); hence, the indignation continues after the resurrected saints are taken away, and the 2300 days reach to the "last end of the indignation," and end in 1875. Then when are saints taken away? We shall hereafter prove that they will leave the earth in the coming Jubilee, A. D. 1868, leaving the wicked to experience a "time of trouble such as never was," and share in the great indignation; while the saints above keep the antitypical "feast of Tabernacles" in their "chambers," before the sanctuary is cleansed. In the type, the feast of tabernacles was of seven days' duration. So in the antitype it will cover a space of seven prophetic days—seven years. Subtract seven years from 1875, where the 2300 days end, at the "last end of the indignation," or "time of trouble," and we have 1868 as the time when the saints "shall be delivered" therefrom. (Dan. 12: 1.) Saint of God, rejoice! for the great jubilee is approaching.

INCONSISTENT WORDS.

The following I find in a Sabbath School song book, viz., "Silver Chimes," and if I wrote so many contradictions in so few lines, I should feel that something was the matter with me.

"WEEP NOT FOR HIM."

"Weep not for him, mother, weep not for thy boy,
He sleepeth in Jesus 'mid bright heavenly joy;
Weep not, though the clods grow over his breast,
For immortal he reigns in the land of the blest."

Here it is said "he sleepeth in Jesus," and "the clods grow over his breast," which is true Bible doctrine; but the last line, "Immortal he reigns in the land of the blest," contradicts the first part: both cannot be true. It may be poetry, but it is not truth. How inconsistent the verse reads! Another verse is as follows:—

"Weep not for him, sister, though forth from thy sight
His form hath departed to heaven's own light;
Though his dear voice is hushed in the low quiet grave,
Yet it joineth above 'mid hosannahs to praise."

Here are more mistatements;—"His form departed to heaven's own light." Did the poet ever see the first proof in the Bible for this assertion? I don't believe he did. Again, "his dear voice hushed in the low quiet grave—yet it joineth above 'mid hosannas to praise." How is this? "Voice hushed in the quiet grave," and "yet joineth hosannas to praise"? How can it be in both places? The whole verse is a contradiction of itself, and a man ought to know better than to write such language. Still another verse reads thus:—

"Weep not for him, brother, though he ne'er again
Will join in thy play, or will soothe all thy pain;
But live so to meet when life's toils are o'er,
Thy brother who waits on the bright shining shore."

Here it is said "he ne'er again will join in play," or "soothe pain"; then why ask the brother to "live so to meet him on the shining shore"? The whole poem is a string of words misplaced—like a string of beads consisting of pearls and potatoes. It makes me almost nervous to read such words in such books. I hope you will not sing them if you ever happen where they are given out for that purpose. It is astonishing what a vast amount of such reading is to be found in hymn books and Sabbath school books. I never like to hear such fables sung, and I never will join in singing them, even if I could sing. If people read less of Shakspeare, Shelley, Homer, and other visionary and heathen poets, and more of the Bible, there would not be so much fiction mixed with so little truth, as to make it a queer dose to present one with.

I once heard children singing,

"Bright things can never, never die;
Our souls can never, never die!"

and I found what this poet considered the soul to be, viz., a "bright thing"; and consequently as "bright things never die," the soul was of a similar existence. But I read in a better book than any poet can get up, that "The soul that sinneth it shall DIE"; and so I know the poet is off the track.

Again, I have heard the hymn—

"I want to be an angel,
And with the angels dwell;"

sung by Sunday school children; but people often want what they never receive; and they never will be angels, never: only equal to the angels, that is all.

In prayer meetings I have heard them sing about "Going to my happy angel home," and it is strange that people are so infatuated with such ideas. Christian, don't you sing any such, or any similar songs, no matter if they are in hymn books. They ought to be expunged; they are not true.

MURMURING.

We learn in the word of God that we should do "all things without murmuring and disputings." How many who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Savior can say I am not guilty of this sin? but few; yes, too much of this in families, in the church, and even those papers that are devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth, holiness of heart, glad tidings of life to a perishing world, do we frequently see a spirit of murmuring, disputing and fault-finding with this brother and that brother because there can not be an agreement in regard to all points of Bible doctrine.

We have often been made sad to see such a spirit, and felt fearful to hand our friends the papers to read, thinking they could do but little good. We do not wish to keep the light hid, and we must not in this evil time, when all should be warned of a coming judgment. Our blessed Savior has told us, "Let your lights be burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord." May we all be led to self-examination, and see that we walk in the light, have fellowship one with another, watch unto prayer, that all things be done in charity, speaking the truth in love; for whereas there is among you envying, strife and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? If ye have received Christ, walk in him; have that charity that suffereth long, is kind, not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, endureth all things.

O that the church of Christ would follow more closely in the footsteps of their divine Master, "forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." "Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Then will be manifest the spirit of love, joy, gentleness, no hardness, strife, resentments. We must have the spirit of Christ if we enter the kingdom, where all will be love and harmony.

SUFFERING AND PATIENCE.

PICTURE OF AN INVALID.

The following sketch of one of earth's humble children of sorrow, is taken from an address delivered in 1861 by Prof. J. L. Hart, L. L. D. before the PhrenaKosmian Society of Penn. College. Read it, ye suffering and sorrowing ones, and learn thence a lesson of patience and resignation till the great Physician comes. W. B. H.

"There lives at this moment, in the town of New Hartford, Conn., in a small unpainted house by the roadside, some two miles from the village, a poor woman by the name of CHLOE LANKTON, bed-ridden with an incurable disease. For twenty-seven years she has lain in that humble apartment, unable to rise or to be removed, the subject of continual bodily pain, and at times of such excruciating agony as to make her continued life a miracle.

Her father, her mother, her four sisters, have successively died before her eyes, and been carried out to their long home. She has been for many years left alone in the world, with no means of support but that which occasional and unsolicited charity has sent her, and with no stated companionship but that of a common, hired domestic. Yet the grace of God has so wrought in the heart of that lone woman, that her very face is said to beam with angelic sweetness, and all who go to see her come away charmed, as if they had been to visit the abode of a princess. Young people for miles around visit her, not in the spirit of compassion, but for the pleasure they find in her companionship. The very children troop to her abode to show her all their latest treasures, and no new dress, or doll, or kite, is thought quite complete, till it has had the approval of their dearest confident and friend.

What has given this lone invalid such power to captivate and charm both old and young? Nothing but the Spirit of the living God, working in her a heavenly sweetness of character, that finds a natural expression in all lovely and beautiful ways."

THE LAST KISS.

As musing homeward bound, on one of those chariots drawn by the iron horse, we halted. I beheld upon the steps of a moderate looking cot, a couple seeming to be much affected, and that to tears. He being clad in his country's uniform, I knew well what caused those tears to flow. He must leave. As the iron horse gave the signal, there was a clasping of hands, an imprinting of kisses, and as he bade her farewell, she entered the door, took her seat by the window, her face buried in her handkerchief. She soon arose, came to the door, as if in agony of mind, as if those ties were too strong to be broken.

Thought I, is that the last kiss? He had gone, to be surrounded by numberless dangers, perhaps to fall upon the battle-field, and die without a friend to sympathize in those hours of distress, or to give so much as a cup of cold water when fever is burning his palsied brow. She is left to bear a double responsibility and to endure the trials incumbent under such circumstances alone; but is that the last kiss? Perhaps yes, perhaps no. The Lord knows.

Many a time as I have taken leave of loved ones at home, as they would gather around to receive the last kiss, my heart would be moved, and the tear would start as I thought of absenting myself. But was that the last kiss? No! for the same has been oft repeated. Again how oft have I seen the tears flow around the lifeless forms of those loved, and as the last parting manifestations of love, would bend over cold forms and impress a kiss upon their whitened brow. Say, mourner, was that the last kiss?

Dear Sister, perhaps your companion has been clad with the whole christian armor, and his Captain has called him into active service; will you let him go? Ah! yes, impress a kiss, and tell him to go at his Master's call. Has he gone to battle for truth? and as he left the home fireside did you and the little ones gather around and give him the parting kiss? He may fall by the hand of the enemy, ere he reaches the home fireside again.

Perhaps he has fought his battles well, he comes home worn out, he falls asleep, his work is done, you love him still, your heart almost breaks with anguish, and the last token lavished upon that loved one is the impress of a kiss. Say, Sister, shall that be the last?

Again I have seen those little ones plucked as buds from the branch ere they had blossomed, and torn from their mother's arms; and do you remember, mother, as that little earth angel was talking with death, how you impressed the kisses upon its cheeks, and were they the last? Perhaps yes, perhaps no. This is yet to be decided by your own will, to work out your own salvation.

They went forth with their Master's uniform on, they wore it to the end, they have fallen, they sleep in Jesus, your last token of love was a kiss; shall it be the last? Perhaps when they fell, you were with them in the Master's service. Have you, Peter like, denied your Master? Then that kiss, Judas like, is the last. How can you betray that loved one with a kiss, and say it shall be the last?

Are you still holding on to the gospel armor? is your faith still strong in the Lord? is it made alive by good works? do you mean by the grace of God to work out your salvation, though with fear and trembling? Then that parting kiss is not the last, thank God, we shall meet them again, and once more impress upon those cheeks manifestations of love that can never fade, with lips that will ever move in accents of praise to that God that has manifested to us such unbounded love; then say, brother, sister, shall loved ones be betrayed, shall that kiss be the last?

In a kiss, I find a token
Of unbroken, earnest love,
Shared by each, though dimly spoken,
While in course of time we move.

In a kiss, I find an earnest
Of unfading joys so bright,
As we journey to the harvest
In the darkness of the night.

In the kiss I find a treasure
Stored away like jewels rare,
To find their worth there is no measure;
Seek thee, then, thy treasures there.

ATHENIANS.—Acts 17: 21.

"For all the Athenians, and strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing."

Bishop Pearce in his day said, "This is a striking feature of the city of London in the present day. The itch for news which generally argues a worldly, shallow, or unsettled mind, is wonderfully prevalent; even ministers of the gospel, negligent of their sacred function, are become in this sense Athenians; so that the book of God is neither read nor studied with half the avidity and spirit as a newspaper. These persons, forgetful not only of their calling, but of the very spirit of the gospel, read the account of a battle with the most violent emotions; and, provided the victory falls to their favorite side, they exult and triumph in proportion to the number of thousands that have been slain! It is no wonder if such become political preachers, and their sermons be no better than husks for swine. To such, the hungry sheep look up, and are not fed. God pity such miserable Athenians, and direct them to a more suitable employment!"

"ZION.—CELESTE."

My note you were so kind as to publish, embodied some points concerning this misnamed "Zion" and "Celeste" in Pennsylvania.

As many devout people have neither geography, nor history, nor prophecy, nor "light within," to detect the fallacy of whatever pretender, who "manifests a good spirit," it devolves on others, who have the light of God, to let it shine, and so expose the danger, lest some should be ensnared and taken; otherwise, this monstrous delusion might be left to die its speedy and natural and necessary death.

Bro. Wm. Hicks, whom I have known some ten years, told me he had spent about five months with Peter, the man of Celeste. He gave me these points of fact, as his testimony, to be made public.

1. "Celeste" (heaven) and "Zion" are Peter Armstrong's names for his settlement in Sullivan Co., Pa.

2. He calls himself "the Restorer,"—who is to assume the title of our Lord and Judge!

3. He enumerates, after eleven years of gathering "in the name of the Lord," "sixteen" souls!

4. These included his seven children, himself and wife! Only one was there beside for some time; but at the publication of his No. 2 Day-star, six more had gone to see, etc. What a work for Peter during eleven years!

5. His place and gathering is "The Kingdom of God," etc., and destined to "fill the whole earth!"

6. When our old Bro. Douglas asked him for his authority for his pretensions, Peter told him (Douglas) that "he had no faith!" Of course he had no right to any faith in Peter as "The Restorer," or his "Kingdom!"

7. Peter told Douglas that he must leave; and he did go. Then Bro. Hicks asked Peter for his right to drive Douglas off as he had done, and quoted some Scripture to show Peter had erred. Peter said, "I do not care anything about what the Scripture says. I got my duty in ANSWER TO PRAYER"!!

This is the substance; and the whole seems consistent with the primary assumption. It is all wrong—all a dangerous delusion.

God's "Zion" was the site of David's throne, near three thousand years ago—the capital of Judea in Asia. God's "Restorer" is Jesus Christ our Lord! He shall sit, saith the Heavenly Father, "on my Holy Hill of Zion." Ps. 2; Luke 1: 31–33; Rev. 14: 1–3. Thus Peter and his "Zion" are only a pretense! J. B. COOK.

HEART-CHEERING.

Glory be to Jesus! "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." Isa. 53, 11. He has satisfied our travailing souls this day, Nov. 27th, in waiting upon two sable daughters into the liquid grave—Sr. Judy's and Eliza's daughters. Just as we closed the exercises a brother presented me an open Bible, saying, "See what I have just opened to at the thirty-fourth verse!" I read as follows: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respector of persons." Acts 10. I exclaimed with joy, I perceive the same. All glory to his name!

Fifteen precious souls surrounded the table of the Lord, and each one spoke and witnessed for Jesus. Among them were Eliza and her two sons and daughter, all of whom have recently put on Christ. She says, "The Lord gives me my children, one at a time, and by and by he will give me my husband also. Pray for this, brethren and sisters.

The ark of God steadily moves on here. Pray for us. There are many adversaries. Your sister, in hope, E. S. WILLARD.

THE WORD WITHOUT THE BLOW.

I remember when a boy, how one of the neighboring farmers always excited my wonder by his manner of driving his oxen. There was none of the loud shouting and hallooing, the flourish and cracking of whips, that I was accustomed to see in others; but he walked quietly by their side, or rode in his seat, never raising his voice above its usual tone, never speaking a second time; but whether he wished them to advance or stop, turn to the right hand or the left, he gave the appropriate word, as he would speak to you or to me; and what most of all upset my ideas of of the requisites for a teamster was, they always obeyed him. Whether the load was light or heavy, whether hauling stones or uprooting stumps, 'twas all the same, they girded their stout necks to the yoke with a right good will, as though they had found a master for whom "duty was pleasure, and love was law."

If even the brute creation are thus susceptible to the law of kindness, much more important is it that the teacher should make it his constant study, as the law of his life.

Its manifestations are not to be regarded as mere ornaments, to be worn only on festive days; but as essential as the highest and truest attainments in scholarship. How often have we seen a pupil rise to recite, but, disconcerted by the harshness of the teacher at some inadvertency, stammering, confused, and bewildered, compelled to sit down, confessing a total failure; when but an encouraging word, a sympathizing look, or even a little quiet patience, was needed to draw out a full and clear explanation of a carefully-studied and well-prepared lesson.

By a few repetitions of like experience, what wonder he should become disheartened, careless, and idle, and that, disgusted with school and all its belongings, he should abandon his hopes and prospects of education, to engage in some more congenial though inferior pursuit—his faith in humanity shaken, his disposition soured, his life's plans thwarted.

And what is saddest of all, too, it is the more delicate, the choice plants, that first droop, blasted by the untimely frost. Those of a hardier, coarser growth and texture soon become accustomed to the chilling atmosphere, and learn to brave its bitterest blasts. And I have sometimes thought that I could detect the conscious twinkle of the eye when an intentional blunder had produced the desired effect, and the tormentor and his discomfited victim had changed places. But the spirit of improvement, the generous ambition, the love of learning, and the kind respect had departed, and given place to ignoble passions, which were henceforth to bear their legitimate fruits of jangle, discord, and recrimination.—Illinois Teacher.

ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD.

All? yes, ALL. All our daily labor, or daily business. Every day's work that we perform, every bargain that we make with a christian or a worldling. All our plans for the present and for the future. Our choice of a pursuit in life, and the manner of prosecuting it. All our eating and drinking, our food, luxuries. Our clothing and ornaments. We are to work or cease to work, to eat and drink or abstain, to trade or refuse to trade, to labor or to rest, to enjoy a season of recreation or to refrain from it, just as duty dictates, or rather with an eye single to the glory of God. And the same in our devotional exercises. We are not merely to preach and pray, and sing and exhort, secretly, socially, and publicly, when we feel impressed to perform such an act, or experience a strong sense of duty, any more than we would wait for a particular impression to refrain. But when the proper seasons arrive for labor, we are to labor for the glory of God, and when the order of the hour is appropriately prayer or exhortation, we should be in a frame of mind which predisposes us to worship, and should be as ready to do it as we are ready to attend to our labor or business.

To these principles, we believe there is no exception. They are gospel principles. If we shrink from them, we shrink from those rules whose observance is essential to our highest spirituality and happiness. Not that we cannot be christians otherwise than by their observance, but that we cannot be such devoted, spiritual, strong christians as we should be—such christians as know the fulness of Christ and salvation by blessed experience, and daily walk and talk with God.

Do we fear that the observance of this rule, in all its bearings, would diminish our worldly thrift and prosperity? Well, what if it should? Would not the sweet, the blessed enjoyment of a daily heaven in the soul, more than make amends for that loss? A constant sense that God is with us and for us, that we are his particular favorites? Do we want more worldly thrift than God is willing we should have? Do we want more than is for our real good? Do we want more of this world than shall fall to our lot in the straight path of duty? And will we deliberately rob God of our affections and our service, to obtain the world by means displeasing to him? And will we rob our souls of that communion with our Redeemer which we profess to desire above all else, and to prize above all price, that we may possess more than our appropriate share of the world—or, rather that we may aid Satan in spreading snares before our own feet? We should remember that the same God who has said, "Thou shalt not steal,"—"Thou shalt not covet," hath also said, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them," and "Do all to the glory of God."—Morning Star.

A TERRIBLE PICTURE.

The following striking remarks on Sectarianism, are from the pen of Prof. Finney:—

"Nine-tenths, and perhaps I might say ninety-nine-hundredths, of ministerial effort has lost its power by reason of a sectarian spirit. Go where you please over this great west, and over the east too, and what do you see? Why, in a small village, with a population just enough to make one respectable congregation, you find half a dozen or more churches of divers sects, with as many half-starved, and deservedly half-starved ministers, keeping up their sectarian bars, and perpaps undesignedly keeping alive the very prejudice that prevents the success of the gospel. One man comes on to the ground to attend to the Presbyterian or Congregational interests in that place and region. Another must be thrust in to attend to the close Baptist interests, and another to attend to the Freewill Baptist interests.

Next, there must be two or three Methodist ministers to attend to the Episcopal interests and the Wesleyan Methodis interests, and then there must be the high church Episcopal interests, and the low church Episcopal interests; next, but not least, the New School interests and the Old School interests, and among them all, they seem very generally to attend pretty thoroughly to the devil's interest. I mean that by this arrangement the devil's interest is really in the best way secured; not that they really intended any such thing; God forbid that I should make any such insinuation. They really mean (as they profess) to secure the interests of their denominations."

HOW PAUL AND PETER LOOKED.

It is allowable to mention the general notion of the forms and features of the two apostles which has been handed down in tradition, and was represented by the early artists St. Paul is set before us as having the strongly marked and prominent features of a Jew, yet not without some of the finer lines indicative of Greek thought. His stature was diminutive, and his body disfigured by some lameness or distortion, which may have provoked the contemptuous expression of his enemies. His beard was long and thin. His head was bald. The characteristics of his face were a transparent complexion, which visibly betrayed the quick changes of his feelings; a bright eye, under thickly overhanging, united eyebrows; a cheerful and winning expression of countenance, which invited the approach and inspired the confidence of strangers. It would be natural to infer, from his continual journeys and manual labor, that he was possessed of great strength of constitution. But men of delicate health have often gone through the greatest exertions; and his own words, on more than one occasion, showed that he suffered much in bodily health.

St. Peter is represented to us as a man of larger and stronger form, as his character was harsher and more abrupt. The quick impulses of his soul revealed themselves in the flashes of a dark eye. The complexion of his face was full and sallow; and the short hair, which is described as entirely gray at the time of his death, curled black and thick round his temples and his chin, when the two apostles were together at Antioch, twenty years before their martyrdom. Believing, as we do, that these traditionary pictures have probably some foundation in truth, we gladly take them as helps to the imagination.—Life and Epistles of St. Paul.

ON THE DEATH OF FREDDIE D. BOOTHBY.

O death, thou cruel messenger,
Thy sway is almost o'er,
For Jesus soon will come again,
Our loved ones to restore.

Death cannot hold our Freddie long,
But while in death he sleeps,
O give thy guardian angels, Lord,
Strict watch o'er him to keep.

O, now to us how desolate
This dreary world appears!
His absence casts a shadow now
On all our future years.

We miss him when the morning light
First breaks upon our eyes,
And when the setting sun departs
'Mid clouds of glorious dyes.

We miss his voice of tender love,
And his light step we miss,
And when to slumber we retire,
We miss his good night kiss.

We miss him when our work is done,
When we sit down to read;
And when we sing the songs he loved,
Our hearts with anguish bleed.

And then around the fireside
We miss the accustomed chair,
We miss him from his little bed,—
We miss him everywhere.

Around us lie his little books,
In each inscribed his name;
That darling form is put away—
His looks are still the same.

Grandmother's room is lonely now,
Her aged heart made sad,
And earth's vain charms pass slowly by,
In garbs of mourning clad.

Father of mercy, aid us now,
Help us to feel thy sentence just;
May we in meek submission bow,
And in thy blessed promise trust.

THE RAGGED GARMENT.

"Aunt Lucy, I've been trying all this week to be a christian, and I don't feel any more like one now than I ever did. What shall I do?"

"What is it to be a christian, Ella?"

"Why, to be a christian is to be good, and I've tried to be good every day. I have given away all my spending money to poor people, and I have been patient every day—every day but Thursday with Johnny, helping him to spell—I went to Myra Smith, and begged her to be friends with me, though I'm sure I hadn't done anything to make her angry; and I've said my prayers every night and morning—longer ones than I ever said before! I know that I have done wrong sometimes; but, Aunt Lucy, there's nobody so good as never to sin, is there? What shall I do?

"Ella, who told you that to be a christian is to be good?"

"Why, aunty, I suppose my Sabbath School teacher told me, or you or mamma. Somebody told me, or I shouldn't know it—but I don't remember."

"No, dear, I feel quite sure that neither your mother nor I ever did; and I am sure that nobody who has studied the Bible with an understanding heart, would teach you so, for it not Bible truth."

"Aunt Lucy!"

"Ella, did you see that poor beggar that came to the gate yesterday?"

"Yes, aunty."

"Well, dear, I once had a dream as nearly like this as I can remember. I thought I was summoned into the presence of a king. I felt glad to go at first; but when I looked down at myself, I saw that I had on a dress just like that one which the poor beggar-woman wore. I looked around in vain for a better one—I could find none, and the messenger allowed me not to wait, and forward I was obliged to go just as I was. As I walked I discovered great rents which I had not seen before; and as I tried to arrange the folds so as to cover them, worse ones were revealed, and it was so filthy that I implored the messenger to throw his cloak over me to conceal it. He only smiled at my distress, and remarked that it was quite too late now to make any change. Just as we reached the palace gate, I fainted with excess of terror and shame. This awakened me, and great was my relief to find that it was only a dream, But, as I pondered over it, I could not but feel it to be highly suggestive of a truth which I hope, with the blessing of God, to make clear to your mind, my Ella. In the 6th verse of the 64th chapter of Isaiah, we are told that 'all our righteousness is as filthy rags;' and if you or I try to get to heaven clothed in them, we shall feel just as I did in my dream when at the palace gate, only infinitely worse. You have tried to do something to earn heaven one week, and you are discouraged; if you should try another week, you would be more discouraged; and if you should keep on trying, I think that before long you would certainly give up in despair. We cannot help to save ourselves—we cannot do anything to merit heaven. Christ has done all. To become a christian is to believe Christ, to trust our souls to him, to take him at his word. He says, 'Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden (with sin) and I will give you rest.' Now, if it were possible for the sinner to put away his burden of guilt by his own effort, this invitation would not be to him—he would not be heavy-laden, and would not need the rest which a life spent in the loving service of Christ is to the sin-burdened soul. But this is not possible; and all the fitness that our gracious Savior requires in you, my darling, or in any one, is to feel that you are a sinner, and that you are sorry for your sins. Then trust him, and he will do all for you."

"Aunt Lucy, I think that I understand you; but then, if Christ does all for us, doesn't it matter how we live? If we only believe in him, can we go on in sin and yet be saved?"

"No, Ella; because if we continue to sin willingly, that will prove that we never were really sorry for our sins. If we truly love Christ, we shall want to be like him, and shall daily strive to live as he did when on earth, and as he would have us now. How did you feel the other day, Ella, when Mrs. B. said to me, 'Ella looks so much like her mamma, and seems to be no less like her in disposition?'"

"I felt glad, dear aunty."

"Why?"

"Because I love dear mamma, and I want to be like her."

"Then, dear child, when you become one of Christ's little, that is just the way that you will feel toward him. You will learn to hate sin more and more, because he hates it, and you will strive to do good, not because you can by doing it earn heaven, but because is is Christ-like. You will fall into sin sometimes, and will have to pray for forgiveness, again and again, but you will be truly sorry, and praying God for Christ's sake to work in you by his Holy Spirit those things which are pleasing in his sight, you will be more watchful, and more prayerful, and so will grow more like Christ. The good actions which you performed last week did not spring from the right motive—they were done to gain a reward. Ah! darling, you forget all the back accounts. Good actions are acceptable to our heavenly Father only when they spring from a heart warm with the love of Christ—only when they are offered in the name of Christ."—Episcopal Recorder.

IDLE WORDS.

"Mother," screamed little Ellen Waters from the foot of the stairs. "I've finished my seam and folded up the work. May I go out of doors?"

"Yes, child. Mind you put on your shawl and bonnet."

"What for?"

"It is bitter cold."

Ellen snatched her wrapping from the pegs behind the door and ran out, putting them on as she went. Her first visit was to the chicken-house to see her pets; but she found that the door had been left open and the house was empty.

"Now, who did that? I should like to know?" muttered she angrily. She went to the door of the barn, and called, "Sam! Sam!"

"What's wanting?" was replied from the hay loft.

"Did you let my chickens out" asked Ellen.

"I opened the door. I suppose they came out themselves.

"What did you do it for, you bad boy?" exclaimed Ellen.

"I thought they needed a walk to make them warm. It is a cold day, you know, and you don't keep a stove in the chicken-house."

This was more than Ellen's temper could stand, and she broke forth in a storm of reproaches, calling him a bad boy, and repeating, "I wish you were hung, I do! I wish you were hung!"

Sam only whistled, and presently coming out of the hay loft, mounted one of the horses and rode off to the village, Ellen calling after him, "I hope Bill will run away and break your neck."

When he had gone Ellen went in pursuit of her chickens. It was a good hour's work to collect them from the various places to which they had strayed; but she persevered, and by the time they were all together again in the house, and the door safely shut after them, Ellen's good humor had quite returned.

It was not till then she heard her name called, and looking over the low fence, saw that Uncle Israel—as he was generally called—the village blacksmith, was speaking to her. She opened the gate and ran up to him.

"Do you want me, Uncle Israel?" she asked.

"It wasn't you that was scolding so hard a little while ago, was it Ellie?"

"Yes, it was. Sam let my chickens out just to plague me."

"I guess you didn't mean all that you said though?"

"Yes, I did. He was a bad, wicked boy, and he is always doing something he should not."

"You'd like to see him hung, you said; and you wanted the horse to break his neck. It isn't too late for your wish to be granted. What' that crowd down the road?"

"I don't know."

"And that's your horse Bill in the middle."

"Oh, Uncle Israel," said Ellen, turning deadly pale, "I never meant it in earnest. Oh, it can't be that Sam's killed. Oh, won't you please go and see?"

Just then the small crowd separated, and to Ellen's great comfort, they saw that the horse had merely cast a shoe and was coming to Uncle Israel to be shod.

The incident made a deep impression upon Ellen.

As the kind-hearted blacksmith turned to get his tools, he said gravely to Ellen:

"My little girl, go home and ask your mother to teach you this verse: 'But I say unto you, every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account of in the day of judgment.'"—Christian Times.

MORNING.

Cease not, old Time, thy rapid flight,
'Till we behold the morning light;
Till Christ shall come in bright array,
And bring with him eternal day.
Cease not, till we can see his face,
And find the end of christian's race.

The night is long, the darkness drear,
We find no real comfort here;
We toil in sadness and in gloom,
And follow loved ones to the tomb.
Roll onward, let us gain that home,
Where parting never will be known,
Where rest will come with joyful morn,—
O God, when will the morning dawn?

O hasten! let it quickly come,
And bring the everlasting Son;
Let darkness end and sorrow cease,
And earth be filled with lasting peace.
O hasten! let this be the prayer,
That we with joy may enter there;
We'll leave behind all we have here,
And shout when Morning does appear.

"THE INTERVAL."

THURMAN'S CHRONOLOGY.

In my last article I found Mr. Thurman plainly disagreeing with Herodotus, respecting the season and place of the eclipse seen by Xerxes and his army when on the way against Greece. Let us now see how he agrees with another historian, Thucydides.

I closed by alluding to the interval between the invasion of Greece and the Peloponnesian war, which Mr. T. reduces almost to half the time usually allowed. He seems aware of his difficulty, and on page 160 endeavors to remove it. He has just referred to the eclipse of the sun, occurring in the second year of the Peloponnesian war, which he dates B. C. 431, Dr. Zech B. C. 430. Then, speaking of "the interval, he says:

"According to our English copy of the book of Thucydides, there was an interval of fifty years between the expedition of Xerxes against Greece and the time of the Peloponnesian War. We have only about twenty-five years: (A) yet, since a different punctuation would give a different construction, this can hardly be considered as clashing with Thucydides; for the arrangement of the punctuation is not his, but one of a modern date."

I have deemed this remarkable proposition worthy of italics. Mr. T. assumes that whenever any thing can be gained by changing a comma or a period in an English translation, the same may certainly be done in the Greek original. Let us see if the rule will work another way. There is a famous ancient oracle, of which one translation reads thus: "Thou shalt go, and return never; thou shalt perish in war."

The original, without points, reads thus:

"Ibis et redibis nunquam peribis in bello." This is fearfully ambiguous. If we make a pause after "nunquam" (never), the sense is as above. If the pause is made before "nunquam," the sense is reversed. Suppose some Roman, not liking the oracle in the sense above given, proposes to put the comma or semicolon before "nunquam," and quietly assumes that the English will allow it. Would not every one who knows English say, "Well, you may put the pause before 'never' if you please; but we shall know you are a foreigner if you try to read it so. 'Thou shalt go and return; never thou shalt perish in war.' Never thou shalt,—that is not English, sir. We should say, Never shalt thou."

Thus the order of words, often of the least words, settles the punctuation in English. And in other languages the sense is generally settled either by the order of words, or by other matters. A translation is often ambiguous while the original is not. And in assuming that a point may be changed in a Greek edition of Thucydides, because it can be done in some translation, Mr. T. is wholly without warrant.

But let us hear him out, and see whether he changes any thing more than the punctuation. He proceeds: "The difficulty is removed by punctuating it thus: 'All these things the Greeks performed against one another and the barbarian, occurred in about fifty years.' Thus, placing a full stop at 'fifty years,' we will commence a new sentence for the time 'the Athenians established their empire on a firmer footing.' Indeed this is the only way we can punctuate it so as to reconcile Thucydides with himself; for he tells us positively,—not that a part, but, emphatically,—'All these things the Greeks performed'—not only against one another, but also against 'the barbarian—occurred in about fifty years.' (Thu. b. i. c. 118.) And in another place he tells us that the war with 'the barbarian' commenced ten years before the expedition of Xerxes. (Thu. b. i. c. 18.)"

The reader sees that either Mr. T. or his printer makes lame English. But we will let that pass, and see if the Greek will allow his interpretation. He does not tell us what English "copy" (translation) he uses. But I have the Greek, and find Smith's rendering of the passage substantially correct. It reads thus:

"All these transactions in general, whether of Grecians against Grecians, or against the Barbarian, fell out in the compass of fifty years, between the retreat of Xerxes and the commencement of this present war; during which period the Athenians had established their dominion on a solid basis, and had risen to a high exaltation of power." (c. 118.)

The version is somewhat free, but the words I have italicized are a very literal rendering. But the reader sees that in changing the "full stop," Mr. T. has given no account of the intervening words. He does not report the whole sentence, even with his own punctuation. More than that: when we hear Thucydides himself, we find that his fifty years cannot be taken as Mr. T. proposes, by any punctuation. They are directly and distinctly asserted of the interval between the retreat of Xerxes and the beginning of the Peloponnesian war, which Mr. T.'s chronology reduces to less than twenty-five years, as the retreat occurred a year or two after the invasion. And the nail is clinched by Thucydides in employing the same fifty years to measure another series of events also: "During which period the Athenians had established," etc.

I think the reader will agree with me that such "punctuation," which expunges the words I have italicized and leaves no place for them, is not only unwarrant but not easily paralleled. No historian can consent to be thus "reconciled with himself." And Thucydides does not need even explanation. He does not say that the Greeks performed "all things," etc., in fifty years, but "all these things." And if the term "these" were not defined by the previous context, it would be limited by the interval mentioned in the clause which Mr. T.'s punctuation throws out. The ten years which he names in c. 18 are, on the face of the record, no part of the fifty years. They precede this period, and make it about sixty years from the battle of Marathon to the Peloponnesian war.

But if the ten years could be made part of the fifty years, Mr. T. would gain but little. "The interval" would still be forty years, and Mr. T.'s chronology allows for it less than twenty-five years, dating the invasion B. C. 457, and the Peloponnesian war B. C. 432. So that if Thucydides were thus reconciled with himself, he would still lack more than fifteen years of being reconciled with Mr. Thurman.

(A) Here Mr. T. subjoins the following note: "While those who follow Ptolemy's canon are reduced to the necessity, in so many ways, to contradict authors both sacred and profane, this is the first place that our chronology appears to come in contact with any author of that age." I have only to say that Mr. T.'s tally differs from mine. And though I am not master of the question respecting Ptolemy's canon, my confidence in it must be shaken by sounder interpretation of ancient records than that which I have examined.

But, granting that Thucydides asserts an interval of about fifty years between the two wars, some one may ask if he was not mistaken in making it so long. I reply that he was a commander of the Athenian allies during the Peloponnesian war. Though not old enough to recollect the Persian war, he must know when it occurred, just as every American must know, even without books, that our war with England about free trade and sailors' rights was waged fifty years ago. But more than this: his history of the Peloponnesian war is to this day a masterpiece and a model, because it gives not a mere narrative of events, but their causes and connections. And his first book is an account of that growth and rivalry of the different Grecian states in which Athens came to be so greatly envied and feared; just as the power and influence of the New England States have been so long hated by the South, and that hatred is a main cause of our present war. Horace Greeley, in his history of the rebellion, very justly goes back more than fifty years to trace its causes and their progress. And if the period which such a historian assigns is to be reduced to shorter dimensions by some critic, centuries afterward, the calculation of an eclipse may have its weight; but a thorough and satisfactory argument must be more than such a mere raid; the critic must be so at home in that period of history that the sky shall be unclouded and the sun without eclipse, to his clear vision. And, as I said in my last, the period which Thucydides names is one of the most marked and eventful of Grecian history. If its length is uncertain by fifty per cent., then we may as well write "fabulous age" over the whole history of antiquity. I am not ready for this.

Personally I have nought to say against Eld. Thurman. We are told that his scruples respecting bearing arms have commanded respect where he is known; and I almost reverence the man whose daily life gains such respect, whether his scruples and opinions are my own or not. But when I take up his book and find in it modes of argument which are open to criticism, and well nigh open to censure, I am sure he will thank me for pointing out his errors. I shall be grateful for all the good wheat I find; but if any chaff is swept away, there is so much clear gain. The reign of peace may begin in 1875, or later, or sooner. But whenever it shall begin, if we are to tell the blessed day, let us tell it so there shall be no occasion for gainsaying. C. F. H.

P. S.—I fail to find the translation of Thucydides which Mr. Thurman quotes. But the clause which his punctuation omits is rendered by Hobbes thus: "from the time of the departure of Xerxes to the beginning of this present war; in which time," etc. And by Bloomfield thus: "which elapsed between the retreat of Xerxes and the beginning of the aforesaid war; during which period," etc.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER ONE.

In considering this subject one objection is presented to us. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven; but my Father only." Matt. 24: 36. It is established by the masses that this, with similar texts, is proof positive against our ever knowing anything about the time of Christ's coming again to earth. They think it the Urim and Thummin of all argument, or an end of the controversy.

It has ever been a part or principle of the divine economy of God, to elucidate truth as the wants of the church or age demand. In accordance with this principle, the Lord gave the Church at the first Advent, just as much truth as it could bear. Hence, as the church progressed, it received more light; therefore the Revelator says, "The Revelation of Jesus Christ," etc. We find by observation, that those who quote the text (as a writer says) are composed of those who do not wish his coming; because his coming would destroy all their purposes and plans in worldly matters; and also by those whose faith is dimmed by philosophy so called,—that as they get their reward at death, his coming is of no moment. And as his coming cannot be known, consequently it is unscriptural to investigate the Prophetic Scriptures; and as a result, they do not think it wise to take heed to the "sure word of prophecy," which light shines more and more until the perfect day.

There are others, again, who have been disappointed in the time, and in consequence will now have nothing more to do with it. Many are also afraid to set apart a bounded time, for fear of its tarrying, and so affect the cause of truth.

With respect to the text, our belief is that it will harmonize with the dealings of God with his church in all ages, down to the "last syllable of recorded time." The Greek text by Tittman, reads, "But of that day and hour no one knoweth." After our Lord had given certain signs, by which we might know when his coming drew near, even at the door, he informs us that he himself would not reveal the exact day and hour, but that his Father would, as it reads, "But of that day and that hour no man maketh known, not even the angels who are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." This is Macknight's rendering, and seems to be the most correct. An old English version reads thus: "For if none but the Father maketh known the day and hour, where shall we expect he has made it known, or revealed it, but in his word?" John Wesley, in his Notes on the passage, says, "But of that day—the day of judgment—knoweth no man, not while our Lord was on earth. Yet it might afterward be revealed to St. John."

Dr. Cumming of London, England, commenting on the passage, says, "We can gather the probabilities from the signs of the times, and from these we may conclude, and are warranted to infer, its nearness. For instance, it was not told the Jewish Christians directly, that in the year 70, the Roman army would sweep away their Capitol, but they were warned by previously predicted facts, that the desolation of their country was at hand. We are not told in exact terms, that Christ will usher in the Millennium in a few years at most, but we are told of certain signs which ought to lead us to anticipate its near approach."

Mark 13: 32, adds, "Neither the Son but the Father." I believe it is generally admitted that the word "Son" ought to be omitted, as it is not found either in Matthew or Luke; and Ambrose says it was wanting in some Greek copies in his time. This clause in Mark cannot denote that the Son of God will be absolutely ignorant of the time of the day of judgment, for in that case our Savior would not have known when he was to come, until he had arrived. Christ's words are greatly perverted from their obvious meaning, when he takes such pains to give us notice or warning of his coming, that his approach may be perceived, and yet to say, "Of that day and hour no one knows." Christ did not mean to take us by surprise. He told us to take heed, lest that day should take us by surprise, should come upon us unawares. He has told us to rejoice in the prospect of his coming. But can it be supposed that Jesus was ignorant of the time of his coming, when he knew so correctly all the particulars which he here lays down in this chapter and which have been to a jot and tittle verified by the fulfillment of the events, as all history proves? Or instance the prediction of Moses in Deut. 28: 49—57, all of which had a most literal fulfillment at the siege of Jerusalem, as Josephus and other writers give the account. Bishop Newton has noted seventeen particulars, in this prophecy of Moses, all of which were remarkably fulfilled. How Jesus, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily, and the treasures of knowledge and wisdom, should not know anything about this event of his coming, when Moses could be so minute about the siege of Jerusalem, and the Jewish future; and when Daniel could tell the very year of events five hundred years before they came to pass, does not appear.

The text does not say, that no man ever will know, but only no one then knew. Why? because it was not expedient for them to know "the times and seasons which the Father had put in his own power." "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Acts 1: 7, 8. The Holy Spirit was to lead them into all truth, teaching them all things. It was then in the Father's own power; but it was afterwards given to Christ, who sent his angel, and signified it to John, who made a record of it. Rev. 1: 1, 2,—"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass. And he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant, John, who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ."

A question may arise, how long was it to be after the descent of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, before the people of God could understand the signs of the times?

LINES.

O Lord, I cannot give thee youth,
But I can give my heart, Thou give me truth;
Give me thy Spirit, this is blest exchange.
Now if I really do, I shall not range
Away from thee, but to thee ever come,
Thus ever finding a delightful home!
Now what this is in thought, let thy grace seal
Upon my roving heart; give me to feel
Thy quickening power, help me indeed to be Quiescent in thy hands. O set me free
From self, I then can truly live to thee.
Only thy grace from earth can fully wean
My lingering desires; can make me clean.
My righteousness is nought; thine, Lord, impart,
Rule thou in sovereignty within my heart.
Yet if with cords of heavenly love I'm bound,
Assuredly true liberty is found.
O yes, indeed! Be this my soul's delight;
Thus earth's dark way shall be continued light,
Through every passing day, each passing night.
Thus time shall prove, indeed, eternal gain,
Faith's ripened future I through Christ obtain,
When He, the longed-for, comes, and comes to reign.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST AND THE SPIRIT OF WAR.

Can it be that both of these spirits blend together in the hearts of the children of God? The thought is most absurd. To all who are blessed with that "meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price," there is something abhorrent in such an idea. The whole tenor of the gospel is in wonderful harmony with the announcement made on the occasion of the first advent of the "Prince of Peace," as heralded by "a multitude of the heavenly host," to the astonished shepherds on the plains of Judea, "saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

No language can be more explicit than that used by our Lord in his sermon on the mount, by which he clearly abolishes the law of retaliation;—"Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also." Christ and his apostles never taught otherwise. When he said at another time, "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth, but a sword," he spoke prophetically of the effects produced, and of the offences that must needs come with their woes on the offender.

No less definite is his teaching on another occasion, when he was passing through a village of the Samaritans on his way to Jerusalem. When they of the village did not receive him, his disciples, James and John, were indignant, and asked the Lord, "Wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elias did? But he turned and rebuked them and said, Ye know not what spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—Luke 9: 54—56.

Now the spirit that they possessed, and that Christ rebuked, was the spirit of war, of retaliation, the spirit that has now gone forth, especially in our own unhappy land: it is called "patriotism," and is fanned to a flame by those who claim to be the friends, disciples, and ministers of the meek and lowly Savior. The pulpit and the sanctuary have been desecrated for the purpose of war speeches, songs, and prayers, as if the greatest object was to worship at the bloody shrine of the Moloch of war. Ministers claiming to be called of God to preach the gospel, not a few, have girded on the deadly weapons of war, left their holy calling and their flocks, and rushed into the fearful work of wholesale murder, trampling under foot with impunity the command of the great Teacher—"I say unto you, that ye resist not evil."

Most horrible and uncalled for is this fearful rebellion now upon us, all of which would have been avoided by a practical observance of the "golden rule," so short,—"As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." Instead of appealing to God in the belief of his immutable word, we have accepted an appeal to the sword; as if two wrongs would make one right; and true enough, "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword";—self-deceived by the bright visions of prosperity for our country when this cruel war is over.

How difficult to learn how weak is mortal man, and how directly and naturally are the tendencies of our common humanity downwards. Since the fall such has been the fact with human governments, always, everywhere; they have never paid for the blood and treasures they have cost, for they are conceived, brought forth, and matured in selfishness, with little regard for the divine will, or the best good of the masses. What marvel, then, that confidence in human governments is shaken, and that those who have accepted the true light of revelation are all for "the King of kings," whose servants will not be called upon to fight to sustain his universal and unending government?

Fighting, even to the taking of life, is admissible only when it is an act of mercy, as when the assassin would destroy lives that can be saved only by his death. When and where were the early christians in bloody strife with their cruel persecutors? The vehement Peter, who so officiously cut off the ear of the high priest's servant, when subdued and tamed by divine grace, got rid of all his resentment, and accordingly writes, "Have compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing."—1 Pet. 3: 8—9. Paul, the inspired, says in so many words, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal." Was Paul mistaken, or are modern church members very generally anti-christian in their spirit and in the use of carnal weapons?

Do not the word and spirit of Christ now, as always, teach all who fully submit themselves to God to "be harmless as doves," to be lamb-like, as was Christ their great Exampler? Let every real child of grace carefully heed the warnings of the Spirit of Christ in them, and they will soon conclude, feel, and say, I cannot fight and shed human blood. The following is a striking instance of this:

John Nelson was one of the first Wesleyan Methodist preachers, a helper of John Wesley himself. His journal has for many years been published by the Methodist Book Concern of this country. As a measure to persecute this people, Nelson was pressed into the British service. From his journal we quote: "My answer was, I shall not fight; for I cannot bow my knees before the Lord to pray for man, and get up and kill him when I have done; for I know that God both hears me speak and sees me act; and I should expect the lot of the hypocrite if my actions contradicted my prayers." Surely here is an unanswerable argument condemning fighting christians. Nelson again says, "I was ordered to parade at the Blue Boar at Castle gate, where the officers ordered Corporal W. to fetch me a gun and other warlike instruments. I asked why they girt me with these warlike habiliments, for I am a man adverse to war, and shall not fight, but under the Prince of Peace, the Captain of my salvation, and the weapons he gives me are not carnal like these. I will bear them as a cross, and use them as far as I can without defiling my conscience; but this I will not do for any man on earth."

What do fighting professors of religion do with their consciences in our day? How very different are our modern Methodists from this humble, conscientious father in their church. But it is asked, what are we to do when our rights are invaded and in jeopardy? "Defend your right," says worldly policy. But what says the word of God? "Suffer wrongfully," even to being "defrauded," as did the primitive saints. They took "joyfully the spoiling of their goods." James says to the wicked, "Ye have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you." It is always safe, and safe only, to do as they did—to do right, and leave the event wholly with God.

We are forced to the conclusion that a fighting, blood-thirsty religion is not of God, but is "from beneath, earthly, sensual, devilish," spurious, and self-deceiving in its character. The wisdom that is from above is "first pure, then peaceful, gentle, and easy to be entreated." Such may we ever possess. Amen.

THE CANON OF PTOLEMY.

Claudius Ptolemæus, a celebrated geographer, astronomer and Mathematician, was born in Pelusium in Egypt, A. D. 70. He is considered the first astronomer of antiquity. The scattered observations of the more ancient astronomers and astrologers, were collected by him and reduced to a system: which system is now known as the Canon of Ptolemy or the Almagest. The high estimation in which his work has been held is shown in the name given it: Canon:—a rule or law; and also in the manner it is spoken of by historians and chronologists. Says Prideaux: "Ptolemy's Canon is not to be receded from for the authority of any writing whatsoever." And Dr. Hales observes that it is of "the highest authority among historians." This Canon gives the names, and the length of the reigns of all the successive Chaldean, Persian, Grecian, Egyptian and Roman kings, from B. C. 747 to A. D. 137. And when it is considered that the three ancient MS. copies which have been found agree perfectly, except in the spelling of some names, it is no matter of wonder that so much dependence has been placed upon it by historians and others. And, indeed, for general purposes the Canon is invaluable, though it would appear from testimony now before the world, that it is by no means infallible.

Our readers should not suppose that this Canon has never been questioned; for its inconsistencies and contradictions of reliable historians have been pointed out. But when attention has been called to these inaccuracies, the advocates of the Canon have replied, "It must be correct: for its statements are sustained by the calculations of more than twenty eclipses, which are a mathematical demonstration of its correctness." And here they rested their case: and well they might: for if the astronomical calculations of the Canon are correct, they prove beyond a doubt the complete reliability of this record.

But of all the attacks made upon this Canon, none equal in importance that of Eld. Wm. C. Thurman, of Virginia, in his work "The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened." We will give our readers, in brief, some of the arguments presented by Eld T. on this point.

Finding it impossible to reconcile the Bible and profane history on the basis of the Canon, it occurred to Eld. T. that as Ptolemy was but a man, and that he lived in an age when astronomical science was but little understood, that he had, possibly, fallen into some error in his calculations. This he determined to test; and accordingly he made calculations, of every eclipse mentioned in history which can have any bearing in settling either profane or sacred chronology, and claims to have demonstrated that the Canon is defective. In his chapter, "Chronology Examined," he cites eleven eclipses, (seven of the moon and four of the sun) which he claims to have proved by calculation, did not, and could not have occurred as set down by Ptolemy.

It is a curious fact, in this connection, that none of the astronomical tables yet published, either by the defenders of the Canon, or others, will make all the eclipses of the Canon. Hence we find Dr. Hales, taking eclipses from the tables of others to meet the demands of the Canon, when his own tables would make no eclipse at all. And even then their testimony does not agree together, for we have eclipses set down as total, when the historian declares "the sun assumed a crescent form;" and in other cases we have eclipses given of from one and a half to three digits, which any candid person must admit, would be very unlikely to be observed, except by persons who were looking specially for them. And yet rather than admit that Ptolemy made a mistake, astronomers have assumed that the heavenly bodies are in error! Can we believe this?

But the errors of Ptolemy are not confined to astronomical data. He contradicts Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Josephus and the Bible. But Thurman claims that all these are reconciled by a correct calculation of the eclipses mentioned by each of them. All who candidly and without prejudice examine Thurman's Chronology, are struck at once with the simplicity of its style and the great clearness with which all its mathematical and historical arguments are stated. All his points are so clearly made, that he cannot be misunderstood. His positions are plainly stated, with no attempts at evasion of facts, and give every opportunity for the attacks of critics, in case of his being in error on any vital point.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

ABSURDITIES, CONTRADICTIONS, AND UNSCRIPTURALNESS OF REWARDS AT DEATH.

Dr. Edward Young is as good an exponent of the popular faith and theology of the day, as perhaps any writer from whom we may quote; and as he dwells in his chosen theme, "Night Thoughts," upon the night of death particularly, we may make a few selections from his poem to illustrate the above facts.

DEATH AN ENEMY.

"Who can take death's portrait true?
The tyrant never sat."

Death is here represented as an enemy, a "tyrant," so hideous in form that he refuses to have his likeness taken.

"Whose restless iron tongue
Calls for his millions at a meal."

"The ravenous foe, that gorged all human flesh."

Death is here personified as a voracious wild beast, or monster, which, though already gorged to the full with human flesh and blood, is still greedy and unsatisfied, and eagerly devours millions more at a meal!

"Haste, haste, he lies in wait, he's at the door;
Insidious death! should his strong hand arrest,
No composition sets the prisoner free."

Death is personified as a lurking, secret and malicious enemy, ever lying in wait to seize us with an iron grasp to make us his prisoner, and drag us to his dark, damp, and loathsome prison, where none can deliver.

DEATH A SAVIOR.

"Death! the deliverer, who rescues man."

Death is here represented as "the deliverer of man," rescuing him from his deadliest enemy! But what greater enemy has man than death? He's "the king of terrors," and "the terror of kings." He's the "last enemy." And yet this greatest foe of man, the tyrant of tyrants, is man's deliverer! He unlocks the prison doors of death himself, and lets his own prisoner free! Could any thing be more absurd or contradictory? Is any thing more unscriptural? Is death "the deliverer who rescues man"? If so, the Son of man is come in vain. Then alleluiah unto death! He has become our salvation.

"Death the rewarder, who the rescued crowns!"

Death is also "the rewarder." When death lies in wait, "insidious death"! he in mercy does so that he may reward us according to our deeds! What gifts has he to bestow on the good, faithful, and virtuous? If death be "the rewarder," then Jesus Christ has set up false claims;—"Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man as his work shall be." Or is this death?—

"Our day of dissolution—name it right,
'Tis our great pay day; 'tis our harvest rich
And ripe."

Then death in benevolence devours "millions at a meal," that the millions made his prey may reap their "harvest rich and ripe." He dissolves, and brings us to corruption and to dust, that we may receive our final reward; for

"Our day of dissolution—
'Tis our great pay day."

O death! "Rich death." Rich in love and rewards; forgive our injustice! We verily thought thee our greatest enemy;—

"The ravenous foe, that gorged all human flesh."

But now we hail thee as our deliverer and rewarder! And if this be so, He must be our enemy, as well as thine, whom the Scriptures say shall destroy thee. 1 Cor. 15th chapter. Haste thine advent, O death!

"Blush at terror for a death
Which gives thee to repose in festive bowers,
Where nectars sparkle, angels minister,
And more than angels share, and raise, and crown,
And eternize the birth, bloom, bursts of bliss,
What need I more?"

Nothing! The Son of man has died and rose again in vain: for he can give thee nothing more! Death is the greatest boon conferred on sinful man!

"Death, that absolves my birth, a curse without it!"

Shame! on such a theology in a land of Bibles. More than shame! What shall I call it? I forbear. Is it strange that Spiritualism grows so luxuriantly in the hot-bed of such opinions? Men of God! clear your garments. Lift up your voice as a trumpet against the error.

"Death is victory!"

If death be victory, what is defeat? Tell us, ye who boast. The rebels of the south claim victory when defeated by the Union forces! So does Satan deceive the world.

"O death! the palm is thine,
Then welcome, death!"

Truly, if death be our deliverer, rewarder, and gives us the victory over all our foes, then he, and not Christ the Son of God, deserves the palm. Let us crown him Lord of all, and begin to sing as we descry his chariot wheels, Thanks be to the devil which giveth us the victory through our deliverer death! But if this be false, let us give the glory and "palm" to whom it is due; saying, "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our LORD Jesus Christ." And let all say Amen!

"Death is the crown of life."

So when these sightless eyeballs shall be set in their sockets—when our countenance shall be changed into a ghastly, cadaverous palor—when the fountain and stream of life shall cease to flow—when our frames shall be chilled and stiffened by the cold hand of death, and we are laid in the coffin and the grave, we then wear "the crown of life." Does reason teach us this? No. Does common sense? Never. Do the Scriptures? If they did, they could not be the revelation of infinite wisdom. Who does? The Devil, who said, "Ye shall not surely die. . . . ye shall be as gods." Let others "make a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell (grave)" if they choose, to insure "the crown of life." I will glory in Him who is the Resurrection and the Life, and who has declared their "covenant shall not stand."

"Death wounds to cure; we fall, we rise, we reign!
Spring from our fetters, fasten in the skies,
Where blooming Eden withers in our sight.
Death gives us more than was in Eden lost."

A wounded rebel when he falls by shot or shell, receiving the just desert of his sin, only rises to reign! And how? And where? Those who anticipate death will give them "wings to mount above the spheres," or ——"fasten in the skies,

Where blooming Eden withers in our sight,"

are looking for a heaven of rapture, promised only by "lying spirits," who have no regard for truth, and who often contradict themselves!

"And anguish after rapture, how severe!"

to be experienced by those who trust in death as their Redeemer, when they "awake to shame and everlasting contempt." If

"Death gives us more than was in Eden lost,"

then why have Eden restored as "spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began"? What need of a restitution? Of a new earth? Of the coming of the Lord? O lovely death! thine appearing brings us all things. Help us to love thine appearing, "tyrant" and "enemy" as thou art.

"This King of terrors is the Prince of peace."

With this quotation we will stop! in awe! in dread! If a false theology has not a mouth speaking words against the Most High, and blasphemy, it is quite too near to it. "Blasphemy is an injury offered to God, by denying that which is due, and belonging to him." —Lightfoot. If death be "the Prince of peace," then Jesus Christ is an impostor, and the Scriptures are untrue!

O. R. FASSETT.

LOCKE'S PARAPHRASE OF 1 COR. 15: 1-48.

In what I am now going to say to you, brethren, I make known to you no other gospel than what I formerly preached to you, and you received, and have hitherto professed, and by which alone you are to to be saved. This you will find to be so, if you retain in your memories what it was that I preached to you, which you certainly do, unless you have taken up the christian name and profession to no purpose. For I delivered to you, and particularly insisted on this, which I had received, viz., that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures: and that he was buried, and that he was raised again, the third day, according to the Scriptures: and that he was seen by Peter; afterwards by the twelve apostles: and after that, by about five hundred christians at once; of whom the greatest part remain alive to this day, but some of them are deceased: afterwards he was seen by James; and after that, by all the apostles: last of all, he was seen by me also, as by one born before my time. For I am the least of the apostles, not worthy the name of an apostle; because I persecuted the church of God. But, by the free bounty of God, I am what it hath pleased him to make me: and this favor, which he hath bestowed on me, hath not been altogether fruitless; for I have labored in preaching of the gospel more than all the other apostles: which yet I do not ascribe to any thing of myself, but to the favor of God, which accompanied me. But whether I, or the other apostles, preached, this was that which we preached, and this was the faith ye were baptized into, viz. that Christ died, and rose again the third day. If, therefore, this be so, if this be that, which has been preached to you, viz. that Christ has been raised from the dead; how comes it that some amongst you say, as they do, that there is no resurrection of the dead? And if there be no resurrection of the dead, then even Christ himself is not risen: and if Christ be not risen, our preaching is idle talk, and your believing it is to no purpose. And we, who pretend to be witnesses for God and his truth, shall be found liars, bearing witness against God and his truth, affirming, that he raised Christ, whom in truth he did not raise, if it be so, that the dead are not raised. For if the dead shall not be raised, neither is Christ raised. And if Christ be not risen, your faith is to no purpose; your sins are not forgiven, but you are still liable to the punishment due to them. And they also, who died in the belief of the gospel, are perished and lost. If the advantages we expect from Christ are confined to this life, and we have no hope of any benefit from him, in another life hereafter, we christians are the most miserable of men.

But, in truth, Christ is actually risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of those who were dead. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead, or restoration to life. For as the death that all men suffer is owing to Adam, so the life, that all shall be restored again, is procured them by Christ. But they shall return to life again not all at once, but in their proper order: Christ, the first-fruits, is already risen; next after him shall rise those, who are his people, his church, and this shall be at his second coming. After that shall be the day of judgment, which shall bring to a conclusion and finish the whole dispensation to the race and posterity of Adam, in this world:

when Christ shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, the Father; which he shall not do, till he hath destroyed all empire, power, and authority, that shall be in the world besides. For he must reign, till he has totally subdued and brought all his enemies into subjection to his kingdom. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For God hath subjected all things to Christ: but when it is said, "All things are subjected," it is plain that he is to be excepted, who did subject all things to him. But when all things shall be actually reduced under subjection to him, then, even the son himself, i. e., Christ and his whole kingdom, he and all his subjects and members, shall be subjected to him, that gave him this kingdom, and universal dominion, that God may immediately govern and influence all. Else, what shall they do, who are baptized for the dead? And why do we venture our lives continually? As to myself, I am exposed, vilified, treated so, that I die daily. And for this I call to witness your glorying against me, in which I really glory, as coming on me for our Lord Jesus Christ's sake. And particularly, to what purpose did I suffer myself to be exposed to wild beasts at Ephesus, if the dead rise not? If there be no resurrection, it is wiser a great deal to preserve ourselves, as long as we can, in a free enjoyment of all the pleasures of this life; for when death comes, as it shortly will, there is an end of us forever.

Take heed that you be not misled by such discourses: for evil communication is apt to corrupt even good minds. Awake from such dreams, as it is fit you should, and give not yourselves up sinfully to the enjoyments of this life. For there are some atheistical people among you: this I say to make you ashamed. But possibly it will be asked, "How come it to pass that dead men are raised, and with what kind of bodies do they come? Shall they have, at the resurrection, such bodies as they have now?" Thou fool! does not daily experience teach thee, that the seed which thou sowest corrupts and dies, before it springs up and lives again? that which thou sowest is the bare grain of wheat, or barley, or the like; but the body, which it has, when it rises up, is different from the seed that is sown. For it is not the seed that rises up again, but a quite different body, such as God has thought fit to give it, viz. a plant, of a particular shape and size, which God has appointed to each sort of seed. And so, likewise, this in animals; there are different kinds of flesh: for the flesh of men is of one kind; the flesh of cattle is of another kind; that of fish is different from them both; and the flesh of birds is of a peculiar sort, different from them all. To look yet farther into the difference of bodies, there be both heavenly and earthly bodies; but the beauty and excellency of the heavenly bodies is of one kind, and that of earthly bodies of another. The sun, moon and stars have each of them their particular beauty and brightness, and one star differs from another in glory. And so shall the resurrection of the dead be: that which is sown in this world, and comes to die, is a poor, weak, contemptible, corruptible thing: when it is raised again, it shall be powerful, glorious, and incorruptible. The body, we have here, surpasses not the animal nature. At the resurrection it shall be spiritual. There are both animal and spiritual bodies. And so it is written, "The first man Adam was made a living soul," i. e. made of an animal constitution, endowed with an animal life; the second Adam was made of a spiritual constitution, with a power to give life to others. Howbeit, the spiritual was not first, but the animal; and afterwards the spiritual. The first man was of the earth, made up of dust, or earthy particles: the second man is the Lord from heaven.

NOTE.—"The resurrection of the dead," here spoken of, is not the resurrection of all mankind, in common, but only the resurrection of the just. This will be evident to any one who observes, that St. Paul, having, ver. 22, declared that all men shall be made alive again, tells the Corinthians, ver. 23, that it shall not be all at once, but at several distances of time. First of all, Christ rose; afterwards, next in order to him, the saints should all be raised; which resurrection of the just is that which he treats, and gives an account of, to the end of this discourse and chapter; and so never comes to the resurrection of the wicked, which was to be the third and last in order: so that from the 23d verse to the end of the chapter, all that he says of the resurrection is a description only of the resurrection of the just, though he calls it here by the general name of the resurrection of the dead. That this is so, there is so much evidence, that there is scarce a verse, from the 41st to the end, that does not evince it.

OBSCURE PROVERB EXPLAINED.

"As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honor to a fool."—PROV. 26: 8.

It is not easy to discern any appropriateness in this comparison. It is true that to bind a stone in a sling would be to disregard the proper use of the sling, and to make the stone useless for the purpose for which it is placed in a sling. And one might say, that to give honor to a fool is equally to pervert the proper use of honor as the meed of merit. But there seems little force or even pertinence in the comparison. In the one case things are brought together that belong together, and are adapted to each other, but the object of their juxtaposition is defeated by a strange and unaccountable procedure. In the other case, things essentially incongruous are associated together.

A sling and a stone are well-matched, only the stone should not be bound or fastened there; but a fool and honor are altogether ill-mated; they have no business together. This last is do doubt the idea which Solomon wished to represent by a forcible comparison, and the marginal reading expresses his idea much more pertinently than the text: "As he that putteth a precious stone in a heap of stones, so is he that giveth honor to a fool." This seems a great change in the form of expression, but it agrees better with the original. The word translated in the one case "a sling," and in the other "a heap of stones," is derived from a verb which means primarily to throw, and then to heap up by throwing, and is particularly applied (though not exclusively) to throwing or heaping up stones. Hence it might mean the instrument with which stones are hurled—a sling; or the result of throwing stones together—a heap. The latter meaning is in the text much more pertinent. But the other was adopted by our English translators from the septuagint.

Gesenius, in his Hebrew Lexicon, gives a different sense also to the first part of the verse: "As a purse of gems in a heap of stones," etc. This seems to give still more force to the comparison, though the marginal reading in our Bible agrees better with translations in other languages than we have examined. To give honor to a fool is a great waste, and as incongruous a conjunction as it would be to put a precious stone or a purse of gems among a heap of common stones. The pearl is too precious for so vile a setting. —Watchman and Reflector.

KINGDOM OF ITALY.—The kingdom of Italy, according to the last census, counts 21,777,334 inhabitants, and occupies the fifth place in Europe in point of population. If Venice and Rome were re-annexed to it, it would present an aggregate of 27,000,000, and be, after France, the most populous country in Europe in which a single language is exclusively spoken.

"THE TEN ECLIPSES."

We are glad that Bro. Hudson has taken the trouble to look over Dr. Zech's list of eclipses, and compare them with Bro. Thurman. This is the first evidence that we have yet seen that bears at all upon the correctness of Bro. T.'s tables. Until they are proved wrong, it follows that Ptolemy's canon abounds in errors; and if it can be shown Ptolemy is correct, which appears very doubtful, to say the least, then it follows that the time in Daniel is yet "closed up and sealed"; because Ptolemy's canon makes the date of Cyrus' "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince," 536 years B. C., which is 48 years too much; while Bro. Thurman makes the commandment 488 B. C., which is just in harmony with the prophecy; hence, whenever we have the right chronology, we must have one that gives just 488 years from the commandment of Cyrus to our A. D., which began in the fifth year after the birth of Christ, as is clearly proved by standard chronologies. Or, in other words, the sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, from the commandment of Cyrus must reach to B. C. 5, where "Messiah the Prince" was born. By correcting Ptolemy's canon, Bro. Thurman makes just this length of time between the commandment of Cyrus and the coming of the Messiah. We do not see how any chronology can be correct that makes a longer or shorter period between these two events. The scripture is very explicit: "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks."—Dan. 9: 25. As the commandment of Cyrus is the only one that corresponds with the prophecy, we would say again, that the point seems to be for ever settled, that any chronology which gives more or less than sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, from the decree of Cyrus to the birth of the Messiah, must be incorrect.

We now turn again to Dr. Zech's tables. As Bro. Hudson shows that of ten eclipses, calculated by Dr. Z. and Bro. T., they agree in all but the first; respecting which they differ some twenty years as to the date of the eclipse, it follows that their tables run in harmony; hence Dr. Zech's would detect the same errors in Ptolemy's canon, as shown by Bro. T.'s tables; unless it can be shown that Dr. Z.'s tables make no eclipse at Celænæ Dec. 16th, B. C. 457, as claimed by Bro. Thurman. An eclipse may have happened at Sardis Feb. 16th, B. C. 477, in harmony with Dr. Z.'s tables, and not conflict at all with Bro. Thurman's tables. We hope Bro. T. will ascertain, by calculation, whether there was an eclipse, according to his tables, on Feb. 16th, B. C. 477, as shown by the tables of Dr. Zech. Let us have all the light possible on this point; for it seems that neither Dr. Z. nor Bro. T. are in strict harmony with the historians concerning this particular eclipse; for while Bro. T. appears to differ with Herodotus as to the time in the year when the eclipse occurred, Dr. Z. differs as to the number of digits eclipsed, and the year in which it occurred. It is very clear that the eclipse was total, if we believe what Herodotus says, as follows:—"At the moment of their departure, the sun, which before gave its full light in a bright unclouded atmosphere, withdrew his beams, and the darkest night succeeded." According to Dr. Zech's calculation, the eclipse that he has selected in B. C. 477, as the one referred to by the historian, was not total; hence it would appear that he has not taken the right one corresponding with the history.

Again, it appears from Herodotus, B. viii. S. 26, that the total eclipse, which took place at the time of the departure of Xerxes' army from Sardis, was in the fourth year of the Olympiad, which is not the case with the eclipse in B. C. 477, adopted by Dr. Zech. Therefore, while Dr. Z. is in harmony with the historian as to the place and season of the eclipse in B. C. 477, it does not harmonize with the extent nor year of the eclipse.

Dr. Hales takes an eclipse April 19th, B. C. 481, as the one indicated by Herodotus; but this was not in the fourth year of the Olympiad, and he makes the sun eclipsed at that time only seven digits; consequently this could not have been the one that caused "the darkest night." With these facts before us, we think we shall have to wait for more light on the subject, before all will be satisfied.

QUESTIONS.

We find the following questions in the Sabbath Review. They are proposed to "candid Adventists of the 1844 movement:"

1. Do the 2300 days extend into the future? Or have they expired already so that we are now in the period of the cleansing of the sanctuary?

2. If the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, is it not certain that the 2300 days have expired?

3. If the seventy weeks are not a part of the 2300 days, is it not manifest that there is no starting point for those days?

4. If there is no starting point for the 2300 days, of what account to us is it that that period is given in the Bible?

4. Has the argument in proof of Dan. 9 being an explanation of Dan. 8, ever been answered at all?

6. Has not the lapse of time since 1844 shown that the Adventists of that time were in error in one of two things, viz: that the earth is the sanctuary, or that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days?

7. Is there not a strong argument for the connection of the seventy weeks with the 2300 days? Is there any argument at all proving the earth to be the sanctuary? Which of the two positions then should be given up? Have you not given up the one that is sustained by invincible proof, for the sake of retaining that one which is entirely destitute of any proof in its support?

9. Is it not plain that the cleansing of the sanctuary takes place somewhere about this time? May it not be an event that is of some importance to ourselves? Is it not time that some one had clear light on the subject? Have you such light at this time?

1. We are fully satisfied that the 2300 days are not yet ended, because "the sanctuary and host" are still "trodden under foot" by the Gentiles. As "the sanctuary" cannot "be cleansed" till after the treading down is ended, it follows that the cleansing of the sanctuary has not yet commenced. It appears absurd to suppose that there is a sanctuary in heaven that is "trodden under foot" by "the Gentiles," or any other people.

2. We believe that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, and that the 2300 days have not expired.

3. As the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, and cut off from them, we believe they commence at the same time.

4. As there is a starting point for the 2300 days, they become of great importance in determining the length of the vision.

5. We believe Dan. 9 is an explanation of Dan. 8, and that the argument for this is very clear and has not been answered.

6. We believe those who held that the sanctuary is a portion of the earth, and also that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, were correct.

7. There is "a strong argument for the connection of the seventy weeks with the 2300 days." There is clear evidence that the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, is called "the sanctuary;" (see Ex. 15: 17, Ps. 78: 54,) hence we do not have to give up either position.

We think the time is at hand for the appearing of Christ, and the cleansing of the sanctuary; but do not see any evidence in the Bible that the work will begin till after the saints are caught up to meet our coming Lord.

We think clear light has come upon the subject, and that it is of great importance.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

We think all must be pleased with the spirit in the following from one of our contributors. If all felt so, an editor's burdens would be greatly relieved; for one of his most grievous duties is to reject an article sent by a very sensitive person, who is sure to create a storm if his communication is not inserted. Only a sense of duty which he owes to the Lord and to his church can enable him to be true in such a position; and even then, we may expect the best will make mistakes they would be glad to correct when it is too late. "To err is human, to forgive is divine." We rejoice to know that there are many who take pleasure in making our burdens as light as they can, by often sending us heart-cheering words to brighten the pathway of duty.

"BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed find two articles for the Crisis, subject to your approval. I wish no articles to go into the Crisis that would not benefit the cause of truth. I have no self in the matter at all."

INFIDELITY.

It is very evident that infidelity is rapidly gaining ground in all directions. Many who once loved the Bible, and had no doubts of its glorious truths, are now laying it one side for new revelations from the spirits of demons; while others show by their speech and practice, that it has but little power to control their lives, and is but of small value, because they do not believe in its literal fulfillment. It is to be feared that the great mass of professors of religion are in the last named condition. The Bible is almost a dead letter to them. Its promises and threatenings are received with a dull indifference, as unworthy of their notice. A lukewarm feeling seems to pervade almost all minds at the present time. Judging from what we see and hear, we should be led to think that christianity was considered only adapted to the aged, sick, and dying, and unworthy of the consideration of the healthy, wealthy and intelligent. The following from the Congregationalist is to the point, and gives a hint at the real state of things in community:

"An infidel, brother? Your room-mate an infidel?"

"Yes, there are many in the university. Why are you so terrified? Do you think my life is in danger?"

"I fear your principles are."

"O! as to that, they do try to bring me over to their views; but I am little moved by all they can say. My danger lies in another direction—from skeptical believers, rather than from unbelieving skeptics."

"What do you mean?"

"Why this. So far as I have observed, there is only here and there one among professing christians, who really take the Bible for the word of God, practically believing all its declarations, not because they accord with his own worldly maxims and the dictates of common sense, but because "the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," and all who do thus believe are called fanatics by their less credulous brethren.

Now here are father and mother, long standing professors of religion. Do they believe the whole Bible? Christ says: "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." If father believes that, why does he deny himself all leisure for intellectual and spiritual culture, 'that he may buy and sell and get gain?' If mother believes it, why her pride in her accumulated household stores, her goodly wardrobe, fashionable furniture, and what she calls "style of living?"

Notice these commands. "Love your enemies." "Forgive if ye have aught against any." "Pray for them which despitefully use you." You know of father's chronic bitterness toward Mr. A. for some real or fancied injury. Mr. A. has more than once tried to effect a reconciliation, but father cannot forgive. Does mother, think you, ever pray for that tattling Miss S., whose slanderous reports have so annoyed her? One would not think so, judging from her talk.

Then here is the promise. 'Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed.' If I should set faith in that, and devote myself to a life of charitable endeavor, taking God for my paymaster, father would think me insane. And as with the promises, so with the threatenings. Those having their fulfillment in this life, and in accordance with observation and experience, are credited, such as this for example: 'He that will not plow shall beg in harvest;' but for those awful passages which threaten eternal loss to the finally impenitent, can it be that father believes them? You remember when I first started for the University, months ago, father took me to the station. While waiting for the train he talked to me freely, expressing his solicitude for my future welfare, his hope that I might acquit myself with honor, take a prominent rank in my class, and finally attain to professional eminence. Did he really believe that it would not profit me to gain the whole world and lose my own soul? Did he believe that by a collision of trains, a heedless crossing of the track, or a careless step upon the platform, I might that very day be sent to the bar of doom and an eternity of woe?

And do you think father is not a christian?

I did not say that. I do not presume to judge. I am only saying that my faith in the Bible is less endangered by the arguments of avowed skeptics, than by the practical infidelity of professed believers."

THE VATICAN.

The Vatican, or Pope's palace at Rome, is said to be the most splendid palace in the world. It is said to be more than one thousand feet long, nearly eight hundred feet wide, and has eight grand staircases, two hundred smaller ones, twenty courts, 4,422, apartments, a library of 387,000 printed volumes, and 23,000 manuscripts. But all these riches must "come to nought," as declared by the angel in revelation 18: 17. The day of Babylon's destruction is at hand, and, consequently, the deliverance of the saints from the power of the grave must soon take place. The period in which we are now living is one of thrilling interest to the children of the Lord; but the wicked are very careless relative to their awful situation. They seem to be totally blind to their dangerous position, and are dreaming of good days to come.

All the prophetic streams are about to meet in one grand focal point, hence the end of the present dispensation must soon come.

AFFAIFRS IN ITALY.

There is very clear evidence that the Papal power on "the seven hills" is near its perpetual end. The Pope begins to feel that his position is a critical one. There is no prospect that he can regain political power again. His "dominion" is fast consuming away. The power of the Papacy at Rome is like a person in the last stages of consumption. Death is inevitable.

The following is from The Catholic of Nov. 12, 1864. The last clause gives the reader some idea of the feelings of the Pope:—

"The Pope lately received in a special audience all the French ecclesiastics now in Rome, in number about two hundred. They were presented to His Holiness by Monsignor the Bishop of Autun, who remained near the Pope during the reception. The Clergy were admitted in groups as nearly as possible by Dioceses or by Provinces. Each was desirous to kiss the feet of His Holiness, to the gratification of which wish he graciously gave every facility. The ceremony took much time, but it was visible to all that the good nature of the Pope, so far from being wearied, was increased, and that the emotion of his mind found expression in his countenance, which seemed to be kindled up by sentiments of joy and happiness. At length, not being able to restrain himself any longer, His Holiness rose and addressed the assembled Clergy in a discourse of which the following is the substance:—

His Holiness expressed the profound happiness which he experienced at seeing himself surrounded by so large a number of the French Clergy, 'for,' said he, with a sweet smile, 'I have a great love for the French.' He advised them all to have an ardent zeal for the salvation of souls and for their own sanctification, adding, that the age in which we live is an age of struggle and of combat, and that Catholics ought to show themselves to be the intrepid defenders of the rights of religion and justice.

'The Church,' continued His Holiness, 'has always had struggles, but those which she has now to confront are perhaps greater than those which have preceded them.'"

All things seem to be converging to a grand focal point, not far from the present time. Our conviction is that we shall see our Savior within four years. Reader, are you ready for the event? If not, will you not prepare at once, for none but the righteous will be accepted. Do not delay preparation for another day.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.

Dan. 12: 4–12. "But thou, Daniel, close the words, and seal the book, until the time of the end; when many shall have searched diligently, and knowledge shall be increased. Now I Daniel was seeing, when behold there were two others standing, one on this side at the bank of the river, and the other on that side at the bank of the river; which said to the man clothed in linen who was over the waters of the river, 'At how great a distance will be the end of these marvellous things?' And I heard the man clothed in linen" say "that it would be for a time, times, and a half; and after the accomplishment of the dispersions of the holy people, all these things shall be fulfilled. . . . Many shall be purified and made white and proved; yet the wicked will do wickedly; but though none of the wicked will attend, those of understanding shall attend. . . . Blessed is he that with patient expectation reacheth the days a thousand and three hundred thirty and five. But go thou, and to the end be at rest; for thou shalt stand up for thy lot at the end of the days."—Thomas Wintle's translation.

Wintle's is an able and critical work on the book of Daniel. He remarks on the foregoing Scripture: "The full discovery [of the meaning] was not made to the prophet, but reserved for future ages, till time should bring it to light." On verse 10th he remarks: "I would refer the whole to the righteous, who shall be cleansed by various tribulations and trials; but the like discipline shall have no effect on the wicked; see Rev. 22: 11; their wickedness will blind their hearts, so that they shall not attend to these predictions, which the prudent, or those of a wise and good heart, shall understand, shall be fully instructed in themselves, and so as to be able to teach them to others."

On the 13th verse, he remarks that Daniel "should rest in peace to the time of the end, when he should again be raised up, and restored to life, and receive his final allotment from his righteous Judge."

VENTILATION.

ELD. GRANT:—A number of articles have been published in the Crisis referring to ventilation; can you inform your readers as to the most simple method of ventilating a room, without any extra apparatus? that is, if the external air is to be admitted, shall the opening be, at the top or bottom of the room, or both?

Permit me to advert to another subject. On the resurrection of the unjust, it is argued, that Paul's language in Acts 24: 15 is intended to declare the hope of his opposers, inasmuch as the hope of the resurrection of the unjust, to receive the threatened punishment of sin, with all the agony and shame of that resurrection, ending in utter destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power, is inconsistent with christian love, and therefore cannot be the hope of the believer.

Now, is this so? Is it actually inconsistent with the purest and warmest christian love, when hearing or knowing of some deep sin, to feel and express the hope that the offender may receive the due reward of his iniquity, whatever that may be? Nay, may not the christian strongly hope, if the penalty of a life of rebellion against God and his cause, be a resurrection to temporary life, that the transgressor may be made fully sensible of the justice of his sentence, and then perish forever?

I will not however attempt to argue the point, that is not my object; but simply to say, that so far as I can comprehend the subject, the argument based upon the hope in this passage is not conclusive. Neither do I now state my own personal belief concerning the penalty, which can be of no special interest to others. I only say, that taking what would appear to be the simile meaning of John 5: 28, 29, and Acts 24: 15, I have not thus far been able fully to accept the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the unjust.

Yours truly, A. WOOD.

Wiscasset, Me.

In answer to the inquiry relative to ventilation, we would say that all rooms should be ventilated both at the top and bottom; and rooms of the most approved ventilation are thus arranged. Pure hot air will rise to the top of the room, because lighter than cold air; hence, when there is too much of it in a room, it should be allowed to escape through a hole into the chimney, or a box prepared for the purpose, leading out into the open air like a chimney. A similar arrangement should be at the bottom of the room to let bad air escape. Air that we have breathed over once becomes unfit to breathe again; and being heavier than pure air, it falls to the floor, and before it can escape by the ventilator at the top of the room, of course it must rise like water, by continual additions till it escapes at the upper ventilator. For this reason, a room may be well provided with ventilators to let off pure hot air, while at the same time the air in the room may be very bad. But if we have a ventilator into the chimney, or air box at the bottom of the room, then the heavy, impure air, will escape before rising high enough to reach our nostrils. This is the reason why fire-places are so much more healthy than tight stoves. There is continually a great draft into the fire place, or open grate, which takes off the heavy air that we have used, so that it does not accumulate and fill the room. Thousands are ruining their health for want of fresh air. They get air-tight stoves, make their rooms as tight as they can by means of double windows, and very tight doors, shut their dampers, to save fuel, and then wonder why they feel so stupid, and have so much headache. It is next to impossible to enjoy even a tolerable degree of health in such a situation. This is one great reason why so many more have poor health now than in the days of our fathers. Pure air is absolutely essential to secure perfect health.

A very excellent, and improved method for the lower ventilation of a room may be arranged as follows: put a ventilator in the floor at the coldest part of the room, or at a distance from the fire, and then connect that opening in the floor with the chimney, or the air box, by means of a tin, or sheet iron pipe, running under the floor. This arrangement can be easily made when a house is first built.

If persons are obliged to live in rooms that are not provided with the proper means of ventilation, they should open their doors and windows several times a day, for a few minutes, and thus change the bad air for a fresh supply of the pure. They need have no fear of taking cold. The danger would be by the opposite course of keeping shut up in a hot room, filled with impure air. Those living in the latter situation are very liable to have colds and sore throats, accompanied with a dull headache, loss of appetite, and an "all-gone" feeling.

But few know the importance of pure air, and the necessity of breathing it continually, if they would enjoy perfect health.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Napoleon III. is constructing a canal across the isthmus of Suez, large enough for ships to pass. This is a most important enterprise, and will give Napoleon the key to the eastern waters, and a great advantage in commercial matters, over England and other nations. The English came to the conclusion that it was not practicable to build a canal across the isthmus, and abandoned the undertaking, when it was taken up by Bonaparte. An English writer, when speaking of this work, a few weeks since, says:—

"It promises to be ready by 1866; and when it it is opened for large vessels, what an uproar it will create in western Europe. It will command the route to India. It will equally command or shorten the route to the gold fields of Australia. Hostile ships can pass without restriction, and without giving any explanation of their objects. In the mean time, France is occupied incessantly in the building of iron ships. Every month we hear of the launching of some new iron-clad. Italy has a powerful iron squadron which will, of course, be at the full disposal of France. . . . The opening of the Suez canal . . . promises to create an entirely new epoch in the affairs of the world. It will throw the three continents into one; and will make him who is arbiter of Europe, arbiter of the whole prophetic earth, and of the remotest frontiers of the Roman empire. France has acquired, long ago, a firm footing on the African continent, on the coast of the Red Sea. When she has become mistress of the Suez canal, having also a depot on the African coast of the Red Sea, she will completely command the highway of the earth; and to make assurance still surer, she is now actively negotiating in Madagascar, which lies in the way to the east. She possesses another steppingstone in the isle of Bourbon,—another depot for naval stores. In short, the completion of the SUEZ canal will finish the . . . "circumvallation of the globe, . . . and will place the British empire in the position of a city invested by a hostile army."

☞ Do not fail to read the article from Bro. H. P. Van Kirk, in the health column. The subject is a very important one; more so than most believe.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

A brother writes from Portland, Me., as follows:—"I have, the past year, been trying to do a little with tracts and books, and have met with good success, and feel paid for my time and labor. And now I feel like doing more, in carrying truth to the people, and bringing people to the truth. I have therefore made up my mind, as I am now out of work, to labor a little for the Lord in this direction, as I promised him I would do if he would open the way. I have no money to pay for them, but I will give my time, if you will send them, and will do the best I can in the work of distributing them in the country where they will do the most good. If I can sell any, the money will be refunded to the Society, and if you will send me a few copies of the Crisis, I will get all the subscribers I can, and also for the Young Pilgrim."

Have sent you $5.00 worth. May every one of them bring forth fruit abundantly, to the glory of God.

A sister writes from Bath, Me.:—"I notice your remarks on distributing tracts. It is truly a time of darkness, and I feel it my duty to do all I can in bringing souls to Christ. I have no money, but if you will send me some tracts I will do all I can to circulate them."

We have mailed you $2.00 worth. The Lord bless you in winning souls to Christ.

VOICES FROM THE POOR.

FROM A SISTER IN PENNSYLVANIA.

I much regret that I cannot send you what is your due for the paper; it is impossible for me to do so at present. My health is very poor, but I will, as soon as I am able, try to earn some money to pay you what I owe. Before receiving your paper, I had for a long time wanted it, but I had no money, and so did not send for it. But, to my great joy, some one sent it to me; who it was I cannot tell. I love to read its cheering columns, and think it is the best paper I ever read. It has been a great comfort to me in my affliction, and it seems as though I could not live without it.

C.

FROM A SISTER, FRIENDLESS AND ALONE.

I thank you for my paper, and would willingly pay for it if I could; but I am a poor girl, having no father or mother, no brothers or sisters, to help me. I live with those who are opposed to the doctrines of the Crisis, and the doctrines which I love. It is cheering to me to hear from the brethren and sisters through its columns; it is the only preaching I have which tells me of the coming of my blessed Savior, and I should be glad if its visits can be continued. ELIZA.

A SISTER AFFLICTED WITH CANCER.

I write in behalf of Sister G——, one of the worthy poor, to whom your kind bestowal of the Crisis has been a great comfort in her severe affliction. She has a cancer in her eye, and is entirely dependent on the charity of friends. She solicits me to write you, presenting her case. Thanking you for the past, she would be very glad to still receive the Crisis. Her earthly comforts are very few, but I believe she is one of the heirs to a rich inheritance. T. D. B.

Middlesex Co., Mass.

An Example.

We commend the following to the attention of those who may feel it duty to go and do likewise.

"The church in this place want the poor to have the Crisis as well as the rich; we therefore send you the names of two new subscribers who are poor and unable to pay themselves, and the money for six months. We all think the Crisis is the paper for the times, and read it with much interest. The Lord bless you in conducting it.

THE BANK OF THE LORD'S POOR.

A good bank. The very best and safest; and the bank that pays the highest rate of interest. Will you invest in this bank? Many are doing so, and they will never be sorry that they lent money to the LORD. Some that have made one investment may begin to excuse themselves from doing more; but the Word says, "Give a portion to seven, and also to eight"; so do not stop giving while you have anything to give. Would you water your choice plants once, and then neglect them forever? No. Then give liberally, and often, as GOD hath prospered thee. It is a noble, yea, a glorious work, to provide for the LORD'S poor, as the readers of the Crisis are doing. Those who receive are blest, and those who give are DOUBLY blest; for, "it is more blessed to give than to receive." F. H. C.

West Sutton, Mass.

Bro. Grant:—I, too, would like to take a share in the "bank of the Lord's poor," and will do so by sending ——, which please use to pay for the Crisis to Bro. L. W., of —— ——, C. E., as far as it will go. Bro. W. is now, and has been for several years past, disabled by sickness from working for the support of himself and wife, who is also greatly afflicted by disease. He is poor in this world's goods, but he is rich in faith and an heir of the kingdom, I believe. He dearly loves "our paper," and knows not how to do without its weekly visits. Through your generosity, he has for several years received it free, and he still is on the free list; but it does not seem just that the Crisis office should be made to bear all the burden of providing the bread of life for the many hundreds of the Lord's poor, when, if the brethren and sisters who are able, would only take hold and do their part by paying for all the poor in their own community, as has been proposed, the portion of each would be but a trifle, and ought to be borne with pleasure; then, as a result, the office would be relieved of its heavy load of embarrassments and anxiety which has impeded its progress, or usefulness, for years; have a chance to recuperate a little and gather up its forces, then press with renewed vigor to the work of sending out broadcast over the whole world books, tracts, and papers, richly laden with truth and light for both old and young. May the good Lord speed on the work by helping each to do his or her part towards getting the bride, the Lamb's wife, ready to welcome her soon coming Lord; and finally be permitted to join that select company which shall sit down to the marriage supper, is the earnest prayer of your sister in Christ, S.

For the World's Crisis.

BRO. BREWER'S WORKS.

BRO. GRANT:—I have for some time been impressed with the duty of calling the attention of our brethren of "like precious faith" to Bro. S. S. Brewer's "Last Day Tokens," as being calculated to stimulate those who will read and reflect upon their contents to greater zeal and activity in the service of the Master. I consider these little works as a valuable addition to "Second Advent Literature"; containing, as they do, all of the most important events, physical, moral, ecclesiastical, political, which have a bearing on the question of the end of this dispensation, and the second coming of Christ for two or three hundred years past. They contain what it would require years of reading and teaching in libraries and encyclopedias to discover, and I am persuaded that no person can read the numerous facts which he has collected during the twenty or more years of patient labor and earnest faith, which he believes have a bearing upon the question of the Lord's speedy coming, without being strengthened and encouraged by so doing, and without blessing the Lord that he put it into the heart of Bro. B. to collect these facts, and to spread them out before the waiting church. How often I have exclaimed, while reading Nos. 2 and 3 especially, "This is that which was written in the prophets."

I have two objects in view, in directing the attention of brethren and sisters to these works of Bro. Brewer. 1st. The advantage and pleasure they will afford those who obtain, read and circulate them, and the benefit to be derived from their circulation. 2nd. The duty we owe to a faithful old pilgrim brother, who has felt moved of God to collect and spread out these facts before the waiting saints for their encouragement and comfort; and having incurred heavy expense, needs the proceeds to be derived from the sale for his present necessities.

A cold winter is at the door, and Bro. B. is in feeble health, and cannot go out and labor and receive help "after a godly sort" as he once could. While sitting by his fireside musing, and with dear Sister B. singing of the "goodness and mercy of the Lord," like David of old, let us make his heart more glad, his home more cheerful, adding more fuel to the flame of his devotion, by enclosing by mail 25c., 50c., or $5.00, as we are able, and get his works for our own benefit, and cheering him up with our words of comfort and encouragement. By the same mail that conveys this to the Crisis I have put my precept in practice. Brother, or sister, will you "go and do likewise" when you have read this appeal?

Bro. Brewer's address is Ashburnham Depot, Mass. RAND. E. LADD.

[We most heartily approve of Bro. Ladd's proposition. We trust his exhortation will be heeded.—Ed.

MR. BAXTER.

The following account of Mr. Baxter's withdrawal from the Church of England is copied from an English paper. Mr. Baxter is now in Scotland.

"Mr. Baxter has withdrawn from the exercise of his ministry within the Church of England, feeling unable to maintain the declaration required on oath from all its ministers that they cordially assent and consent to the teachings of its Prayer Book, and believe it to contain nothing repugnant to the Holy Scriptures—his withdrawal being grounded, among other reasons, upon objections to the institution of godfathers and godmothers, and the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, taught in its catechism, and baptismal and confirmation services, which assert that children at their baptism have become members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven, and have received forgiveness for all their sins."

when Christ shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, the Father; which he shall not do, till he hath destroyed all empire, power, and authority, that shall be in the world besides. For he must reign, till he has totally subdued and brought all his enemies into subjection to his kingdom. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For God hath subjected all things to Christ: but when it is said, "All things are subjected," it is plain that he is to be excepted, who did subject all things to him. But when all things shall be actually reduced under subjection to him, then, even the son himself, i. e., Christ and his whole kingdom, he and all his subjects and members, shall be subjected to him, that gave him this kingdom, and universal dominion, that God may immediately govern and influence all. Else, what shall they do, who are baptized for the dead? And why do we venture our lives continually? As to myself, I am exposed, vilified, treated so, that I die daily. And for this I call to witness your glorying against me, in which I really glory, as coming on me for our Lord Jesus Christ's sake. And particularly, to what purpose did I suffer myself to be exposed to wild beasts at Ephesus, if the dead rise not? If there be no resurrection, it is wiser a great deal to preserve ourselves, as long as we can, in a free enjoyment of all the pleasures of this life; for when death comes, as it shortly will, there is an end of us forever.

Take heed that you be not misled by such discourses: for evil communication is apt to corrupt even good minds. Awake from such dreams, as it is fit you should, and give not yourselves up sinfully to the enjoyments of this life. For there are some atheistical people among you: this I say to make you ashamed. But possibly it will be asked, "How come it to pass that dead men are raised, and with what kind of bodies do they come? Shall they have, at the resurrection, such bodies as they have now?" Thou fool! does not daily experience teach thee, that the seed which thou sowest corrupts and dies, before it springs up and lives again? that which thou sowest is the bare grain of wheat, or barley, or the like; but the body, which it has, when it rises up, is different from the seed that is sown. For it is not the seed that rises up again, but a quite different body, such as God has thought fit to give it, viz. a plant, of a particular shape and size, which God has appointed to each sort of seed. And so, likewise, this in animals; there are different kinds of flesh: for the flesh of men is of one kind; the flesh of cattle is of another kind; that of fish is different from them both; and the flesh of birds is of a peculiar sort, different from them all. To look yet farther into the difference of bodies, there be both heavenly and earthly bodies; but the beauty and excellency of the heavenly bodies is of one kind, and that of earthly bodies of another. The sun, moon and stars have each of them their particular beauty and brightness, and one star differs from another in glory. And so shall the resurrection of the dead be: that which is sown in this world, and comes to die, is a poor, weak, contemptible, corruptible thing: when it is raised again, it shall be powerful, glorious, and incorruptible. The body, we have here, surpasses not the animal nature. At the resurrection it shall be spiritual. There are both animal and spiritual bodies. And so it is written, "The first man Adam was made a living soul," i. e. made of an animal constitution, endowed with an animal life; the second Adam was made of a spiritual constitution, with a power to give life to others. Howbeit, the spiritual was not first, but the animal; and afterwards the spiritual. The first man was of the earth, made up of dust, or earthy particles: the second man is the Lord from heaven.

NOTE.—"The resurrection of the dead," here spoken of, is not the resurrection of all mankind, in common, but only the resurrection of the just. This will be evident to any one who observes, that St. Paul, having, ver. 22, declared that all men shall be made alive again, tells the Corinthians, ver. 23, that it shall not be all at once, but at several distances of time. First of all, Christ rose; afterwards, next in order to him, the saints should all be raised; which resurrection of the just is that which he treats, and gives an account of, to the end of this discourse and chapter; and so never comes to the resurrection of the wicked, which was to be the third and last in order: so that from the 23d verse to the end of the chapter, all that he says of the resurrection is a description only of the resurrection of the just, though he calls it here by the general name of the resurrection of the dead. That this is so, there is so much evidence, that there is scarce a verse, from the 41st to the end, that does not evince it.

OBSCURE PROVERB EXPLAINED.

"As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honor to a fool."—PROV. 25: 8.

It is not easy to discern any appropriateness in this comparison. It is true that to bind a stone in a sling would be to disregard the proper use of the sling, and to make the stone useless for the purpose for which it is placed in a sling. And one might say, that to give honor to a fool is equally to pervert the proper use of honor as the meed of merit. But there seems little force or even pertinence in the comparison. In the one case things are brought together that belong together, and are adapted to each other, but the object of their juxtaposition is defeated by a strange and unaccountable procedure. In the other case, things essentially incongruous are associated together.

A sling and a stone are well-matched, only the stone should not be bound or fastened there; but a fool and honor are altogether ill-mated; they have no business together. This last is do doubt the idea which Solomon wished to represent by a forcible comparison, and the marginal reading expresses his idea much more pertinently than the text: "As he that putteth a precious stone in a heap of stones, so is he that giveth honor to a fool." This seems a great change in the form of expression, but it agrees better with the original. The word translated in the one case "a sling," and in the other "a heap of stones," is derived from a verb which means primarily to throw, and then to heap up by throwing, and is particularly applied (though not exclusively) to throwing or heaping up stones. Hence it might mean the instrument with which stones are hurled—a sling; or the result of throwing stones together—a heap. The latter meaning is in the text much more pertinent. But the other was adopted by our English translators from the septuagint.

Gesenius, in his Hebrew Lexicon, gives a different sense also to the first part of the verse: "As a purse of gems in a heap of stones," etc. This seems to give still more force to the comparison, though the marginal reading in our Bible agrees better with translations in other languages than we have examined. To give honor to a fool is a great waste, and as incongruous a conjunction as it would be to put a precious stone or a purse of gems among a heap of common stones. The pearl is too precious for so vile a setting.

KINGDOM OF ITALY.—The kingdom of Italy, according to the last census, counts 21,777,334 inhabitants, and occupies the fifth place in Europe in point of population. If Venice and Rome were re-annexed to it, it would present an aggregate of 27,000,000, and be, after France, the most populous country in Europe in which a single language is exclusively spoken.

"THE TEN ECLIPSES."

We are glad that Bro. Hudson has taken the trouble to look over Dr. Zech's list of eclipses, and compare them with Bro. Thurman. This is the first evidence that we have yet seen that bears at all upon the correctness of Bro. T.'s tables. Until they are proved wrong, it follows that Ptolemy's canon abounds in errors; and if it can be shown Ptolemy is correct, which appears very doubtful, to say the least, then it follows that the time in Daniel is yet "closed up and sealed"; because Ptolemy's canon makes the date of Cyrus' "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince," 536 years B. C., which is 48 years too much; while Bro. Thurman makes the commandment 488 B. C., which is just in harmony with the prophecy; hence, whenever we have the right chronology, we must have one that gives just 488 years from the commandment of Cyrus to our A. D., which began in the fifth year after the birth of Christ, as is clearly proved by standard chronologies. Or, in other words, the sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, from the commandment of Cyrus must reach to B. C. 5, where "Messiah the Prince" was born. By correcting Ptolemy's canon, Bro. Thurman makes just this length of time between the commandment of Cyrus and the coming of the Messiah. We do not see how any chronology can be correct that makes a longer or shorter period between these two events. The scripture is very explicit: "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks."—Dan. 9: 25. As the commandment of Cyrus is the only one that corresponds with the prophecy, we would say again, that the point seems to be for ever settled, that any chronology which gives more or less than sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, from the decree of Cyrus to the birth of the Messiah, must be incorrect.

We now turn again to Dr. Zech's tables. As Bro. Hudson shows that of ten eclipses, calculated by Dr. Z. and Bro. T., they agree in all but the first; respecting which they differ some twenty years as to the date of the eclipse, it follows that their tables run in harmony; hence Dr. Zech's would detect the same errors in Ptolemy's canon, as shown by Bro. T.'s tables; unless it can be shown that Dr. Z.'s tables make no eclipse at Celænæ Dec. 16th, B. C. 457, as claimed by Bro. Thurman. An eclipse may have happened at Sardis Feb. 16th, B. C. 477, in harmony with Dr. Z.'s tables, and not conflict at all with Bro. Thurman's tables. We hope Bro. T. will ascertain, by calculation, whether there was an eclipse, according to his tables, on Feb. 16th, B. C. 477, as shown by the tables of Dr. Zech. Let us have all the light possible on this point; for it seems that neither Dr. Z. nor Bro. T. are in strict harmony with the historians concerning this particular eclipse; for while Bro. T. appears to differ with Herodotus as to the time in the year when the eclipse occurred, Dr. Z. differs as to the number of digits eclipsed, and the year in which it occurred. It is very clear that the eclipse was total, if we believe what Herodotus says, as follows:—"At the moment of their departure, the sun, which before gave its full light in a bright unclouded atmosphere, withdrew his beams, and the darkest night succeeded." According to Dr. Zech's calculation, the eclipse that he has selected in B. C. 477, as the one referred to by the historian, was not total; hence it would appear that he has not taken the right one corresponding with the history.

Again, it appears from Herodotus, B. viii. S. 26, that the total eclipse, which took place at the time of the departure of Xerxes' army from Sardis, was in the fourth year of the Olympiad, which is not the case with the eclipse in B. C. 477, adopted by Dr. Zech. Therefore, while Dr. Z. is in harmony with the historian as to the place and season of the eclipse in B. C. 477, it does not harmonize with the extent nor year of the eclipse.

Dr. Hales takes an eclipse April 19th, B. C. 481, as the one indicated by Herodotus; but this was not in the fourth year of the Olympiad, and he makes the sun eclipsed at that time only seven digits; consequently this could not have been the one that caused "the darkest night." With these facts before us, we think we shall have to wait for more light on the subject, before all will be satisfied.

QUESTIONS.

We find the following questions in the Sabbath Review. They are proposed to "candid Adventists of the 1844 movement:"

1. Do the 2300 days extend into the future? Or have they expired already so that we are now in the period of the cleansing of the sanctuary?

2. If the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, is it not certain that the 2300 days have expired?

3. If the seventy weeks are not a part of the 2300 days, is it not manifest that there is no starting point for those days?

4. If there is no starting point for the 2300 days, of what account to us is it that that period is given in the Bible?

4. Has the argument in proof of Dan. 9 being an explanation of Dan. 8, ever been answered at all?

6. Has not the lapse of time since 1844 shown that the Adventists of that time were in error in one of two things, viz: that the earth is the sanctuary, or that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days?

7. Is there not a strong argument for the connection of the seventy weeks with the 2300 days? Is there any argument at all proving the earth to be the sanctuary? Which of the two positions then should be given up? Have you not given up the one that is sustained by invincible proof, for the sake of retaining that one which is entirely destitute of any proof in its support?

9. Is it not plain that the cleansing of the sanctuary takes place somewhere about this time? May it not be an event that is of some importance to ourselves? Is it not time that some one had clear light on the subject? Have you such light at this time?

1. We are fully satisfied that the 2300 days are not yet ended, because "the sanctuary and host" are still "trodden under foot" by the Gentiles. As "the sanctuary" cannot "be cleansed" till after the treading down is ended, it follows that the cleansing of the sanctuary has not yet commenced. It appears absurd to suppose that there is a sanctuary in heaven that is "trodden under foot" by "the Gentiles," or any other people.

2. We believe that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, and that the 2300 days have not expired.

3. As the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, and cut off from them, we believe they commence at the same time.

4. As there is a starting point for the 2300 days, they become of great importance in determining the length of the vision.

5. We believe Dan. 9 is an explanation of Dan. 8, and that the argument for this is very clear and has not been answered.

6. We believe those who held that the sanctuary is a portion of the earth, and also that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, were correct.

7. There is "a strong argument for the connection of the seventy weeks with the 2300 days." There is clear evidence that the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, is called "the sanctuary;" (see Ex. 15: 17, Ps. 78: 54,) hence we do not have to give up either position.

We think the time is at hand for the appearing of Christ, and the cleansing of the sanctuary; but do not see any evidence in the Bible that the work will begin till after the saints are caught up to meet our coming Lord.

We think clear light has come upon the subject, and that it is of great importance.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

We think all must be pleased with the spirit in the following from one of our contributors. If all felt so, an editor's burdens would be greatly relieved; for one of his most grievous duties is to reject an article sent by a very sensitive person, who is sure to create a storm if his communication is not inserted. Only a sense of duty which he owes to the Lord and to his church can enable him to be true in such a position; and even then, we may expect the best will make mistakes they would be glad to correct when it is too late. "To err is human, to forgive is divine." We rejoice to know that there are many who take pleasure in making our burdens as light as they can, by often sending us heart-cheering words to brighten the pathway of duty.

"BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed find two articles for the Crisis, subject to your approval. I wish no articles to go into the Crisis that would not benefit the cause of truth. I have no self in the matter at all."

INFIDELITY.

It is very evident that infidelity is rapidly gaining ground in all directions. Many who once loved the Bible, and had no doubts of its glorious truths, are now laying it one side for new revelations from the spirits of demons; while others show by their speech and practice, that it has but little power to control their lives, and is but of small value, because they do not believe in its literal fulfillment. It is to be feared that the great mass of professors of religion are in the last named condition. The Bible is almost a dead letter to them. Its promises and threatenings are received with a dull indifference, as unworthy of their notice. A lukewarm feeling seems to pervade almost all minds at the present time. Judging from what we see and hear, we should be led to think that christianity was considered only adapted to the aged, sick, and dying, and unworthy of the consideration of the healthy, wealthy and intelligent. The following from the Congregationalist is to the point, and gives a hint at the real state of things in community:

"An infidel, brother? Your room-mate an infidel?"

"Yes, there are many in the university. Why are you so terrified? Do you think my life is in danger?"

"I fear your principles are."

"O! as to that, they do try to bring me over to their views; but I am little moved by all they can say. My danger lies in another direction—from skeptical believers, rather than from unbelieving skeptics."

"What do you mean?"

"Why this. So far as I have observed, there is only here and there one among professing christians, who really take the Bible for the word of God, practically believing all its declarations, not because they accord with his own worldly maxims and the dictates of common sense, but because "the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," and all who do thus believe are called fanatics by their less credulous brethren.

Now here are father and mother, long standing professors of religion. Do they believe the whole Bible? Christ says: "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." If father believes that, why does he deny himself all leisure for intellectual and spiritual culture, 'that he may buy and sell and get gain?" If mother believes it, why her pride in her accumulated household stores, her goodly wardrobe, fashionable furniture, and what she calls "style of living?"

Notice these commands. "Love your enemies." "Forgive if ye have aught against any." "Pray for them which despitefully use you." You know of father's chronic bitterness toward Mr. A. for some real or fancied injury. Mr. A. has more than once tried to effect a reconciliation, but father cannot forgive. Does mother, think you, ever pray for that tattling Miss S., whose slanderous reports have so annoyed her? One would not think so, judging from her talk.

Then here is the promise. 'Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed.' If I should set faith in that, and devote myself to a life of charitable endeavor, taking God for my paymaster, father would think me insane. And as with the promises, so with the threatenings. Those having their fulfillment in this life, and in accordance with observation and experience, are credited, such as this for example: 'He that will not plow shall beg in harvest;' but for those awful passages which threaten eternal loss to the finally impenitent, can it be that father believes them? You remember when I first started for the University, months ago, father took me to the station. While waiting for the train he talked to me freely, expressing his solicitude for my future welfare, his hope that I might acquit myself with honor, take a prominent rank in my class, and finally attain to professional eminence. Did he really believe that it would not profit me to gain the whole world and lose my own soul? Did he believe that by a collision of trains, a heedless crossing of the track, or a careless step upon the platform, I might that very day be sent to the bar of doom and an eternity of woe?

And do you think father is not a christian?

I did not say that. I do not presume to judge. I am only saying that my faith in the Bible is less endangered by the arguments of avowed skeptics, than by the practical infidelity of professed believers."

THE VATICAN.

The Vatican, or Pope's palace at Rome, is said to be the most splendid palace in the world. It is said to be more than one thousand feet long, nearly eight hundred feet wide, and has eight grand staircases, two hundred smaller ones, twenty courts, 4,422, apartments, a library of 387,000 printed volumes, and 23,000 manuscripts. But all these riches must "come to nought," as declared by the angel in revelation 18: 17. The day of Babylon's destruction is at hand, and, consequently, the deliverance of the saints from the power of the grave must soon take place. The period in which we are now living is one of thrilling interest to the children of the Lord; but the wicked are very careless relative to their awful situation. They seem to be totally blind to their dangerous position, and are dreaming of good days to come.

All the prophetic streams are about to meet in one grand focal point, hence the end of the present dispensation must soon come.

AFFAIFRS IN ITALY.

There is very clear evidence that the Papal power on "the seven hills" is near its perpetual end. The Pope begins to feel that his position is a critical one. There is no prospect that he can regain political power again. His "dominion" is fast consuming away. The power of the Papacy at Rome is like a person in the last stages of consumption. Death is inevitable.

The following is from The Catholic of Nov. 12, 1864. The last clause gives the reader some idea of the feelings of the Pope:—

"The Pope lately received in a special audience all the French ecclesiastics now in Rome, in number about two hundred. They were presented to His Holiness by Monsignor the Bishop of Autun, who remained near the Pope during the reception. The Clergy were admitted in groups as nearly as possible by Dioceses or by Provinces. Each was desirous to kiss the feet of His Holiness, to the gratification of which wish he graciously gave every facility. The ceremony took much time, but it was visible to all that the good nature of the Pope, so far from being wearied, was increased, and that the emotion of his mind found expression in his countenance, which seemed to be kindled up by sentiments of joy and happiness. At length, not being able to restrain himself any longer, His Holiness rose and addressed the assembled Clergy in a discourse of which the following is the substance:—

His Holiness expressed the profound happiness which he experienced at seeing himself surrounded by so large a number of the French Clergy, 'for,' said he, with a sweet smile, 'I have a great love for the French.' He advised them all to have an ardent zeal for the salvation of souls and for their own sanctification, adding, that the age in which we live is an age of struggle and of combat, and that Catholics ought to show themselves to be the intrepid defenders of the rights of religion and justice.

'The Church,' continued His Holiness, 'has always had struggles, but those which she has now to confront are perhaps greater than those which have preceded them.'"

All things seem to be converging to a grand focal point, not far from the present time. Our conviction is that we shall see our Savior within four years. Reader, are you ready for the event? If not, will you not prepare at once, for none but the righteous will be accepted. Do not delay preparation for another day.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.

Dan. 12: 4–12. "But thou, Daniel, close the words, and seal the book, until the time of the end; when many shall have searched diligently, and knowledge shall be increased. Now I Daniel was seeing, when behold there were two others standing, one on this side at the bank of the river, and the other on that side at the bank of the river; which said to the man clothed in linen who was over the waters of the river, 'At how great a distance will be the end of these marvellous things?' And I heard the man clothed in linen" say "that it would be for a time, times, and a half; and after the accomplishment of the dispersions of the holy people, all these things shall be fulfilled. . . . Many shall be purified and made white and proved; yet the wicked will do wickedly; but though none of the wicked will attend, those of understanding shall attend. . . . Blessed is he that with patient expectation reacheth the days a thousand three hundred thirty and five. But go thou, and to the end be at rest; for thou shalt stand up for thy lot at the end of the days."—Thomas Wintle's translation.

Wintle's is an able and critical work on the book of Daniel. He remarks on the foregoing Scripture: "The full discovery [of the meaning] was not made to the prophet, but reserved for future ages, till time should bring it to light." On verse 10th he remarks: "I would refer the whole to the righteous, who shall be cleansed by various tribulations and trials; but the like discipline shall have no effect on the wicked; see Rev. 22: 11; their wickedness will blind their hearts, so that they shall not attend to these predictions, which the prudent, or those of a wise and good heart, shall understand, shall be fully instructed in themselves, and so as to be able to teach them to others."

On the 13th verse, he remarks that Daniel "should rest in peace to the time of the end, when he should again be raised up, and restored to life, and receive his final allotment from his righteous Judge."

VENTILATION.

ELD. GRANT:—A number of articles have been published in the Crisis referring to ventilation; can you inform your readers as to the most simple method of ventilating a room, without any extra apparatus? that is, if the external air is to be admitted, shall the opening be, at the top or bottom of the room, or both?

Permit me to advert to another subject. On the resurrection of the unjust, it is argued, that Paul's language in Acts 24: 15 is intended to declare the hope of his opposers, inasmuch as the hope of the resurrection of the unjust, to receive the threatened punishment of sin, with all the agony and shame of that resurrection, ending in utter destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power, is inconsistent with christian love, and therefore cannot be the hope of the believer.

Now, is this so? Is it actually inconsistent with the purest and warmest christian love, when hearing or knowing of some deep sin, to feel and express the hope that the offender may receive the due reward of his iniquity, whatever that may be? Nay, may not the christian strongly hope, if the penalty of a life of rebellion against God and his cause, be a resurrection to temporary life, that the transgressor may be made fully sensible of the justice of his sentence, and then perish forever?

I will not however attempt to argue the point, that is not my object; but simply to say, that so far as I can comprehend the subject, the argument based upon the hope in this passage is not conclusive. Neither do I now state my own personal belief concerning the penalty, which can be of no special interest to others. I only say, that taking what would appear to be the simile meaning of John 5: 28, 29, and Acts 24: 15, I have not thus far been able fully to accept the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the unjust.

Yours truly, A. WOOD.

Wiscasset, Me.

In answer to the inquiry relative to ventilation, we would say that all rooms should be ventilated both at the top and bottom; and rooms of the most approved ventilation are thus arranged. Pure hot air will rise to the top of the room, because lighter than cold air; hence, when there is too much of it in a room, it should be allowed to escape through a hole into the chimney, or a box prepared for the purpose, leading out into the open air like a chimney. A similar arrangement should be at the bottom of the room to let bad air escape. Air that we have breathed over once becomes unfit to breathe again; and being heavier than pure air, it falls to the floor, and before it can escape by the ventilator at the top of the room, of course it must rise like water, by continual additions till it escapes at the upper ventilator. For this reason, a room may be well provided with ventilators to let off pure hot air, while at the same time the air in the room may be very bad. But if we have a ventilator into the chimney, or air box at the bottom of the room, then the heavy, impure air, will escape before rising high enough to reach our nostrils. This is the reason why fire-places are so much more healthy than tight stoves. There is continually a great draft into the fire place, or open grate, which takes off the heavy air that we have used, so that it does not accumulate and fill the room. Thousands are ruining their health for want of fresh air. They get air-tight stoves, make their rooms as tight as they can by means of double windows, and very tight doors, shut their dampers, to save fuel, and then wonder why they feel so stupid, and have so much headache. It is next to impossible to enjoy even a tolerable degree of health in such a situation. This is one great reason why so many more have poor health now than in the days of our fathers. Pure air is absolutely essential to secure perfect health.

A very excellent, and improved method for the lower ventilation of a room may be arranged as follows: put a ventilator in the floor at the coldest part of the room, or at a distance from the fire, and then connect that opening in the floor with the chimney, or the air box, by means of a tin, or sheet iron pipe, running under the floor. This arrangement can be easily made when a house is first built.

If persons are obliged to live in rooms that are not provided with the proper means of ventilation, they should open their doors and windows several times a day, for a few minutes, and thus change the bad air for a fresh supply of the pure. They need have no fear of taking cold. The danger would be by the opposite course of keeping shut up in a hot room, filled with impure air. Those living in the latter situation are very liable to have colds and sore throats, accompanied with a dull headache, loss of appetite, and an "all-gone" feeling.

But few know the importance of pure air, and the necessity of breathing it continually, if they would enjoy perfect health.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Napoleon III. is constructing a canal across the isthmus of Suez, large enough for ships to pass. This is a most important enterprise, and will give Napoleon the key to the eastern waters, and a great advantage in commercial matters, over England and other nations. The English came to the conclusion that it was not practicable to build a canal across the isthmus, and abandoned the undertaking, when it was taken up by Bonaparte. An English writer, when speaking of this work, a few weeks since, says:—

"It promises to be ready by 1866; and when it is opened for large vessels, what an uproar it will create in western Europe. It will command the route to India. It will equally command or shorten the route to the gold fields of Australia. Hostile ships can pass without restriction, and without giving any explanation of their objects. In the mean time, France is occupied incessantly in the building of iron ships. Every month we hear of the launching of some new iron-clad. Italy has a powerful iron squadron which will, of course, be at the full disposal of France. . . . The opening of the Suez canal . . . promises to create an entirely new epoch in the affairs of the world. It will throw the three continents into one; and will make him who is arbiter of Europe, arbiter of the whole prophetic earth, and of the remotest frontiers of the Roman empire. France has acquired, long ago, a firm footing on the African continent, on the coast of the Red Sea. When she has become mistress of the Suez canal, having also a depot on the African coast of the Red Sea, she will completely command the highway of the earth; and to make assurance still surer, she is now actively negotiating in Madagascar, which lies in the way to the east. She possesses another stepping-stone in the isle of Bourbon,—another depot for naval stores. In short, the completion of the SUEZ canal will finish the . . . "circumvallation of the globe, . . . and will place the British empire in the position of a city invested by a hostile army."

☞ Do not fail to read the article from Bro. H. P. Van Kirk, in the health column. The subject is a very important one; more so than most believe.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

A brother writes from Portland, Me., as follows:—"I have, the past year, been trying to do a little with tracts and books, and have met with good success, and feel paid for my time and labor. And now I feel like doing more, in carrying truth to the people, and bringing people to the truth. I have therefore made up my mind, as I am now out of work, to labor a little for the Lord in this direction, as I promised him I would do if he would open the way. I have no money to pay for them, but I will give my time, if you will send them, and will do the best I can in the work of distributing them in the country where they will do the most good. If I can sell any, the money will be refunded to the Society, and if you will send me a few copies of the Crisis, I will get all the subscribers I can, and also for the Young Pilgrim."

Have sent you $5.00 worth. May every one of them bring forth fruit abundantly, to the glory of God.

A sister writes from Bath, Me.:—"I notice your remarks on distributing tracts. It is truly a time of darkness, and I feel it my duty to do all I can in bringing souls to Christ. I have no money, but if you will send me some tracts I will do all I can to circulate them."

We have mailed you $2.00 worth. The Lord bless you in winning souls to Christ.

VOICES FROM THE POOR.

FROM A SISTER IN PENNSYLVANIA.

I much regret that I cannot send you what is your due for the paper; it is impossible for me to do so at present. My health is very poor, but I will, as soon as I am able, try to earn some money to pay you what I owe. Before receiving your paper, I had for a long time wanted it, but I had no money, and so did not send for it. But, to my great joy, some one sent it to me; who it was I cannot tell. I love to read its cheering columns, and think it is the best paper I ever read. It has been a great comfort to me in my affliction, and it seems as though I could not live without it.
C.

FROM A SISTER, FRIENDLESS AND ALONE.

I thank you for my paper, and would willingly pay for it if I could; but I am a poor girl, having no father or mother, no brothers or sisters, to help me. I live with those who are opposed to the doctrines of the Crisis, and the doctrines which I love. It is cheering to me to hear from the brethren and sisters through its columns; it is the only preaching I have which tells me of the coming of my blessed Savior, and I should be glad if its visits can be continued. ELIZA.

—— County, Conn.

A SISTER AFFLICTED WITH CANCER.

I write in behalf of Sister G——, one of the worthy poor, to whom your kind bestowal of the Crisis has been a great comfort in her severe affliction. She has a cancer in her eye, and is entirely dependent on the charity of friends. She solicits me to write you, presenting her case. Thanking you for the past, she would be very glad to still receive the Crisis. Her earthly comforts are very few, but I believe she is one of the heirs to a rich inheritance. T. D. B.

Middlesex Co., Mass.

An Example.

We commend the following to the attention of those who may feel it duty to go and do likewise.

"The church in this place want the poor to have the Crisis as well as the rich; we therefore send you the names of two new subscribers who are poor and unable to pay themselves, and the money for six months. We all think the Crisis is the paper for the times, and read it with much interest. The Lord bless you in conducting it.

J. A. CLEAVELAND, Pastor.

Iowa Free List.

It is proposed that the churches and brethren, in each town and county, do what they can to supply their own poor with the Crisis for the coming year. Will the brethren in the following places take the matter in hand, and see what they can do?

THE BANK OF THE LORD'S POOR.

A good bank. The very best and safest; and the bank that pays the highest rate of interest. Will you invest in this bank? Many are doing so, and they will never be sorry that they lent money to the LORD. Some that have made one investment may begin to excuse themselves from doing more; but the Word says, "Give a portion to seven, and also to eight"; so do not stop giving while you have anything to give. Would you water your choice plants once, and then neglect them forever? No. Then give liberally, and often, as GOD hath prospered thee. It is a noble, yea, a glorious work, to provide for the LORD's poor, as the readers of the Crisis are doing. Those who receive are blest, and those who give are DOUBLY blest; for, "it is more blessed to give than to receive." F. H. C.

West Sutton, Mass.

Bro. Grant:—I, too, would like to take a share in the "bank of the Lord's poor," and will do so by sending ——, which please use to pay for the Crisis to Bro. L. W., of ——, C. E., as far as it will go. Bro. W. is now, and has been for several years past, disabled by sickness from working for the support of himself and wife, who is also greatly afflicted by disease. He is poor in this world's goods, but he is rich in faith and an heir of the kingdom, I believe. He dearly loves "our paper," and knows not how to do without its weekly visits. Through your generosity, he has for several years received it free, and he still is on the free list; but it does not seem just that the Crisis office should be made to bear all the burden of providing the bread of life for the many hundreds of the Lord's poor, when, if the brethren and sisters who are able, would only take hold and do their part by paying for all the poor in their own community, as has been proposed, the portion of each would be but a trifle, and ought to be borne with pleasure; then, as a result, the office would be relieved of its heavy load of embarrassments and anxiety which has impeded its progress, or usefulness, for years; have a chance to recuperate a little and gather up its forces, then press with renewed vigor to the work of sending out broadcast over the whole world books, tracts, and papers, richly laden with truth and light for both old and young. May the good Lord speed on the work by helping each to do his or her part towards getting the bride, the Lamb's wife, ready to welcome her soon coming Lord; and finally be permitted to join that select company which shall sit down to the marriage supper, is the earnest prayer of your sister in Christ, S.

BRO. BREWER'S WORKS.

BRO. GRANT:—I have for some time been impressed with the duty of calling the attention of our brethren of "like precious faith" to Bro. S. S. Brewer's "Last Day Tokens," as being calculated to stimulate those who will read and reflect upon their contents to greater zeal and activity in the service of the Master. I consider these little works as a valuable addition to "Second Advent Literature"; containing, as they do, all of the most important events, physical, moral, ecclesiastical, political, which have a bearing on the question of the end of this dispensation, and the second coming of Christ for two or three hundred years past. They contain what it would require years of reading and teaching in libraries and encyclopedias to discover, and I am persuaded that no person can read the numerous facts which he has collected during the twenty or more years of patient labor and earnest faith, which he believes have a bearing upon the question of the Lord's speedy coming, without being strengthened and encouraged by so doing, and without blessing the Lord that he put it into the heart of Bro. B. to collect these facts, and to spread them out before the waiting church. How often I have exclaimed, while reading Nos. 2 and 3 especially, "This is that which was written in the prophets."

I have two objects in view, in directing the attention of brethren and sisters to these works of Bro. Brewer. 1st. The advantage and pleasure they will afford those who obtain, read and circulate them, and the benefit to be derived from their circulation. 2nd. The duty we owe to a faithful old pilgrim brother, who has felt moved of God to collect and spread out these facts before the waiting saints for their encouragement and comfort; and having incurred heavy expense, needs the proceeds to be derived from the sale for his present necessities.

A cold winter is at the door, and Bro. B. is in feeble health, and cannot go out and labor and receive help "after a godly sort" as he once could. While sitting by his fireside musing, and with dear Sister B. singing of the "goodness and mercy of the Lord," like David of old, let us make his heart more glad, his home more cheerful, adding more fuel to the flame of his devotion, by enclosing by mail 25c., 50c., or $5.00, as we are able, and get his works for our own benefit, and cheering him up with our words of comfort and encouragement. By the same mail that conveys this to the Crisis I have put my precept in practice. Brother, or sister, will you "go and do likewise" when you have read this appeal?

MR. BAXTER.

The following account of Mr. Baxter's withdrawal from the Church of England is copied from an English paper. Mr. Baxter is now in Scotland.

"Mr. Baxter has withdrawn from the exercise of his ministry within the Church of England, feeling unable to maintain the declaration required on oath from all its ministers that they cordially assent and consent to the teachings of its Prayer Book, and believe it to contain nothing repugnant to the Holy Scriptures—his withdrawal being grounded, among other reasons, upon objections to the institution of godfathers and godmothers, and the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, taught in its catechism, and baptismal and confirmation services, which assert that children at their baptism have become members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven, and have received forgiveness for all their sins."

REPORT OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE QUAR. CONF.

The N. H. State Quarterly Conference commenced according to appointment, at Portsmouth, N. H., Dec. 1st, at 2 1-2 P. M., with a prayer and conference meeting. Had a profitable season. Some earnest prayers and warm-hearted exhortations. In the evening we listened to a soul-stirring sermon by Bro. C. Goodrich, from John 14: 16, 17. Friday morning, we met for social worship. In the afternoon, preaching by Bro. L. Boutell, from Mal. 3: 16, 17. Preaching in the evening by Bro. J. G. Smith, from Heb. 12: 2.

Saturday morning, met for business. The following brethren of the ministry were present:—L. Boutell, J. G. Smith, B. P. Manning, C. Goodrich, J. Pinkham, J. White. The President, Vice President, and Secretary, not being present, Bro. J. G. Smith was chosen chairman, and Bro. J. W. White, Secretary.

The Secretary of the conference having neglected to forward the records to the quarterly conference, the reading of the minutes of the last conference was necessarily omitted. The conference then proceeded to business. On motion, voted that Bro. C. Goodrich be invited to take part in our deliberations. Carried. The following resolutions were then presented by Bro. Boutell.

1st. Resolved, That the conference proceed immediately to the raising of funds for the distribution of tracts, and to assist preachers to distribute them in new places; which was accepted and adopted.

2nd. Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to take collections and subscriptions; the chairman of this committee to act as Treasurer. Whereupon, Eld. J. W. White, Bro. John Shannon, and Bro. Ephraim Dennett, of Portsmouth, were appointed.

3d. Resolved, That this committee be authorized to disburse the funds received by them to the best of their ability, and report the same at the next quarterly conference. Carried.

4th. Recommended, That preachers co-operating with this conference take collections in places where they may deem it expedient, and report to the next quarterly conference.

5 Moved, That brethren wishing the next quarterly conference in their vicinity, be requested to notify the President of the conference, Eld. A. Ross, of Exeter, N. H., as soon as possible.

6. Moved, That the Secretary send a report of the doings of this conference to the World's Crisis for publication. Carried. The business session then closed with a season of prayer.

Afternoon, preaching by Bro. J. Pinkham, from Matt. 4: 4. Evening, preaching by Bro. C. Goodrich, from Luke 1: 31.

Lord's day, love-feast at 9 1-2 A. M. A soul-stirring time indeed. Fifty-three exhortations in one hour. Forenoon, preaching by Bro. L. Boutell, from Matt. 24: 29, 30. Afternoon, preaching by Bro. Goodrich. In the evening, Bro. Smith preached a genuine missionary sermon, at the close of which a collection was taken for the purpose of sending the truth into new places, to the amount of $28.63. The ordinance of baptism was administered at noon, and the Lord's Supper at the close of the afternoon service. Thus closed the best conference we ever attended; so said many. Jos. W. White, Sec'y.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro Grant:—Since writing before, I have visited Portland, where are a good company of like precious faith, and in a good working state, firm in the faith, rooted, grounded, and settled. And they remembered the laborer is worthy of his meat, and helped him on his journey after a godly sort. Thank the Lord that he provides for me kind friends and hospitable homes. God bless my benefactors.

Visited Biddeford. Found Sister Mussey laboring there, and a good interest existing. Some converts had embraced Jesus and his truth, more were inquiring after truth, and the prospect was encouraging. Visited Bro. Towne, and gave two lectures in his neighborhood, to a very attentive congregation. Bro. Towne's house is a hospitable home for pilgrims, and he wishes me to say to traveling preachers that he wants them to visit him, and to preach to the people. They are very ready to hear, and candid. His house is a half-way place between Biddeford and Kennebunkport, five miles from each, just a comfortable walk for a man in health. Try it, brethren.

Came to Kennebunkport, where I have been hospitably received, and gave them three discourses, Sunday, to a very attentive and orderly audience. Here, too, the Lord is at work by his Spirit, and the brethren also, having meetings very often. They remembered the laborer, and helped him on his way.

The cause of God in Maine is moving forward. The truth of God's word is taking effect upon the hearts of the people. The Sabbath question is before the people very generally, and an investigation is going on; and it might be well for all our brethren to investigate that subject, and settle their minds upon a Bible foundation. The subject will be agitated; the truth will be sought for; the subject must be met; and the sooner the better. There is too great a diversity of opinion upon so important a matter. Some think no Sabbath is binding on the Gentiles; some think the First day is the true Sabbath. Search the Scriptures, brethren on this point.

Yours, B. Spaulding.

Kennebunkport, Me.

From Bro. L. F. Cole.

Bro. Grant:—It has been but a little while since I was brought into the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ, yet I can say with sincerity, I love the way, I love Jesus and all his children wherever they are found; and I believe this to be one test, that I have been accepted by him, even unto salvation. Whosoever will, may come, says the Savior; and how sweet the words to the child of sorrow. There is the Refuge, there is the "Rock of Ages," which will remain a hiding-place forever, which the storms of the world may beat upon, but cannot overturn; and all that will abide therein, may.

And then we have such glorious promises to lay hold upon; so much that is of reality; the substance of things hoped for, with which we may "comfort ourselves" with great comfort. When I look back on dangers that have been passed, on the "world of waters;" when I think of the scenes of carnage and blood mine eyes have witnessed on southern fields; when I think of the world wallowing in sin,—truly it is a cheering thought to look beyond, to the fulfillment of all God's precious promises; to the dawn of the morn of peace on a world purified from every unclean thing; to the "righteousness, peace and joy" of the subjects in the "mountain of His holiness;" and more than all else, oh, comforting thought! to look forward to the time when immortality is ours in God's presence, and He "shall be all and in all."

Cheer up, then, thou weary one; Christ died for you on Calvary. He has gone to prepare a place for you, that where he is you may be also. Cheer up, thou faint-hearted pilgrim in this "vale of tears;" though the enemy hard press thee, victory is sure, if thou wilt "keep the law," and faithfully use the weapons of holy warfare. Gird on the armor of thy Master, and "fear no evil;" for great is Jehovah.

Beloved, be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Your unworthy brother in Christ,

Windham, Me. Lewis F. Cole.

Bro. O. D. Woodruff, Southington, Ct., writes:—"There is quite an interest in Yalesville, Ct., and several have resolved to start to serve the Redeemer, and be ready for the great and terrible day of the Lord, which hasteth greatly. Praise the Lord. 'Seeing all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought' we 'to be in all holy conversation and godliness.'"

Obituaries.

Susan J. Jewett.

Died of diphtheria, in Danbury, N. H., Nov. 28th, Sr. Susan J., wife of Bro. George K. Jewett, and daughter of Deacon Amos Smith, aged about thirty-seven years.

The subject of this notice was a christian. When quite young she sought and found the Savior, and loved the way of life and salvation. She had a good and an honest heart. The word of the kingdom found a place there, and her fruit was unto holiness,—the end will be everlasting life. Our lamented sister has been looking for Jesus to appear the second time unto salvation to such as love his appearing, since 1843. She, with her three sisters and godly parents, with other relatives, has rejoiced while looking for the "blessed hope." She has also shared in the trials and disappointments on the way.

Susan was the first born of four daughters, and the first to die. The blow falls heavily on many hearts. I rejoice that her aged parents have long since learned to trust in God. May those sisters who now mourn the loss of one they loved so well, honor Christ and find him precious in this great affliction. Her husband sorrows, but not as those without hope, being confident that all is well with her. Two little sons by this death are left to mourn the loss of a godly mother. May husband, children, sisters, parents, and all dear friends, meet her, with all that love Jesus, on the other shore.

She was followed from her home in Danbury Village to her father's, about four miles, by many friends, where a discourse was given by the writer. Text. "Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die and not live." After which our dear sister was consigned to the grave, in the family burying-ground, to sleep till Jesus comes.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in the grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number,
Thou no more shalt sorrow know."

Annie L. Blagden.

Died in Bluehill, Oct. 18th, 1864, Annie Laurie, youngest daughter of Eli N. and Hannah C. Blagden, aged nine months, three weeks, and two days.

Little Annie was one of earth's fairest flowers. Although but an infant, she far surpassed most children of her age; but cruel death called her away, and the loved one lies in the churchyard beside her little brother; but when Jesus comes to give life and immortality to all the dear saints, little Annie will come forth robed in immortal beauty, no more to die, but to join the heavenly song, praising God and the Lamb forever.

Farewell, farewell, dear Annie,
We see thee here no more;
But bye and bye we'll meet thee
Safe on the other shore.

Almon E. Loomis.

Almon O., only son of Almon B. and Hester W. Loomis, fell asleep in Jesus Oct. 4th, 1864, aged seven years, five months, and seven days.

Death has torn from the embrace of our brother and sister a choice jewel, a bright and interesting boy. Although young in years, he expressed the hope on his dying bed that he should meet his parents again upon the new earth. This affliction fell heavy on Bro. and Sr. Loomis, but the christian hope sustains them in the hour of affliction, and bids them rejoice in hope of meeting their loved one again on the other shore, where they may again hear his voice singing the songs of praise more melodious and sweet than ever before. We endeavored to minister words of comfort to this afflicted family from the words—"Is it well with the child?" J. Hemenway.

Marietta Tew.

Died in Arlic Village, Warwick, R. I., Nov. 29th, 1864, Marietta, only daughter of Green and Mary Tew, aged seventeen weeks.

Words of comfort were spoken to the afflicted friends by the writer, from Psalm 119: 153.

And thou, lone mother, from whose breast
Thy tender offspring has been torn,
If good thou'lt reign among the blest,
Where mothers never more shall mourn.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 23d ult.]

It was reported at Southampton on the 22d that Semmes' ship Sea King was wrecked off Maderia.

The Times sees no alarm on Lincoln's re-election. England is probably safer in his than in any other hands. We may reasonably believe that Lincoln has sown his wild oats. He has gone through a course of defying and insulting England. We hope he will not repeat the experiment.

PRUSSIA.

Lord Napier had presented his credentials to the king as ambassador. The sentence of death and confiscation of property of seven Poles had been passed.

JAPAN.

Prince Nagato has agreed to open the Simonosaki Straits and not to rebuild the demolished forts; also to pay the allied expedition expenses.

SPAIN.

Duke Rivas has resigned the Presidency of the Council. Marquis Viluma succeeds him. The Epoca says it is Spain's duty to defend Papacy by coming to an understanding with France. "Mon" has accepted the ambassadorship to France.

The Delta Marmora demonstrates that Italy could defend herself, and adds that it was greatly to the interest of France not to allow Italy to be crushed.

Liverpool, Nov. 26th, Queenstown 27th.

The political news is unimportant.

Distressing details are published of wrecks and serious loss of life on the eastern coast of England. No American shipping is mentioned.

Toronto, C. W., Dec. 6. The excitement in regard to the Fenian Brotherhood is revived and is becoming more and more intensified. Last night an "Orange Lodge" was broken open and all its property destroyed by Fenians.

Some five portraits of Queen Victoria were disgracefully mutilated. Excitement to-day is running high, and fears of violence are entertained.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 7. Positive information has been received that a raid upon this city is being organized by rebel refugees in Canada. The civil and military authorities are making every preparation to receive them.

DOMESTIC.

Vicksburg, Dec. 4, via Cairo, Dec 9. Gen. Dana, by a successful expedition from Vicksburg, destroyed the Mississippi Central Railroad for 30 miles above Big Black river crossing, including the long bridge at that place. He found the enemy in force, but the work was thoroughly done. Our troops then returned to Vicksburg with a loss of 5 killed and 41 wounded and missing. He also destroyed 2500 bales of Confederate cotton and about $300,000 worth of other public property.

New York, Dec. 6. The Tribune's Shenandoah Valley dispatch of the 4th says, an expedition under Gen. Merritt, absent about a week, in Loudon Valley, has just returned with 2000 head of cattle, sheep and hogs, and left the whole region over which he passed without hay or forage of any kind. All barns containing hay were burned and the haunts of Mosby and his gang thoroughly cleaned out. These results in Loudon Valley, which has been Mosby's lurking place, are of the utmost importance.

New York, Dec. 7. Hood attacked our forces at Murfreesbro' and was repulsed with the loss of six guns.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 7. The Journal's Nashville dispatch of the 6th, says the rebels lost at Franklin, ten General officers. Among those not previously reported are Gen's Govan and Quarles. Cheatham escaped capture only by the fleetness of his horse.

The steamers Prima Donna, Prairie State and Magnet, captured yesterday on the Cumberland river, were re-captured to-day by the gunboat Carondelet.

New York, Dec. 7. Fresh Southern papers show a continuance of the fight both in Sherman's front and in South Carolina. An immense number of proclamations have been issued by Governors and Mayors, calling upon everybody to shoulder a musket and report to the front, but in Charleston it appears that these proclamations are fruitless.

Denver City, Dec. 8. Detachments of the 1st and 3d cavalry had a fight with the Indians near Fort Lyon, and killed between 400 and 500 of them, and captured about 500 ponies and mules. The chiefs Blackettle, White, Antelope and Little Rob were killed. Our loss was 9 killed and 38 wounded.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 8. The Democrat's dispatch from Paducah 7th, says all stories about disasters on the Cumberland river are untrue. The river is entirely clear and unobstructed to Clarksville, to which point our transports are without any convoy. From Clarksville to Nashville, transports are convoyed by gunboats, as there are several batteries between the two points.

New York, Dec. 9. Richmond papers say Grant is massing on the extreme right of the Army to the James, and an attack by him there and by the left of the Army of the Potomac, were expected. Recent proceedings in the South Carolina Legislature look as if that State was about to secede from the empire of Jeff. Davis. Resolutions had been introduced denouncing as unconstitutional, Davis' proposition to emancipate the slaves, and to abridge the freedom of the press, declaring that the States are not amenable to the Richmond government, and advising other States not to submit to its usurpations.

According to the reports of deserters from Rain's foundry, in Richmond, there is now but one white man remaining in the establishment at work, all having from time to time made their way to our lines. This establishment has orders for some 40 pieces of artillery to replace those lost by Early in the Valley, and through the Rebel Government is urging their being hurried out, they are utterly unable to produce them.

The rebels estimate Sherman's entire force at 30,000 infantry and 5000 cavalry, and say that his soldiers expressed astonishment at the richness of the country through which they were passing, and the abundance of provisions it contained.

Washington, Dec. 9. The Richmond Examiner of Wednesday, received from the army correspondent of the Journal, says that the military drama in Georgia is drawing rapidly to its denouement. Gen Sherman is at last approaching the coast, whither he has been travelling nearly twenty-three days. Whether he will complete the journey or not depends very much upon certain events which will occur this week.

There are troops in his front who will resolutely dispute his further advance towards Savannah or Darien after he passes a certain point. It is reported that his advance was skirmishing yesterday (Tuesday) morning with our outposts. We do not know what Sherman may do when he finds a formidable force in his front, but are disposed to believe that he will discard strategy and attempt to break the lines of his opposers. Let him do what he will, he will certainly feel that never was a general in a more critical situation."

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 11. Information has been received here that a raid is contemplated on this city immediately.

A heavy snow storm has prevailed here to-day, accompanied by a gale.

Dutch Gap Canal. An army correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says of this work, which is near completion:

"The canal will be five hundred feet in length, or, including dredging, in water, five hundred and fifty feet. Its breadth at the top of the cut is one hundred and twenty-five, and at the bottom sixty-five feet, the sides having very steep slopes. It will have fifteen feet of water at low tides (these being slightly felt here.) This short cut will soon save a navigation of seven miles, the Southern shore beyond that point being high and precipitous"

Mr. Lincoln's First Speech. Abraham made his first political speech in 1832 when nominated for the Illinois Legislature, and this was it:

"Gentlemen, fellow-citizens: I presume you all know who I am. I am humble Abraham Lincoln. I have been solicited by many friends to become a candidate for the legislature. My politics are, short and sweet, like an old woman's dance. I am in favor of a national bank. I am in favor of the internal improvement system, and a high protective tariff. These are my sentiments and political principles. If elected, I shall be thankful. If not, it will be all the same."

The New York Incendiaries.—A significant advertisement appears in the Richmond papers, calling a meeting of the "Brotherhood," and saying "The failure of our employes to do their work recently, with skill, in the city of New York, makes it necessary for the Brotherhood to meet and concert measures for a more decisive execution of the great retaliatory duty which they have taken upon themselves at this juncture. Our own homes have been destroyed, in violation of all the rules of war, and we must make our ruthless enemy feel the weight of our justly aroused vengeance in the very centres of his resources and wealth. We can do it—do it effectually.

Origin of the Wooden Nutmegs of Connecticut.—New London is responsible for "wooden nutmegs." Many years ago a small trader sent from there a few nutmegs to Beaufort, S. C. A planter named Bogart, seeing the nutmegs, bought them at a good price. Pleased with his purchase, and being especially vain of having choice delicacies at his table, he produced for his guests those rare and somewhat costly nuts. But the nuts wouldn't crack, and when broken open were found to contain no meat, and the honest Connecticut Yankee was cursed by the Carolina chivalry as a cheat for selling nutmegs without meat, and which they therefore supposed were made of wood. When our troops entered Beaufort they still found the same prejudice existing against nutmegs and Yankees.

The Pope—France and Italy.

A most remarkable treaty has just been concluded between France and Italy, and at last accounts it had been handed to the Pope for his acceptance. By it Napoleon is bound to withdraw his troops from Rome within two years, or by 1866. The Pope is to find his own troops for internal government; while Italy guarantees protection to the Papal dominions from fillibustering expeditions. But those provinces which were taken from the pope in the revolutions of 1859 and '60, and which he has alwasy insisted upon having restored to him are definitively wrested from him; the only satisfaction offered being that Italy will assume their proportion of the Papal debt.

In Rev. 17: 16—18 we read:—"And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. And the woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth."

We do not have to look into history to find the fulfillment of these words. There are none living who have come to years of understanding and have informed themselves in regard to passing events but have marked the decadence of the Papacy and the contempt into which its temporal power has fallen. There is no misunderstanding the feelings of the European powers. Political jealousies alone, have enabled the Pope to retain his hold on Rome. And no words could so graphically describe the condition to which the Papacy is reduced as those of the Revelator. See her in the fifteenth century: rich, powerful, kings and emperors bowing at her feet, reverenced even by those who feared her. She was decked with sumptuous apparel, and drunken with the blood of saints. What do we see her to-day? An object of pity and contempt. Her sources of wealth have been dried up; her territory has little by little been taken from her till the city stands almost "naked," and God's people rejoice while they see the "king's eating her flesh (substance) and burning her with fire." And the work goes on! We see the Papacy sinking, sinking—but we know its final destruction will be at the coming of Christ. See Thess. 2: 8.

A late European writer, in remarking on this treaty says—"Such are the stipulations of the treaty, of which the following gives you an authentic explanation. Napoleon wants to give time to the Pope for putting his affairs in order before the French occupation ceases, or rather to impress him sufficiently that unless he comes to terms with Victor Emanuel he cannot retain his temporal power for any length of time, as it is self-evident that as soon as the French withdraw, the Romans will rise and proclaim the annexation to Italy. Napoleon therefore proposes a convention between the Papacy and Italy, by which the Pope gives up his temporal power, retaining his jurisdiction exclusively in the Eternal City, which, under the papal suzerainty, would be governed by municipal authority elected by universal suffrage. On the other hand, Italy would acknowledge the neutralization of Rome, which would become a free District, something like Columbia with Washington in America."

It is a remarkable fact that Roman Catholics themselves are lookng to see the Pope expelled from Rome. An impression is becoming general among them that this will be done within a few years. They think this will be the work of the "Man of Sin," the "Anti-Christ.—Voice of the West.

Conference in Holden.

A conference will be held in Holden, Mass., at the Town Hall, commencing Wednesday, Dec. 21st, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Preaching by different ministering brethren. Prayer and conference meeting at 10 A. M., preaching at 2 P. M., and also at 6 in the evening.

All in Holden and its vicinity who love God and the salvation of sinners, and desire to know and understand the truth, and be prepared for the day of his coming, are cordially invited. Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, but exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. Pray for God's blessing upon the meeting.

In behalf of the church, H. K. Flagg.

Meetings in Dansville, N. Y.

Elder Edwin Burnham will commence laboring with the church of God in Dansville, N. Y., on the second Sunday in January, 1865, if the Lord will, to continue for a length of time, according to the will of God. The object of the meetings will be to convict sinners of the truth that they may be converted, whether in the professed church or out of it. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to visit us during these meetings, who will make it their sole purpose in visiting us to help on in this work. We believe in prayer; therefore, brethren, pray for us. F. Burr.

Conference.

The Maine Western Central Quarterly Conference will be holden at the Union Chapel in Cornville, commencing Thursday, January 5th, 1865, at half-past 6 o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. Brethren from a distance will please inquire for Brn. Chas. Stratton, J. Flanders, P. Gardner, — Hight, — Warren, J. Fogg, or B. Tuttle. Provision will be made for all. Come, brethren and sisters, let us see to it that we have on the gospel armor, and meet together prepared to labor with a zeal worthy of the cause in which we are engaged. D. W. Griffin, Clerk.

Advent Herald, please copy.

Religious Notice.

Providence permitting, Elder Edwin Burnham will commence a series of meetings with the Free Evangelical Church in North Attleboro, Mass., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 20th, to continue several weeks. We earnestly hope and pray that many precious souls may, as the result of these meetings, be made ready for a home in the kingdom of God. We invite our friends in the surrounding region to attend and labor with us.

C. Cunningham.

Notice.

The Lord willing, I will answer to calls from different parts of Ohio some time in Feb. next. I will stop and preach an evening or two in intermediate places lying near the W. R. R. from Albany to Buffalo, N. Y., and Buffalo to Cleaveland, Ohio, as may be desired. Brethren thus located, and wishing me to do so, can inform me at Holliston, Mass. H. K. Flagg.

Discussion Resumed.

The discussion between Eld. S. W. Bishop and myself, (which was broken off after the second evening, on account of the sickness and death of my little girl), will be resumed Jan. 4th, 1865, at New Market Hall, Providence, R. I. A. Durfee.

Conference at Lee, N. H.

A conference will commence at Lee, (Union House,) Dec. 18th, and continue as long as may be duty. Bro. C. S. Emerson will be expected; and all who feel like working for the salvation of sinners are invited to attend. Wier Davis.

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session with the church in Danielsonville, Conn., commencing the first Wednesday in January. The friends of Jesus and others are invited to attend. A. C. Greene, Secy.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co., now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. As the new hymn book is not to be published at present, we have contracted with Bro. Himes for the "Christian Lyre," so that we can supply those who want them in Maine at wholesale and retail. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. Welcome & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit, and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 480. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

REPORT OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE QUAR. CONF.

The N. H. State Quarterly Conference commenced according to appointment, at Portsmouth, N. H., Dec. 1st, at 2 1-2 P. M., with a prayer and conference meeting. Had a profitable season. Some earnest prayers and warm-hearted exhortations. In the evening we listened to a soul-stirring sermon by Bro. C. Goodrich, from John 14: 16, 17. Friday morning, we met for social worship. In the afternoon, preaching by Bro. L. Boutell, from Mal. 3: 16, 17. Preaching in the evening by Bro. J. G. Smith, from Heb. 12: 2.

Saturday morning, met for business. The following brethren of the ministry were present:—L. Boutell, J. G. Smith, B. P. Manning, C. Goodrich, J. Pinkham, J. White. The President, Vice President, and Secretary, not being present, Bro. J. G. Smith was chosen chairman, and Bro. J. W. White, Secretary.

The Secretary of the conference having neglected to forward the records to the quarterly conference, the reading of the minutes of the last conference was necessarily omitted. The conference then proceeded to business. On motion, voted that Bro. C. Goodrich be invited to take part in our deliberations. Carried. The following resolutions were then presented by Bro. Boutell.

1st. Resolved, That the conference proceed immediately to the raising of funds for the distribution of tracts, and to assist preachers to distribute them in new places; which was accepted and adopted.

2nd. Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to take collections and subscriptions; the chairman of this committee to act as Treasurer. Whereupon, Eld. J. W. White, Bro. John Shannon, and Bro. Ephraim Dennett, of Portsmouth, were appointed.

3d. Resolved, That this committee be authorized to disburse the funds received by them to the best of their ability, and report the same at the next quarterly conference. Carried.

4th. Recommended, That preachers co-operating with this conference take collections in places where they may deem it expedient, and report to the next quarterly conference.

5 Moved, That brethren wishing the next quarterly conference in their vicinity, be requested to notify the President of the conference, Eld. A. Ross, of Exeter, N. H., as soon as possible.

6. Moved, That the Secretary send a report of the doings of this conference to the World's Crisis for publication. Carried. The business session then closed with a season of prayer.

Afternoon, preaching by Bro. J. Pinkham, from Matt. 4: 4. Evening, preaching by Bro. C. Goodrich, from Luke 1: 31.

Lord's day, love-feast at 9 1-2 A. M. A soul-stirring time indeed. Fifty-three exhortations in one hour. Forenoon, preaching by Bro. L. Boutell, from. Matt. 24: 29, 30. Afternoon, preaching by Bro. Goodrich. In the evening, Bro. Smith preached a genuine missionary sermon, at the close of which a collection was taken for the purpose of sending the truth into new places, to the amount of $28.63. The ordinance of baptism was administered at noon, and the Lord's Supper at the close of the afternoon service. Thus closed the best conference we ever attended; so said many. Jos. W. White, Sec'y.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro Grant:—Since writing before, I have visited Portland, where are a good company of like precious faith, and in a good working state, firm in the faith, rooted, grounded, and settled. And they remembered the laborer is worthy of his meat, and helped him on his journey after a godly sort. Thank the Lord that he provides for me kind friends and hospitable homes. God bless my benefactors.

Visited Biddeford. Found Sister Mussey laboring there, and a good interest existing. Some converts had embraced Jesus and his truth, more were inquiring after truth, and the prospect was encouraging. Visited Bro. Towne, and gave two lectures in his neighborhood, to a very attentive congregation. Bro. Towne's house is a hospitable home for pilgrims, and he wishes me to say to traveling preachers that he wants them to visit him, and to preach to the people. They are very ready to hear, and candid. His house is a half-way place between Biddeford and Kennebunkport, five miles from each, just a comfortable walk for a man in health. Try it, brethren.

Came to Kennebunkport, where I have been hospitably received, and gave them three discourses, Sunday, to a very attentive and orderly audience. Here, too, the Lord is at work by his Spirit, and the brethren also, having meetings very often. They remembered the laborer, and helped him on his way.

The cause of God in Maine is moving forward. The truth of God's word is taking effect upon the hearts of the people. The Sabbath question is before the people very generally, and an investigation is going on; and it might be well for all our brethren to investigate that subject, and settle their minds upon a Bible foundation. The subject will be agitated; the truth will be sought for; the subject must be met; and the sooner the better. There is too great a diversity of opinion upon so important a matter. Some think no Sabbath is binding on the Gentiles; some think the First day is the true Sabbath. Search the Scriptures, brethren on this point.

Yours, B. Spaulding.

Kennebunkport, Me.

From Bro. L. F. Cole.

Bro. Grant:—It has been but a little while since I was brought into the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ, yet I can say with sincerity, I love the way, I love Jesus and all his children wherever they are found; and I believe this to be one test, that I have been accepted by him, even unto salvation. Whosoever will, may come, says the Savior; and how sweet the words to the child of sorrow. There is the Refuge, there is the "Rock of Ages," which will remain a hiding-place forever, which the storms of the world may beat upon, but cannot overturn; and all that will abide therein, may.

And then we have such glorious promises to lay hold upon; so much that is of reality; the substance of things hoped for, with which we may "comfort ourselves" with great comfort. When I look back on dangers that have been passed, on the "world of waters;" when I think of the scenes of carnage and blood mine eyes have witnessed on southern fields; when I think of the world wallowing in sin,—truly it is a cheering thought to look beyond, to the fulfillment of all God's precious promises; to the dawn of the morn of peace on a world purified from every unclean thing; to the "righteousness, peace and joy" of the subjects in the "mountain of His holiness;" and more than all else, oh, comforting thought! to look forward to the time when immortality is ours in God's presence, and He "shall be all and in all."

Cheer up, then, thou weary one; Christ died for you on Calvary. He has gone to prepare a place for you, that where he is you may be also. Cheer up, thou faint-hearted pilgrim in this "vale of tears;" though the enemy hard press thee, victory is sure, if thou wilt "keep the law," and faithfully use the weapons of holy warfare. Gird on the armor of thy Master, and "fear no evil;" for great is Jehovah.

Beloved, be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Your unworthy brother in Christ,

Windham, Me. Lewis F. Cole.

Bro. O. D. Woodruff, Southington, Ct., writes:—"There is quite an interest in Yalesville, Ct., and several have resolved to start to serve the Redeemer, and be ready for the great and terrible day of the Lord, which hasteth greatly. Praise the Lord. 'Seeing all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought' we 'to be in all holy conversation and godliness.'"

Obituaries.

Susan J. Jewett.

Died of diphtheria, in Danbury, N. H., Nov. 28th, Sr. Susan J., wife of Bro. George K. Jewett, and daughter of Deacon Amos Smith, aged about thirty-seven years.

The subject of this notice was a christian. When quite young she sought and found the Savior, and loved the way of life and salvation. She had a good and an honest heart. The word of the kingdom found a place there, and her fruit was unto holiness,—the end will be everlasting life. Our lamented sister has been looking for Jesus to appear the second time unto salvation to such as love his appearing, since 1843. She, with her three sisters and godly parents, with other relatives, has rejoiced while looking for the "blessed hope." She has also shared in the trials and disappointments on the way.

Susan was the first born of four daughters, and the first to die. The blow falls heavily on many hearts. I rejoice that her aged parents have long since learned to trust in God. May those sisters who now mourn the loss of one they loved so well, honor Christ and find him precious in this great affliction. Her husband sorrows, but not as those without hope, being confident that all is well with her. Two little sons by this death are left to mourn the loss of a godly mother. May husband, children, sisters, parents, and all dear friends, meet her, with all that love Jesus, on the other shore.

She was followed from her home in Danbury Village to her father's, about four miles, by many friends, where a discourse was given by the writer. Text. "Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die and not live." After which our dear sister was consigned to the grave, in the family burying-ground, to sleep till Jesus comes.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in the grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number,
Thou no more shalt sorrow know."

John G. Hook.

Annie L. Blagden.

Died in Bluehill, Oct. 18th, 1864, Annie Laurie, youngest daughter of Eli N. and Hannah C. Blagden, aged nine months, three weeks, and two days.

Little Annie was one of earth's fairest flowers. Although but an infant, she far surpassed most children of her age; but cruel death called her away, and the loved one lies in the churchyard beside her little brother; but when Jesus comes to give life and immortality to all the dear saints, little Annie will come forth robed in immortal beauty, no more to die, but to join the heavenly song, praising God and the Lamb forever.

Farewell, farewell, dear Annie,
We see thee here no more;
But bye and bye we'll meet thee
Safe on the other shore.

Almon E. Loomis.

Almon O., only son of Almon B. and Hester W. Loomis, fell asleep in Jesus Oct. 4th, 1864, aged seven years, five months, and seven days.

Death has torn from the embrace of our brother and sister a choice jewel, a bright and interesting boy. Although young in years, he expressed the hope on his dying bed that he should meet his parents again upon the new earth. This affliction fell heavy on Bro. and Sr. Loomis, but the christian hope sustains them in the hour of affliction, and bids them rejoice in hope of meeting their loved one again on the other shore, where they may again hear his voice singing the songs of praise more melodious and sweet than ever before. We endeavored to minister words of comfort to this afflicted family from the words—"Is it well with the child?" J. Hemenway.

Marietta Tew.

Died in Arlic Village, Warwick, R. I., Nov. 29th, 1864, Marietta, only daughter of Green and Mary Tew, aged seventeen weeks.

Words of comfort were spoken to the afflicted friends by the writer, from Psalm 119: 153.

And thou, lone mother, from whose breast
Thy tender offspring has been torn,
If good thou'lt reign among the blest,
Where mothers never more shall mourn.

Wm. S. Devereux.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 23d ult.]

It was reported at Southampton on the 22d that Semmes' ship Sea King was wrecked off Maderia.

The Times sees no alarm on Lincoln's re-election. England is probably safer in his than in any other hands. We may reasonably believe that Lincoln has sown his wild oats. He has gone through a course of defying and insulting England. We hope he will not repeat the experiment.

PRUSSIA.

Lord Napier had presented his credentials to the king as ambassador. The sentence of death and confiscation of property of seven Poles had been passed.

JAPAN.

Prince Nagato has agreed to open the Simonosaki Straits and not to rebuild the demolished forts; also to pay the allied expedition expenses.

SPAIN.

Duke Rivas has resigned the Presidency of the Council. Marquis Viluma succeeds him. The Epoca says it is Spain's duty to defend Papacy by coming to an understanding with France. "Mon" has accepted the ambassadorship to France.

The Delta Marmora demonstrates that Italy could defend herself, and adds that it was greatly to the interest of France not to allow Italy to be crushed.

Liverpool, Nov. 26th, Queenstown 27th.

The political news is unimportant.

Distressing details are published of wrecks and serious loss of life on the eastern coast of England. No American shipping is mentioned.

Toronto, C. W., Dec. 6. The excitement in regard to the Fenian Brotherhood is revived and is becoming more and more intensified. Last night an "Orange Lodge" was broken open and all its property destroyed by Fenians.

Some five portraits of Queen Victoria were disgracefully mutilated. Excitement to-day is running high, and fears of violence are entertained.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 7. Positive information has been received that a raid upon this city is being organized by rebel refugees in Canada. The civil and military authorities are making every preparation to receive them.

DOMESTIC.

Vicksburg, Dec. 4, via Cairo, Dec 9. Gen. Dana, by a successful expedition from Vicksburg, destroyed the Mississippi Central Railroad for 30 miles above Big Black river crossing, including the long bridge at that place. He found the enemy in force, but the work was thoroughly done. Our troops then returned to Vicksburg with a loss of 5 killed and 41 wounded and missing. He also destroyed 2500 bales of Confederate cotton and about $300,000 worth of other public property.

New York, Dec. 6. The Tribune's Shenandoah Valley dispatch of the 4th says, an expedition under Gen. Merritt, absent about a week, in Loudon Valley, has just returned with 2000 head of cattle, sheep, and hogs, and left the whole region over which he passed without hay or forage of any kind. All barns containing hay were burned and the haunts of Mosby and his gang thoroughly cleaned out. These results in Loudon Valley, which has been Mosby's lurking place, are of the utmost importance.

New York, Dec. 7. Hood attacked our forces at Murfreesbro' and was repulsed with the loss of six guns.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 7. The Journal's Nashville dispach of the 6th, says the rebels lost at Franklin, ten General officers. Among those not previously reported are Gen's Govan and Quarles. Cheatham escaped capture only by the fleetness of his horse.

The steamers Prima Donna, Prairie State and Magnet, captured yesterday on the Cumberland river, were re-captured to-day by the gunboat Carondelet.

New York, Dec. 7. Fresh Southern papers show a continuance of the fight both in Sherman's front and in South Carolina. An immense number of proclamations have been issued by Governors and Mayors, calling upon everybody to shoulder a musket and report to the front, but in Charleston it appears that these proclamations are fruitless.

Denver City, Dec. 8. Detachments of the 1st and 3d cavalry had a fight with the Indians near Fort Lyon, and killed between 400 and 500 of them, and captured about 500 ponies and mules. The chiefs Blackettle, White, Antelope and Little Rob were killed. Our loss was 9 killed and 38 wounded.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 8. The Democrat's dispatch from Paducah 7th, says all stories about disasters on the Cumberland river are untrue. The river is entirely clear and unobstructed to Clarksville, to which point our transports are without any convoy. From Clarksville to Nashville, transports are convoyed by gunboats, as there are several batteries between the two points.

New York, Dec. 9. Richmond papers say Grant is massing on the extreme right of the Army to the James, and an attack by him there and by the left of the Army of the Potomac, were expected. Recent proceedings in the South Carolina Legislature look as if that State was about to secede from the empire of Jeff. Davis. Resolutions had been introduced denouncing as unconstitutional, Davis' proposition to emancipate the slaves, and to abridge the freedom of the press, declaring that the States are not amenable to the Richmond government, and advising other States not to submit to its usurpations.

According to the reports of deserters from Rain's foundry, in Richmond, there is now but one white man remaining in the establishment at work, all having from time to time made their way to our lines. This establishment has orders for some 40 pieces of artillery to replace those lost by Early in the Valley, and through the Rebel Government is urging their being hurried out, they are utterly unable to produce them.

The rebels estimate Sherman's entire force at 30,000 infantry and 5000 cavalry, and say that his soldiers expressed astonishment at the richness of the country through which they were passing, and the abundance of provisions it contained.

Washington, Dec. 9. The Richmond Examiner of Wednesday, received from the army correspondent of the Journal, says that the military drama in Georgia is drawing rapidly to its denouement. Gen Sherman is at last approaching the coast, whither he has been travelling nearly twenty-three days. Whether he will complete the journey or not depends very much upon certain events which will occur this week.

There are troops in his front who will resolutely dispute his further advance towards Savannah or Darien after he passes a certain point. It is reported that his advance was skirmishing yesterday (Tuesday) morning with our outposts. We do not know what Sherman may do when he finds a formidable force in his front, but are disposed to believe that he will discard strategy and attempt to break the lines of his opposers. Let him do what he will, he will certainly feel that never was a general in a more critical situation."

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 11. Information has been received here that a raid is contemplated on this city immediately.

A heavy snow storm has prevailed here to-day, accompanied by a gale.

Dutch Gap Canal. An army correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says of this work, which is near completion:

"The canal will be five hundred feet in length, or, including dredging, in water, five hundred and fifty feet. Its breadth at the top of the cut is one hundred and twenty-five, and at the bottom sixty-five feet, the sides having very steep slopes. It will have fifteen feet of water at low tides (these being slightly felt here.) This short cut will soon save a navigation of seven miles, the Southern shore beyond that point being high and precipitous"

Mr. Lincoln's First Speech. Abraham made his first political speech in 1832 when nominated for the Illinois Legislature, and this was it:

"Gentlemen, fellow-citizens: I presume you all know who I am. I am humble Abraham Lincoln. I have been solicited by many friends to become a candidate for the legislature. My politics are, short and sweet, like an old woman's dance. I am in favor of a national bank. I am in favor of the internal improvement system, and a high protective tariff. These are my sentiments and political principles. If elected, I shall be thankful. If not, it will be all the same."

The New York Incendiaries.—A significant advertisement appears in the Richmond papers, calling a meeting of the "Brotherhood," and saying "The failure of our employes to do their work recently, with skill, in the city of New York, makes it necessary for the Brotherhood to meet and concert measures for a more decisive execution of the great retaliatory duty which they have taken upon themselves at this juncture. Our own homes have been destroyed, in violation of all the rules of war, and we must make our ruthless enemy feel the weight of our justly aroused vengeance in the very centres of his resources and wealth. We can do it—do it effectually.

Origin of the Wooden Nutmegs of Connecticut.—New London is responsible for "wooden nutmegs." Many years ago a small trader sent from there a few nutmegs to Beaufort, S. C. A planter named Bogart, seeing the nutmegs, bought them at a good price. Pleased with his purchase, and being especially vain of having choice delicacies at his table, he produced for his guests those rare and somewhat costly nuts. But the nuts wouldn't crack, and when broken open were found to contain no meat, and the honest Connecticut Yankee was cursed by the Carolina chivalry as a cheat for selling nutmegs without meat, and which they therefore supposed were made of wood. When our troops entered Beaufort they still found the same prejudice existing against nutmegs and Yankees.

The Pope—France and Italy.

A most remarkable treaty has just been concluded between France and Italy, and at last accounts it had been handed to the Pope for his acceptance. By it Napoleon is bound to withdraw his troops from Rome within two years, or by 1866. The Pope is to find his own troops for internal government; while Italy guarantees protection to the Papal dominions from fillibustering expeditions. But those provinces which were taken from the pope in the revolutions of 1859 and '60, and which he has alway insisted upon having restored to him are definitively wrested from him; the only satisfaction offered being that Italy will assume their proportion of the Papal debt.

In Rev. 17: 16—18 we read:—"And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. And the woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth."

We do not have to look into history to find the fulfillment of these words. There are none living who have come to years of understanding and have informed themselves in regard to passing events but have marked the decadence of the Papacy and the contempt into which its temporal power has fallen. There is no misunderstanding the feelings of the European powers. Political jealousies alone, have enabled the Pope to retain his hold on Rome. And no words could so graphically describe the condition to which the Papacy is reduced as those of the Revelator. See her in the fifteenth century: rich, powerful, kings and emperors bowing at her feet, reverenced even by those who feared her. She was decked with sumptuous apparel, and drunken with the blood of saints. What do we see her to-day? An object of pity and contempt. Her sources of wealth have been dried up; her territory has little by little been taken from her till the city stands almost "naked," and God's people rejoice while they see the "king's eating her flesh (substance) and burning her with fire." And the work goes on! We see the Papacy sinking, sinking—but we know its final destruction will be at the coming of Christ. See Thess. 2: 8.

A late European writer, in remarking on this treaty says—"Such are the stipulations of the treaty, of which the following gives you an authentic explanation. Napoleon wants to give time to the Pope for putting his affairs in order before the French occupation ceases, or rather to impress him sufficiently that unless he comes to terms with Victor Emanuel he cannot retain his temporal power for any length of time, as it is self-evident that as soon as the French withdraw, the Romans will rise and proclaim the annexation to Italy. Napoleon therefore proposes a convention between the Papacy and Italy, by which the Pope gives up his temporal power, retaining his jurisdiction exclusively in the Eternal City, which, under the papal suzerainty, would be governed by municipal authority elected by universal suffrage. On the other hand, Italy would acknowledge the neutralization of Rome, which would become a free District, something like Columbia with Washington in America."

It is a remarkable fact that Roman Catholics themselves are lookng to see the Pope expelled from Rome. An impression is becoming general among them that this will be done within a few years. They think this will be the work of the "Man of Sin," the "Anti-Christ.—Voice of the West.

ITEMS.

☞ News from Brazil says that an order has been issued by the Government commanding that all the ports of the country be shut against the United States steamer Wachusett, for the violation of the neutrality laws of Bahia by its captain.

☞ Congress will soon discuss the propriety of permitting the purchase of cotton from rebel territory. Some are of opinion that it would be beneficial even to pay gold for a supply of cotton for home consumption and exportation.

☞ Gold in Richmond is now at a premium of 4000 per cent., or forty dollars for one, having advanced since the defeat of the peace candidate at the North for the Presidency from about 2400 per cent. to its present figure.

☞ Next year there will be four eclipses, two of the sun and two of the moon. The eclipses of the sun occur on the 25th of April and the 15th of October. Those of the moon on the 11th of April and the 2d of October.

☞ The excavations at Pompeii have just led to the discovery of a temple of Juno, on the flags of which were scattered about more than 200 skeletons of women and children who, during the eruption of Vesuvius, hastened to the temple to implore the protection of the goddess.

☞ A London letter in the Tribune says it is reported there in financial circles that half the rebel debt is held in England, and that if it is not paid eventually, half of the British money bags will collapse. This is the secret of John Bull's adherence to the Confederacy.

☞ The terror of the desert of Sahara is being removed by the application of science. In 1860 five wells had been opened, bringing fishes to the surface from a depth of five hundred feet. Vegetation is springing up around the wells, and the "desert will blossom like the rose."

☞ The Sultan of Turkey has prohibited the Circassian slave trade, firmans having recently been issued absolutely abolishing the trade, and forbidding the further purchase or sale of slaves of either sex.

☞ The Philadelphia Press says the net profits of the Sanitary Commission Fair, held in that city last summer, amounts to one million and ten thousand dollars.

☞ A Sandwich Island diver recently went down ten feet in the harbor of Honolulu, and remained long enough to put chains around a sunken boat.

☞ A Federal prisoner who escaped from Millen, Ga., Nov. 13, says there were 11,000 prisoners at that place when he left.

☞ The Savannah papers of November 30 announce that the entire male population of that city has been called to arms, to resist our forces.

☞ The Navy Department has recovered the treasure box from the Florida with $12,000 in gold in it.

☞ Large quantities of clothing, boots and shoes have been sent to the Union prisoners via Mobile.

☞ Bermuda Hundred was so named because it is just one hundred miles from the mouth of James river

☞ Ex-Secretary Chase has been appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

☞ Egypt raised one hundred million of dollars worth of cotton last year.

☞ Five thousand persons perished by the cyclone in Calcutta.

☞ Jeff. Davis's Mississippi plantation is now a home for freed slaves.

Conference in Holden.

A conference will be held in Holden, Mass., at the Town Hall, commencing Wednesday, Dec. 21st, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Preaching by different ministering brethren. Prayer and conference meeting at 10 A. M., preaching at 2 P. M., and also at 6 in the evening.

All in Holden and its vicinity who love God and the salvation of sinners, and desire to know and understand the truth, and be prepared for the day of his coming, are cordially invited. Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, but exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. Pray for God's blessing upon the meeting.

In behalf of the church, H. K. Flagg.

Meetings in Dansville, N. Y.

Elder Edwin Burnham will commence laboring with the church of God in Dansville, N. Y., on the second Sunday in January, 1865, if the Lord will, to continue for a length of time, according to the will of God. The object of the meetings will be to convict sinners of the truth that they may be converted, whether in the professed church or out of it. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to visit us during these meetings, who will make it their sole purpose in visiting us to help on in this work. We believe in prayer; therefore, brethren, pray for us. F. Burr.

Conference.

The Maine Western Central Quarterly Conference will be holden at the Union Chapel in Cornville, commencing Thursday, January 5th, 1865, at half-past 6 o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. Brethren from a distance will please inquire for Brn. Chas. Stratton, J. Flanders, P. Gardner, — Hight, — Warren, J. Fogg, or B. Tuttle. Provision will be made for all. Come, brethren and sisters, let us see to it that we have on the gospel armor, and meet together prepared to labor with a zeal worthy of the cause in which we are engaged. D. W. Griffin, Clerk.

Advent Herald, please copy.

Religious Notice.

Providence permitting, Elder Edwin Burnham will commence a series of meetings with the Free Evangelical Church in North Attleboro, Mass., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 20th, to continue several weeks. We earnestly hope and pray that many precious souls may, as the result of these meetings, be made ready for a home in the kingdom of God. We invite our friends in the surrounding region to attend and labor with us.

C. Cunningham.

Notice.

The Lord willing, I will answer to calls from different parts of Ohio some time in Feb. next. I will stop and preach an evening or two in intermediate places lying near the W. R. R. from Albany to Buffalo, N. Y., and Buffalo to Cleaveland, Ohio, as may be desired. Brethren thus located, and wishing me to do so, can inform me at Holliston, Mass. H. K. Flagg.

Discussion Resumed.

The discussion between Eld. S. W. Bishop and myself, (which was broken off after the second evening, on account of the sickness and death of my little girl), will be resumed Jan. 4th, 1865, at New Market Hall, Providence, R. I. A. Durfee.

Conference at Lee, N. H.

A conference will commence at Lee, (Union House,) Dec. 18th, and continue as long as may be duty. Bro. C. S. Emerson will be expected; and all who feel like working for the salvation of sinners are invited to attend. Wier Davis.

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session with the church in Danielsonville, Conn., commencing the first Wednesday in January. The friends of Jesus and others are invited to attend. A. C. Greene, Secy.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co., now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. As the new hymn book is not to be published at present, we have contracted with Bro. Himes for the "Christian Lyre," so that we can supply those who want them in Maine at wholesale and retail. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. Wellcome & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit, and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, corner of Causeway and Lowell Streets. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 480. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in Statistical Accounts of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth. The TRACTS are. "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PAST.

Deeply the echoes of the past
Are falling on mine ear,
And joys that have me overcast,
Have vanished with the year.

When thinking, lone and sad, I sigh,
Nor tears forbid to come,
The blighted past is ever nigh
To hush my spirit dumb.

A wanderer on this earthly ball
Was seeking joy and peace;
Lured was he on by fancy's call,
Yet found not happiness.

The waters owned him as a child,
When gales propitious breathed;
Round him the battle, fierce and wild,
In whirling tumult seethed.

The past! the past! I now regret
The idle moments gone;
And tear drops now my cheek may wet,
Nor for the past atone.

The future holds my only hope,
And I'll no longer sigh;
The "resurrection of the just"
I'll love, and wish it nigh.

How long, O Lord! wilt thou remain
Far from thy children dear?
Oh! let us sing the glad refrain,
"Behold, the Bridegroom near!"

Windham, Me. L. F. Cole.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 5.

BASIS OF A PAST MISTAKE.

It is well known that Father Miller, and others, claimed that the "going forth of the commandment," mentioned by Gabriel, was in the seventh of Artaxerxes: then by beginning the 70 weeks, (instead of the 69 weeks), with the "going forth of the commandment," and relying upon a defective chronology, he ended the 70 weeks at the crucifixion, and the 2300 days in 1843. As some honest ones still cling to the seventh of Artaxerxes as the true starting point, and insist that the 2300 days have ended, a word is due upon this point. The true Chronology, as we have seen, locates the seventh of Artaxerxes B. C. 431, from which point 70 weeks of years would carry us to A. D. 60, some 26 years beyond the crucifixion, and end the 2300 days in 1870, instead of 1843 or 1844. Will those who hold this view please examine their theory in the light of the true Chronology?

But the angel did not instruct us to begin the 70 weeks with the "going forth of the commandment," but the 69 weeks.

Others have claimed that the "going forth of the commandment" was in the twentieth of Artaxerxes, which the true Chronology locates B. C. 418; thus the 70 weeks from this date would end in A. D. 83, and the 2300 in 1882, instead of 1847 or 1866. Besides, neither the birth or the crucifixion of Christ can be harmonized with this computation. Let the advocates of this computation more carefully examine Chronology, not in the light of Ptolemy's defective Canon, but in the harmonious light of Bible, history and astronomy. Let us have the truth. But neither the seventh or the twentieth of Artaxerxes can be the period for the "going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem," for Jehovah "saith of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shall be built; and to the Temple, Thy foundation shall be laid," (Isa. 44: 28), and "he shall build my city, and shall let go my captives." (Isa. 45: 13). A part of the prophecy all admit Cyrus did fulfill,—he did "let the captives go"—at the end of the 70 years captivity. Then why not admit that he fulfilled it all, as the Lord said he should? If Cyrus should "build" Jerusalem, and should say to Jerusalem, "Thou shalt be built," we certainly have the "commandment," and the fulfillment of the "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem," confined to Cyrus, the fulfillment of which is mentioned in the first chapter of Ezra.

This commandment was to be enforced by a certain man named Cyrus; now how exceedingly inconsistent to claim the accomplishment of this work by some other man, long after Cyrus was dead!! This puts an irresistable veto to the claims for the seventh and twentieth of Artaxerxes, even if we had not received the true light of Chronology; but with the true Chronology, it totally annihilates all such claims; for 69 weeks of years, or 483 years, from this commandment under Cyrus, just reach Messiah's birth. While this measurement, if commenced in the seventh of Artaxerxes, would reach 52 years beyond the birth of Christ; or, if commenced in the twentieth of Artaxerxes, it would reach 65 years beyond his birth. Then away with all claims for the seventh and twentieth of Artaxerxes, into merited oblivion.

But I may be asked if there was not a commandment given for the building of Jerusalem in the seventh or twentieth of Artaxerxes? I answer, there were grants given for repairing and enlarging the city that Cyrus built, it having been thrown into a dilapidated condition after Cyrus' death. But the only "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem," was at the end of the seventy years captivity, in the first year of the separate reign of Cyrus, B. C. 488; from which point the 69 weeks just reached the birth of the Messiah in the fifth year before the Christian era. The 69 weeks, from this point, reach "UNTO MESSIAH the Prince." Messiah signifies Christ; "We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ." (Jno. 1: 41). When was he recognized as Christ? Some say, not till his baptism. Let inspiration answer: "Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is CHRIST the Lord." (Luke 2: 11). Also, unto Simeon "it was revealed that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ;" (Luke 2: 26) and when he took the infant Savior into his arms, he joyfully exclaimed, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy word." Not only was Jesus the Messiah at his birth, but he was also then "Prince." A prince is one who is destined to reign,—not one who already reigns,—one who is born to be a king. Christ was "born King of the Jews," or born to be a King, and therefore was a "Prince" at his birth.

Although the great movement of 1843–4 did not bring the Lord, but in the stead thereof brought a sad disappointment to the Church, God was in the solemn movement, and it was clearly a matter of prophecy. In the 10th chapter of Revelation, between the sounding of the sixth and seventh trumpets, we have a heavenly messenger brought to view, "clothed with a cloud"—not fully in the light of sacred Chronology—yet radiant with the "rainbow" brilliancy of hope, and the cheering countenance of the "sun," with a "little book" in his hand, already "open," from which he confidently proclaims, on sea and land, "that there shall be time no longer," and gives the "little book" to John, (the representative of the church) and bids him "eat it up," which was first found to be "sweet" to the taste, but when digested, "bitter" with disappointment: but subsequently it is said to John, the representative of the church, "Thou must prophesy again before many peoples," etc. Another great movement on time is to be made by the church.

Do not overlook the Chronology of the symbolic scenery; it is after the sixth angel sounds, and nowhere else. The great Advent movement is the only thing, in that Chronological space of time, that bears the faintest resemblance to the symbol here given and that perfectly fills the picture. Now, "prophesy again." When? Once Daniel was "searching what manner of time" was given to him, reaching to "the sufferings of Christ," and also to "the glory that should follow," and "it was revealed" to him, or rather "UNTO US" through him, (1 Pet. 1: 11, 12), he being one representative; but prior to the time he "understood the thing," he says, "I Daniel was mourning three full weeks." (Dan. 10: 3). Just 21 days were spent by Daniel, our representative, in searching and mourning for the light of the vision, before the true light was given him; so in the antitype, after the vision has been brought to bear upon the mind of the church, and they be led to discover by the passing of time, that they have not understood the vision, they must spend "three full weeks" of years in searching and mourning before receiving the light; and 21 prophetic days, from 1843, carry us to 1864. And now the light is shining all through our ranks, and we "prophesy again." Praise the Lord. This is to be a general movement as we near 1868.

ELDER DANIEL A. JONES.

On the 25th day of June, 1864, Dr. Daniel A. Jones fell asleep at his residence in Danielsonville, West Killingly, Conn., aged thirty years.

He was born in Pleasant Valley, Conn., and enjoyed the counsel and guidance of a godly father and a praying mother; but yet in early life he was full of restless activity and wayward impulse, often resisting the convictions of the Holy Spirit, and striving against the admonitions of his own conscience.

In the winter of 1854, it pleased the Lord to call him by his grace to obedience and faith. The evidence of the truth of God's word as indicated in the fulfillment of prophecy, wrought conviction in his mind, and he believed from the heart that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, and made all haste to prepare for its approach. He came out decided on the side of God and truth. He was as earnest about his religion as he had ever been about his pleasures, or his sins.

In the year 1855, he was married to Miss Emeline Roberts, who had started with him in the heavenly way, and the spirit in which they were joined together may be inferred, when we know that their bridal tour was over the hills a few miles to where Bro. R. J. Whitehead's family lay dangerously sick, and helpless. There, said Bro. W., did Bro. Jones bring his fair young bride, that together they might minister to the distresses and needs of some of God's poor, afflicted people. This was the beginning of their married life. And from that time on they strove to be followers of Him who "went about doing good."

In the year 1855, they removed to Danielsonville, Conn., where he established himself in the practice of dentistry, and speedily acquired a reputation as a skillful and reliable dentist. In association with Bro. Wm. Brown, and others in the vicinity, he labored to establish meetings there, and in due time a church was gathered, which has been a light in the surrounding community. It was during his residence here that my personal acquaintance with him commenced. While struggling with poverty, and debts incurred by the publication of truth to the world, he, learning of my family's self-imposed privations, opened his liberal hand to share the burden, and also to convince us that our heavenly Father knew and pitied all our needs. And since that time I have known him, and known him as a man ready unto all good works. If tracts were to be scattered; the poor were to be aided; if a preacher's exemption from military service was to be purchased, he was one of those men who did not wait to be asked, nor did he wait to see whether others would do their duty before he decided what his duty was and did it.

But while laboring in private, and in the church as he was wont, he felt the voice of God calling him to higher duties. He felt, "Woe is me, if I preach not the gospel of Christ." Confiding his feelings on one occasion to the writer, he was encouraged to move forward in the path of duty, and after many doubts and misgivings, he began to labor publicly in the ministry of the word. And his labor was not in vain in the Lord. Toiling daily with his hands, that he might not be chargeable to any, he preached the gospel in destitute regions, and labored to save the perishing from coming wrath. After laboring thus for some two years, he was ordained to the work of the ministry, in Danielsonville, Ct., 1861.

In the year 1860, he, much to his own temporal disadvantage, left Danielsonville, and removed to Bangor, Me., that he might more effectually preach the gospel in the regions beyond, and sound out the word of the Lord among the people. He remained in Bangor till 1862, when his failing health compelled him to retire to a more favorable climate, and he accordingly returned to Danielsonville once more. He remained here laboring with his hands, preaching as the way opened, and doing good as he had opportunity, until his death.

As a man, he was prompt, quick of judgment, sometimes perhaps too hasty, a lover of honesty, a hater of shams,—high-toned, honorable and generous. In his convictions, he was out-spoken and decided; yet kind and courteous to others. He had his faults, his temptations, his struggles, and his sins, and none knew them better than himself; but the deep purpose of his soul was to glorify God and do his will. His last labor was for the Lord. The Sunday before his death, weak and weary, he started to fill his appointment at Abington, Ct., and though compelled to sit down and rest by the way, yet he accomplished his journey, of some five miles, preached his last sermon, and was brought home to die. He was well aware that his end was near. His disease, malignant jaundice, was doing up its sad work. He made every preparation for the final scene, transacting his little business with composure, leaving everything completed.

In health he had dreaded to die; but as the closing hour drew near, all fear was gone. He knew his own sinfulness and unworthiness, but his trust was all in Christ. In his last hours his theme of wondering love was "the great sacrifice" for sin. He had made a covenant with the Lord, and the sacrificial blood had sealed it forevermore. When speaking on other subjects his voice was weak and faint; but when he spoke of his Redeemer and his sacrifice, it seemed to fill his whole being with new life, and tune his voice as in the days of health.

To his wife he often said, "Emma, I am going to die,—did you know it? Don't feel bad on my account,—yes, yes,—I see it clear as light—I must die." She asked him, "Are you afraid to die?" After a little time he closed his eyes, and folded his arms, and said:

"Jesus hath been there, I dread not its gloom."

He frequently repeated the words:

"Jesus has broken the bars of the tomb,
Safely, safely, his children will come home."

The day before he died he said: "I long to rest, for I shall rest in hope. I want to sleep in Jesus,—want to rest in my Savior. To live is Christ,—to die is gain; for I shall rest. Rest is sweet to the weary." "Do you love Jesus?" said his wife. "O yes, yes." "And Jesus loves you?" He opened his eyes, and with a smile, and in tones of earnest confidence replied, "I have no doubt of it."

On Saturday morning, some eight hours before he died, his faculties were seen to be failing. His wife sat by him, and said, "Do you know your Emma?" "No." "Do you know Jesus?" "Jesus? Yes; know Jesus; know Jesus."

So the earthly ties broke asunder, but the heavenly anchor held fast to that within the veil. These, I think, were his last words; and so amid the tears of loving friends, and the farewells of sad hearts, he pressed his last faint kisses upon the faces of his loved ones, and fell asleep, just as the sun was sinking in the west, June 25th, 1864.

His death was felt as a public calamity. The deep esteem felt by the people was manifested in various ways. The Congregational church was kindly tendered for the funeral, and the large audience room was filled by a sad and sympathizing congregation.

The writer, assisted by Eld. A. Ross and other preaching brethren, conducted the funeral exercises, and delivered a discourse from Acts 8: 2,—"And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him." We sung at the funeral one of his favorite hymns, commencing—

"I shall rest, I shall rest,
When Time's tempests all are o'er."

His brethren in the ministry, Elds. A. Ross, E. Bellows, Wm. A. Fenn, and J. K. Bellows, bore him to his grave. By the side of his resting place we sang:

"I saw a way-worn pilgrim," and then in a few brief remarks Eld. E. Bellows narrated how he met him thus, "wayworn" and "weary," going to preach his last sermon only a few days before; and now all was over, and he was at rest.

So with songs of hope, and cheering words that never fail, we laid him down amid tears and sighs, to rest in the quiet graveyard, close by his fellow laborer, Bro. Brown, whom he had loved so long and so well; and committing his widowed wife and her little boy and girl to the care of Him who is "a father of the fatherless, and a judge of widows," we sadly turned away and left him to his slumbers. May God bring us to meet him, with all those blessed and holy ones who shall have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second death shall have no power.

DEMONISM.

The latter times are upon us, because the "seducing spirits" of 1 Timothy 4 have come.

1. The first CHARACTERISTIC TRAIT by which we recognize the demons of modern "spiritualistic circles" to be identical with the "seducing spirits" of 1 Tim. 4, is, that THEY CAUSE MEN TO DEPART FROM FAITH IN CHRIST.

All who have investigated this subject are aware that, whilst there is much discordancy in the details of their teachings, and not a few contradictions, yet the general tendency is always the same, viz., to discredit or deny the fundamental doctrines of our most holy religion. This they have done everywhere, and at all times, and in the most consistent manner; and the success of their propagandism has been amazing. There are many pious christians, leading secluded lives, who have not yet become aware of this. They hardly know of the existence of "Spiritualism;" or else, have regarded it as one of the whims or follies of the day, as only a ripple on the vast sea of unrighteousness. It has never entered their minds that it is the culminating device of Satan's craft, destined to sweep the world before it. But so it is. The ramifications of "Spiritualism" have already extended to every conceivable direction; have undermined the framework of modern society, and are even now ready to shatter it into fragments. The "Spirstualists" no longer make a secret of it, that their aim is, not only to revolutionize and remodel the whole political, but, more especially, the ecclesiastical fabric of the world. And the demons know that the way to carry out their object successfully is, to remove the safeguard of our most holy faith. Accordingly, they have labored unceasingly for this end, and have set about it in the most cautious and consummately crafty manner.

First of all, finding the world ripe for man-worship, and unceasingly glorifying the human intellect, they have labored to make men believe that man himself is the foundation of truth and virtue; that perfectability is inherent in his constitution; and that nothing has hindered his advancement but the want of a proper "development." The inborn depravity of human nature they totally and on every occasion deny. And much more still, do they insist that the enmity of the carnal heart to God, and its total depravity, are the absurd inventions of the "old church theology." And, having thus paved the way, and having, also, gone into raptures over morality, and sung the praises of virtue and truth, they next proceed to deny the doctrines of the christian religion.

They vary their method, from time to time, as suits the occasion, or the class of men with whom they happen to be engaged. Sometimes they will hypocritically profess to admire the New Testament, and the doctrines of Jesus. As a rare exception, it has even been found that they admit that Jesus is a Savior. But, more commonly, they deny all this in the strongest terms. There is one unfailing test by which they may be known, viz., they invariably become enraged when the merits of Jesus are propounded as the sole ground of salvation. The incarnation of the Son of God, and the redemption of the world by his bloodshedding alone, they at all times deny. This is a simple test, and quite easy to be applied in every town in the land, according to 1 John 4: 1–3.

Furthermore, if they are adjured in the name of Jesus by a true disciple of Christ, they will usually, if not always, speak the truth, and confess themselves to be deceivers.

The general tendency of "spiritualistic" teaching is rankly infidel. The same tone pervades all their numerous publications. And, moreover, a "Spiritualist" newspaper or book has such marked characteristics, that a glance is sufficient to identify it. In the same way as a book on geography can never be mistaken for an arithmetical treatise, nor a work on mathematics for a history of the world, so a book indited by these spirits is instantly recognized as such; as much by its peculiar style as by its subject.

But "Spiritualism" does more. It not only denies the Divine authority of the New Testament in general, and substitutes a hypocritical pretence of virtue and morality, but it specifically denies every doctrine of the christian religion. Our limited space forbids us to go much into detail; but the proof is easy and undeniable, and the facts are within the reach of every one.—Prophetic Times.

TO MRS. HARRIET SLOAN,

On the death of her only daughter, Rosa, aged eight years.

Why should you weep,
For your Rose asleep
More sweetly than ever before?
No sorrow or care
Can follow her there,
Or death gain the victory more.

Although for awhile
You miss her sweet smile,
You know in this life she must weep;
Now her tears are all o'er,
She will smile evermore,
When Jesus shall wake her from sleep.

More pure and more fair
Are the garments she'll wear,
Than earth's children have ever possest;
The song that she sings,
And her glory-gilt wings,
Will be like the angels so blest.

Such a crown as she'll wear,
Such a palm as she'll bear,
No mortal called ever his own;
But bright thornless flowers,
Of Eden's sweet bowers,
Will along her blest pathway be strown.

Then, Rosa, sleep on
Till the morning shall dawn,
When life to the dead shall be given;
Then you will rejoice
To hear Jesus' blest voice
Say, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

A RISEN SAVIOR.

"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

A living Jesus; the hope and consolation of the believer. Jesus died as a representative person, and if he was not raised, death would be the last of those for whom he died (1 Cor. 15, 12–18), and our faith and hope vain.

2. In the text Jesus is presented as having complete victory over death. Death had destroyed man, and the grave had swallowed him up. Jesus has power to open the grave and impart eternal life to as many as the Father has given him. John 17: 2.

The devil is presented by Paul as having power over death. Heb. 2: 14, 15. Jesus, his antagonist, is to destroy him. "Then shall come to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. 15: 54. Thus Christ will destroy what has destroyed man; therefore he is called our Redeemer.

2. In order to accomplish this victory over death and hell (or the grave), he had to do something besides exerting mere power. The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; therefore if the man went into the grave according to law, there must be something done by which he can be brought up by consent of law, in which the righteous government of heaven can maintain its honor, and man be restored on legal terms. So we read in Gal. 4: 4,—"When the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, . . . made under the law, . . . that we might receive the adoption of sons." He was made sin for us. 2 Cor. 5: 21. Then if the wages of sin were death, be death what it may, Jesus must die; and whatever death it was, Jesus must suffer it. The old divines say it was death temporal, death spiritual, and death eternal. If so, Jesus must die all those deaths. Then the language of the text could not be true. For Jesus says, "I . . . am alive again." Therefore the penalty of the law for Adam's sin would only be death,—to die; so reads the Bible. He died, the just for the unjust. As we read the history of the death of man, so we read the history of the death of Christ. The dust returns to the earth as it was, and the spirit returns to God who gave it. Eccl. 12: 7. As Jesus was dying, he said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my hands: and having said this he gave up the ghost." Luke 23: 46. As he died in reality, he was dependent upon a resurrection in order to live again.

3. If Jesus had not been raised again, there would have been no resurrection for us; for if he is not raised, the dead are not raised. 1 Cor. 15. Jesus said, "I . . . . was dead." Yes, He that was dead in reality says, "I am alive forevermore." Amen. Jesus endured the trial in life, and was raised to that immortal and endless life which Adam might have had if he had endured through the days of his trial. Jesus was made perfect through suffering, and crowned with glory and honor as one that won the prize. Life was his by right. Heb. 2: 15. Now he has power on earth to raise the dead and impart eternal life. The gates of hell can not prevail against him, for he has the keys of both death and hell. He has death and all its curses under his feet.

Therefore poor, afflicted saint, thou hast a mighty Redeemer. Death may cut thee off, and the grave swallow thee up; but as surely as Jesus lives, thou shalt live also. Faith in Jesus, that leads to corresponding action, secures a resurrection to that endless life of which Jesus is the sample. Dear, suffering saint, take courage; though thy foes are many, Jesus lives, and soon will come and wipe all tears from thy eyes. Let us all so live that we will be sharers in Christ's victory.

THE INHERITANCE.

"Incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away."

We have many of us been accustomed to suppose that this earth, restored to the original state, as given to Adam, was to be the future abode of Christ and his people. But as those who rre to inherit the new earth will not be restored to Adam's nature, so Adam's earth will never exist again. Peter tells us (2 Pet. 3: 13), "According to his promise we look for NEW heavens and a NEW earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." And God says by Isaiah (65: 17), "Behold I CREATE new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." Peter says (seventh verse of the same chapter), "The heavens and the earth which are now are reserved unto fire and perdition (or destruction) of ungodly men." Also verse tenth, "The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also; and the works that are therein shall be burned up."

From which I infer that this earth will, by the action of fire, die, or be reduced to its original elements, as man is by death; and as those who are to inherit it are sown in corruption and raised in incorruption; sown in dishonor and raised in glory; sown a natural body and raised a spiritual body; so from the ruins of the old earth shall rise a structure infinitely more glorious than the first; and so transcendently fair, that the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.

The new earth to be prepared for Christ and his bride, will be as much more glorious than that prepared for Adam, as the life given to the second Adam was more glorious than that given to the first. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the joys that are laid up for those who love Him. This earth is not so fallen but we can at some times and places form some faint idea of what it must have been at the first; but of the glory of that world, the heart of man can form no conception.

Whereas Eden, though surpassingly lovely, was the centre of the old world, the capital of the new is to be the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, which John saw coming down from God out of heaven (Rev. 21), with its jewelled walls, pearly gates, and street of gold; and, "behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things NEW." Oh! what must it be to be there. And you who read this, will you be there? Have you by faith caught a glimpse of that beautiful city? If so, this world with its business and pleasure, its politics and hollow-hearted religion, its cares and its trials, must appear of little worth. But it is the pure in heart who shall see God. Are we thus? Strive, agonize, to enter in. Are we doing this? He that hath the hope of entering here, and becoming the son of God, (1 John 3: 1), purifieth himself even as He is pure. Are we thus pure in heart and in life? Oh! let us strive, lest a promise being left us of entering in, we should seem to come short of it.

PRAYER MEETINGS YET ALIVE.

Bro. Grant:—One year ago last Wednesday evening our young people established a prayer meeting in this place. Every week during the year they have met together to pray with and for each other. The effect has been glorious. Much good has been done. God has heard prayer. Last spring some were especially blessed, also during the summer much good was done, and this fall three more have joined the praying army. Others are under deep conviction. The good Lord is at work among us, and we will give him all the glory forever.

Three weeks since I went into one of these meetings. I thought if I could always be in as good a place as that it would be good enough. At the close we thought best to hold the last meeting of the year at the meeting house. Accordingly we met last Wednesday evening, and listened to an address delivered by Brother I. H. Shipman, of Sugar Hill, N. H. Text, Prov. 2: 23, 45. The discourse was timely. Much interest was felt. After the discourse there were fifty exhortations given,—many of the songs of Zion were sung, which added much to the interest of the meeting. It was a time long to be remembered by all present. One young man, who had just returned from the army of the U. S., re-enlisted under Christ. Thank the Lord for his goodness!

Brethren, pray for us, that the good work may still continue among us. Yours looking for Jesus very soon, J. A. Cleaveland.

SAVE YOUR INFLUENCE.

Are you a minister of Jesus Christ, and going from place to place, and from house to house? stop that everlasting backbiting, and finding fault with somebody else, and trying to build yourself up on their downfall. Stop sowing discord among brethren, for God hates such. Stop causing division, for you are marked. Stop destroying the peace of those that would enjoy it. When you come, they expect to be fed; they are hungry; they must be fed or grow lean. When you are gone, they see they are worse than before you came. Perhaps you did not pray with them. Did you forget it? or don't you pray? They think less of you than when you came. You are losing your influence. Your coming has only stirred up strife and division, and soon you will be influentially dead. Save your influence.

Are you a lay member of the church of Christ? How is it with you? are you rejoicing in hope? or have you, like Esau, sold your birthright for a mess of pottage? Have you bartered away that charity that "suffereth long and is kind?" or that love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, for a bit of that narrow, contracted bigoted spirit, and now trying to bring everybody to your terms or consign them to perdition? You certainly cannot be the instrument in the hands of God of converting one soul to God. You may proselyte a little, and you may make some "twofold more the child of hell" than yourself; but your influence is dying, it cannot live long. All your efforts will prove abortive; then save your influence. Obtain that charity that never faileth; secure the love of God, which can only be given to us by the Spirit of God. Get that kind of love that the Father bestowed upon us, that will make us the "sons of God," and then we shall be prepared to do good; then, when we visit a neighborhood, or house, our coming to them will be a blessing. In our absence, they will wish us to come again; while on the other hand, they wish us never to darken their door again; at least until we could come bringing the Spirit of Jesus with us. God help us to save our influence by putting on the whole armor of God, and then go forth as christian missionaries, bearing the last and most solemn message to a perishing world.

GOOD ADVICE.

The following hints to preachers, if observed, will prove a valuable help, especially to the young and inexperienced. The first, third, fifth and sixth rules, if not strictly adhered to, will render the best theme dull, the finest composition tiresome, and the best scholars and thinkers bores.

TO PREACHERS.

I have found the following rules to be of much service to myself, and respectfully suggest to my brethren of the ministry the propriety of testing their merits:

1. Resolve to be brief, as this is an age of telegraphs and stenography.
2. Be pointed, never preach all around a text without hitting it.
3. State your position plainly, but do not stop long to particularize.
4. Avoid long introductions, but plunge into your sermon like a swimmer into cold water.
5. Condense; make sure that you have an idea, and then speak it out, in the plainest and shortest terms possible.
6. Avoid all high-flown language; quote no Hebrew or Greek; aim to be a simple preacher.
7. Be honest to own that you do avail yourself of help from any source. But, in using helps, be sure you never make stilts of them when your own legs are better.
8. Expect a Father's blessing; you are his servant, and can do nothing without it.
9. Stop when you're done.—Ex.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

For the World's Crisis.

EATING AND DRINKING.

And "this is for your health."

The study of the laws of health is among the most important that can engage the attention of thinking, responsible beings; and yet how strangely indifferent are the mass of mankind to the great truths therein contained. When we stop to realize how intimately connected with the mental and spiritual is the physical condition of man, we must admit that any perversion in this direction is, to say the least, criminal. There has been a great reform in regard to the use of spirituous beverages, and we have many earnest workers in this cause of reform who give us strong and eloquent appeals all along the way, and who most emphatically answer yes when asked if drunkenness is a great sin in the sight of God; but who quickly fall back in scorn and derision, when questioned as to the sin of gluttony.

I was most forcibly struck the other evening, while listening to a stirring address from one of the most gifted temperance lecturers in the state, by a casual remark which fell from his lips. He was referring to that sentence in "holy writ" which declares "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven;" "you would all be greatly startled," he observed, "were you to find written there, no dyspeptic shall enter the kingdom of heaven:" I knew from his manner, he did not realize the import of his words, (his breath was strong with tobacco) neither had he read his Bible as I have read mine, or he would have known that full as many, and as heavy woes, are pronounced upon the glutton as the wine bibber. Alcohol is doing a fearful work all over the world; we need not stop to enumerate all its direful effects. It is a story oft repeated, but the half is not told; yet, before God, I believe gluttony is doing as great a work of death. But there is comparatively no effort made to bring this subject before the minds of the people. It is not a popular theme, because it hits pretty much every one in the face, and most persons greatly prefer hitting their neighbors, to being hit themselves. For instance, there is one who talks total abstinence from all that intoxicates, wherever he goes, with a filthy quid of tobacco in his mouth, from which issues a sickening odor, and dirty stream, over sidewalk, floor, carpet, and even furniture. "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?"

Another alive to the inconsistency of such preaching, insists that tobacco and brandy are twin sisters, as doubtless they are, both a highly injurious and unnatural stimulant, and no real temperance man can use either, when, alas, he is using daily large quantities of strong tea and coffee, and is in reality as much a slave to his cups (cups of tea) as the drunkard is to his.

A third stands up to point out the gross inconsistency of the two above named, with a diseased, bloated body, and dwarfed intellect. From what cause? The use of intoxicating liquors? No, he is a total abstinence man. It is from over indulgence in eating! "O well, that is no business of ours," says one. It is your business, it is mine, and that of every other lover of humanity. The world is full of these kind of persons. Their children are educated to intemperance from their cradles. Literally crammed with all manner of unhealthy mixtures, which ignorant, thoughtless women can devise, with perverted appetites, and consequently diseased bodies, they drag through life entailing upon their posterity a host of terrible diseases. And in view of all these evils, if some lover of his race attempts to point out these sins, and their remedy, what a hue and cry is at once raised; "fanatic," "extremist," "humbug," "away with him!!"

Men and women are suicidal in their course, so long as they eat too much, too often, and of such qualities of food as are injurious to the system.

It has long been to my mind a matter of vital importance; and I have often wondered how intelligent men, and ministers of the gospel, could thus fail to declare the whole counsel of God. I am glad that a corner of the Crisis is devoted to this subject, but why, I ask, do not more write? God will not hold him guiltless who thus knowingly pollutes the temple he would have kept pure for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. The Bible everywhere denounces intemperance, and from it we have ample proof that in the sight of God intemperance in eating is as sinful as intemperance in drinking. O no! says an objector. Does not alcohol stupify the brain, and render the victim of its use gross and sensual? Yes, certainly; and does not gluttony do all this? Ask the epicure just risen from a hearty dinner of meats, and rich condiments, if he is not totally unfitted for clear reflection; much less anything pertaining to spirituality? When we remember that the stomach is the great reservoir of life, we can scarcely enumerate all the ills that arise from it, when in a diseased state.

Query? Can a christian thus transgress the laws of life, knowingly, and retain a justified state before God? Let us honestly, as in the light of God's countenance, look this truth in the face, and see if indeed we are willing to deny ourselves and take up our cross daily. Paul understood well this natural tendency to over indulgence, when he wrote, "Whether ye EAT or DRINK, or whatsoever ye do, do ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD." He saw the imperative necessity of keeping the body under, and most beautifully did he enforce his teachings by the consistency of his example. Even so must we. It is of little use that we talk self-denial and reform to others, until we ourselves learn to "Be temperate in all things."

THE INDIAN WEED.

The Dean of Carlisle, in a recent lecture on the use of tobacco, calculated that the entire world of smokers, snuffers, and chewers, consume 2,000,000 tons annually, or 4,480,000,000 lbs. weight—as much tonnage as the corn consumed by 10,000.000 of Englishmen, and actually at a cost sufficient to pay for all the bread corn eaten in Great Britain. Five millions and a half of acres are occupied in its growth, chiefly cultivated by slave labor, the produce of which at two pence per pound, would yield thirty-seven millions of pounds sterling. The time would fail to tell of the vast amount of smoking in Turkey and Persia. In India all classes and both sexes indulge in this practice; the Siamese both chew and smoke. In Burmah all ages practice it—children three years old and of both sexes. China equally contributes to the general mania; and the advocates of the habit boast that about one-fourth of the human race are their clients, or that there certainly are 100,000,000 smokers!

It costs more than education or religion, the army or navy. It costs England and America a sum sufficient to support 50,000 ministers with a salary of $1,000; or more than $6,000 for cigars yearly. It tends to idleness, poverty, strong drink, and the whole family of vices. It tends to debility, dyspepsia, palsy, cancers, insanity, delirium tremens, and sudden deaths. It weaves a winding sheet around 20,000 in our land every year! It is estimated that in New York city more than twice the amount is puffed away in cigars than is expended for bread!

Some eighty diseases are traced by Dr. Shaw to the use of this vile narcotic. It injures the health of the body, mind, and soul! The habit is indecent—the example is pernicious on the rising youth. The expenditure is wicked, the gratification of a vitiated appetite. It leads to strong drink. Said a poor Indian: "I want three things; all the rum in the world, all the tobacco, then more rum. I smoke because it makes me love to drink." The use of this poisonous drug blunts the moral sensibilities, grieves the Holy Spirit, hinders prayer. "I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

The excuses for using the dirty tyrant are frequent. One uses it for his teeth; another for his general health; a third for his corpulency; a fourth for his leanness; a fifth for a watery stomach; a sixth to help digestion; another because some ignorant, sottish, wine-bibbing, tobacco-chewing or smoking doctor recommends it:—thus and thus, till the catalogue of excuses and subterfuges is filled out.

It is a matter of devout and hearty thanksgiving to God, that the most respectable, learned, and eminently successful of the medical faculty, with united voice, veto the "accursed thing," warn their patients to lay it aside forever.

"Friend, do not excuse thyself," says the Hon. Gerritt Smith, "by saying that some great and good men use tobacco. The great and good men who do so are in danger of sinking into very little and very wicked men before they die."

Tobacco and Rum—what twin brothers! what mighty agents of Satan! What a large share of the American people they are destroying!

As Paul said to Timothy, so say we to you, "Keep thyself pure." Be clean in your person, and be clean in your heart. But, depend upon it, you can be neither, if you use tobacco.

"Where lurk ye, thou blot on thy race?
Still dwell ye with civilized men?
Why crawl ye not into some desolate place,
The lair of a wolf, or a den
In the clefts of the rocks, in the desert away
From the gaze of mankind and the light of the day?"

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

HYMN.

Awake and sing the song
Of Moses and the Lamb;
Wake every heart and every tongue,
To praise the Savior's name.

Sing of his dying love,
Sing of his rising power,
Sing how he intercedes above
For those whose sins he bore.

Sing on your heavenly way,
You ransomed sinners, sing;
Sing on, rejoicing every day
In Christ the glorious King.

Soon shall you hear him say,
"Ye blessed children, come;"
Soon will he call you hence away,
And take his pilgrims home.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LAST DAYS.

As the period spoken of as the last days, must be viewed in its beginning as connected with the first advent of our blessed Lord, so it must be viewed in its termination as connected with his second advent; and the expression, "the last days," is specially characteristic of the time immediately preceding the termination of the period mentioned as the last times. There has been the spirit of evil and ungodliness during the whole of this time, but it will be specially manifested and fully developed, at the close of the period thus indicated, and immediately preceding the advent of the Lord. It is immediately preceding the advent that Peter says (2 Ep. 3: 3, 4), "There shall come scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for, since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

I pass on, then, to endeavor to describe what the apostle gives as the characteristic feature of this period.

It is plainly stated, that it will be distinguished by the existence of scoffers. Such persons have always existed from the time when righteous Abel was persecuted by his brother. As Ishmael mocked at Isaac, so, during the whole continuance of God's forbearance with ungodly men, the seed of the woman has been persecuted by those that are born after the flesh. And as it was then, even so it is now; all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. But you will observe that the apostle Peter speaks of a peculiar kind of "scoffers, walking after their own lusts;" namely, those who direct their scoffing especially at the doctrine of the Lord's second advent; not merely showing a general dislike to the truths of Revelation, and endeavoring to turn them into ridicule, but especially manifesting that dislike against those truths which speak of the Lord's coming again. They are represented as laughing to scorn the promise of that coming, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

Now we learn from this, that in the last days, just before the Lord's advent, the doctrine of his second coming will excite attention, for even scoffers know of it. How? They are not the persons generally inclined to study the Bible for themselves. That is an insipid and neglected book to them. It would therefore appear, that at the period spoken of, the expectation of the Lord's speedy coming has begun to be more vividly entertained by his waiting people, and to be more earnestly proclaimed. They have come to speak more of it, so that it is made a subject of special attention. No sooner is this the case than the scoffers come forward to ridicule it, and to laugh at it.

The apostle's language shows also, that the expectation of Christ's waiting people has been long unfulfilled. If as soon as they declared that they were waiting for the Lord's coming, and looking upon the announcement of it as a sure portion of revealed truth, the Lord had immediately appeared, there would have been no room for the scoffers, and there would have been nothing to give occasion to their ridicule. That which gives point to their scoffs is, that the believing people of Christ have been long stating that they were expecting Christ's speedy coming in the clouds of heaven, whilst yet he had not come. Yea, some of them, in the warmth of those feelings of desire, which have been kindled within them by looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, our Savior Jesus Christ, have allowed their wishes to go beyond what God's word authorized, and have antedated the period of Christ's coming. They have expected it at a certain definite period, and that period has come, and passed away, and there has been no coming of Christ, such as they looked for. We can account for this. But, ungodly men understand not these things. Hence the occasion of their bitter and sarcastic taunts and revilings at the disappointment of the waiting church, and the seeming delay of the Lord's coming. The longer his coming is delayed, and the more earnestly his people state their expectations of it, the louder are the revilings and taunts of those who say, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

Again, the apostles words seem to show, that, amongst many persons living in the last days, the coming of the Lord will be a subject of special dislike. "There shall arise scoffers, walking after their own lusts." The love of sin is the secret of many a man's infidelity; and the love of sin is the secret of the scoffing of the last scorners. Satan, who rules in the hearts of the children of disobedience, hates the doctrine concerning the Lord's advent; because, when Jesus, who has the kingdoms of this world by right, shall appear, the usurper shall be dethroned, and cast into the bottomless pit, and be allowed, except during one brief interval, to deceive the nations no more. It is not surprising, therefore, that he stirs up in the hearts of the ungodly, hatred to that truth which he himself specially dislikes. Now, when we consider that the ungodly themselves are at enmity with Christ, that they are unprepared to meet him, and yet that they must personally confront him as their present God, can we be surprised that they try to banish from their thoughts that which does but torment them before the time, and that they strive to believe that that will never be, which, if it come, is sure to prove their everlasting ruin?

Further, we learn from the apostle's remark, that the scoffing of the last days will continue, in spite of the warnings of God's ministers and of God's word. It will continue until the day of the Lord comes. For, mark: long delayed as the coming has been, long expected as it has been by his waiting people, long scoffed at as it has been by the ungodly, the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night. Paul says, When men shall say, "Peace and safety," when they shall have quited their consciences on this subject, and quite satisfied themselves that there is no danger, "then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape. 1 Thess. 5: 1—3.

This, then, is the great distinctive feature of the last days,—the existence of those who not only disbelieve the doctrine of the Lord's appearing, but who will not hear of it, who scoff at it, and ridicule it. And it would seem as if God had cast our lot in the very midst of the last days. Were we to examine other passages of Scripture, it would be easy to point out various signs and tokens of the nearness of Christ's coming, which meet and combine in our own day in a way that they have never met or combined before.

What then, is the lesson which we should derive from this? Is it not, for ourselves, that we should flee from the wrath to come, and secure an interest in the great salvation of Christ? and for others, that we should, in all sincerity and earnestness, exhort and entreat all with whom we have to do, to "seek the Lord while he may be found," and to "call upon him while he is near?" Especially should we be admonished to beware of entertaining a scoffing spirit on subjects connected with the Lord's second advent. Scoffers will abound in the last days, and scoffers are in the highest form of the devil's school. Truths connected with the Lord's advent, appearing, and kingdom, are too serious to be spoken of lightly, or to be rejected thoughtlessly. I therefore beseech you, reader, even though you do not receive all that the christian ministers may think it their duty to state concerning the premillennial advent of our Lord Jesus,—though you may not be able to agree with all these statements,—yet, do not scoff at them, do not ridicule them: examine them, rather; bring them to the test of God's word; pray for the teaching of the Holy Ghost; seek to weigh them in the balances of the sanctuary; and let the result of your reading and hearing of such truths or statements be at least, to lead you to prepare for the coming of the day of God, be it near, or be it distant. You cannot be wrong in thus preparing for the coming of Christ; and you cannot be right if you sit down in the chair of the scorner, and swell the torrent of obloquy and reproach cast upon such statements as these.—Prophetic Times.

THE DECALOGUE.

"Are the ten commandments obligatory, under the new covenant?" "Are the old and new covenants based on the law of the ten commandments?"

These are questions that I frequently meet with and questions that are asked by honest christians who desire to know the truth. To such, and to those who esteem the word of God above the opinions of men, I will say a few words, that you may know what the only infallible word says on the questions under consideration. Let us look at the words of Him who has not shunned to declare unto us the whole counsel of God. 2 Cor. 3: 7. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory* was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious." Here we learn that whatever it was that the apostle speaks of as being written on stones, was to be done away. We find by reading the account of the giving of the law, that it must be the ten commandments that were written on stones. (Deut. 10: 2.) But, says the objector, the law of God is holy, and good; it is perfect, converting the soul (Psalm 19: 7.) Well, I never heard any one deny that the law of God would convert the soul. But I do deny that the ten commandments will convert the soul. What says the word of the Lord? Gal. 2: 21,—"I do not frustrate the grace of God; for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain." Gal. 3: 21. For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." Now if the ten commandments could convert the soul, they could have given life For we read in Jas. 5: 20, "Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Taking that ground, the legitimate conclusion that we should come to, would be this:—There was a law given that could give life; and consequently Christ is dead in vain. Is there any one that wants to take this position? As a word to the wise is sufficient, I will pass to notice the second question.

"Are the old and new covenants based on the law of ten commandments?" The people that teach this doctrine, tell us that the commandments are of themselves a covenant; and then say that the old covenant is based on them. Does it look reasonable that a covenant can be founded on a covenant? And again, they say that all the difference there is in the two covenants is that the new covenant is written in the heart, and not on stones. Does it look reasonable that the ten commandments can constitute the new covenant, and still the new covenant be based on the same? Without pursuing this absurdity any further, it will be seen that we look in vain for harmony in this direction.

Let us consult the inspired word. What says Paul? Heb. 8: 6,—"But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, established on better promises." Here inspiration settles the long controverted point. And we learn first, both covenants were established on promises." Second, that the new covenant is established on "better promises." Are the ten commandments promises? The answer is obvious. This makes the matter plain. A covenant is an agreement; and so we read in Gen. 9: 12 "And God said, This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature that is with you." And 17: 2,—"And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly." Let us take the word of the Lord, and draw our water from the fountain of truth.

For the World's Crisis.

"SKY KINGDOM."

Since my last criticism upon Mr. Thurman's book I have matured nothing of importance respecting it. My queries about this, that, and the other point have not ripened for pen work. But there is a passage in page 219 which tempts me "from grave to gay," and I will indulge the pleasant humor.

A calculation is made respecting the number of mansions which the New Jerusalem might furnish according to the account of its dimensions as given in the received text of Rev. 21: 16, which makes the length, breadth and height of the city twelve thousand furlongs each. Says Mr. T.: "If, leaving one half for those golden streets, which are as 'transparent glass,' we divide the remaining portion of the city into rooms 16 feet square, and the same in height, it would contain 68,643,687,500,000,000 rooms; therefore our Lord could well say: 'In my Father's house are many mansions.'" He adds an estimate of 288,144,000,000 for all the people who have ever lived on earth, and finds that the unoccupied rooms would immensely out number the inhabitants of the world for 6000 years.

I do not quarrel with those figures. They are fairly done, and fairly deduced from King James' English of the divine word. Yet they give rise to curious thoughts and speculations. I am no rationalist. But if the city is not actually divided into so many rooms, which Mr. T. does not say and probably does not believe, still one will ask what can be the use of so much spare room if the city is really built so high.

He who makes a supposition is like one who takes a seat in an English or French railway car. One can not leave the train at pleasure, but stands committed—or sits "committed"—to go as far as the ticket will carry. So any supposition is open to be tried by any deduction that can be made from it.

Thus, for a petty criticism, I find that while half of the city is allowed for streets, not a foot is allowed for stair-way. But no architect would think of a house even two stories high without a suitable flight of stairs. But here we are treated to buildings 495,000 stories high, and unless the higher rooms are left useless, their occupants must either stay in them, or reach the golden pavement as best they can.

Some one may say there is no need of stairs, for the saints will have wings like the angels, and they can fly up and down at pleasure. And some other one may ask if there is not good Scripture for this. "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?"

Well, I have no antipathy against wings, but dearly love those pictures of cherubs with children's faces and heavenly plumage. Indeed, my happiest dreams are of flying. And if the wings are ever offered, I am the last that shall refuse them a fair trial.

But I have one misgiving. There can be no flying without air, any more than one can breathe without air. The best lungs and the best wings are equally useless beyond the limits of an atmosphere. And there is a pretty unanimous verdict among philosophers, specially including the astronomers, that our atmosphere is only about 45 miles high. If this is true, then either a new and large supply of air must be furnished with the descent of the city; or, the existing atmosphere must be heaped around it, leaving the rest of the globe uninhabitable; or, about 480,690 of the higher stories, in Mr. T.'s programme of the city, must be without the means either of flying or of breathing. They may not be "beyond the bounds of time and space." But they would be as inaccessible as that poetic region, so far as science now informs us; and they would be as comfortless if we could even reach them.

And even if all these difficulties are surmounted, and if we are introduced to those uppermost rooms by wings or by some other kind of flight, and there to breathe or not to breathe, still the whole thing has an air of high speculation. I see little to choose between it and the "sky kingdom" to which the readers of the Crisis are so little partial. The highest clouds soar only to about one fifth the height of the atmosphere; its surface, then, is beyond "cloud-land" four times over; and the highest story, in the scheme under consideration, would be more than thirty times as far from terra firma as that.

There are still other difficulties which I will not urge. But so many and weighty are they all that they have led some good men to doubt if the Greek text was not at fault. Indeed, the very next verse speaks of the "wall" as measuring only 144 cubits, or something over 200 feet. This can not be the length of the wall. It is not said to be its thickness. The most natural question respecting the wall of a city is of its height. It is certainly no very rash conjecture of Granville Penn, when he thinks the true text would read thus: "And he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs; the length and the breadth of it are equal. And he measured the height of the wall thereof, a hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel." This reading, according to the present state of science,—which may hold good for spiritual bodies we know not how far,—would be both more human and more humane.

For the World's Crisis.

THE MERCHANT MAN.

"Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls; who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had and bought it."—MATT. 13: 45-46.

Who is the merchant man? The popular theory of the day teaches us that he is the sinner seeking after religion; who, when he finds it, "sells all transitory enjoyment," forsakes his sins, makes sacrifice of all earthly pleasures, and purchases it. My mind, however, runs in a different channel.

1. The kingdom of heaven is like a merchant man. Now, if the kingdom of heaven is like a merchant man, and that merchant man is the sinner, there must be a resemblance between the kingdom of heaven and the sinner, which is absurd. But it should be remembered that the word here rendered kingdom is, in other places, rendered king, and would be more properly rendered thus in this place: "The king of heaven, (i. e., the Redeemer,) is like a merchant man seeking goodly pearls." "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Man's inheritance was lost, —had gone into the hands of the adversary; and God, moved with compassion, sent his only begotten Son to redeem man and his inheritance, and bring them back in submission to the divine arrangements of the Creator.

The only Son of the true and living God looked down from the shining courts of everlasting bliss, and saw the deplorable condition of the offspring of Adam, doomed to the dark shades of eternal night. With love unfeigned, he left the glory of his Father's courts, and graced the pathway to earth, where he sold all he had, even his last drop of blood, to purchase the salvation of man, which was the pearl of greatest price. Yes, dear reader, he died the ignominious death upon the cross, that you and I might live.

"O! for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break!"

And let all the hosts of heaven break forth in anthems of praise for such unbounded love as this. And may we appreciate such love, and seek an interest in the inheritance redeemed by a Savior's blood, that when Eden shall again bloom in her primitive beauty, we may be admitted to participate in those joys.

Yours in hope of eternal life in the everlasting kingdom of God. J. W. SAWYER.

For the World's Crisis.

THE SABBATH—"NEW AND OLD."

First.—The "old" began at the close, and formed the crown of the old creation.—Gen. 2: 1–3.

The Sabbath was sanctioned and enforced on Israel at their coming out from their Egyptian bondage. Ex. 16: 22–30; 20: 8–11; 31: 12–17. God made it a sign between himself and them—a memorial of his perpetual covenant with them, as the chosen seed of Abraham, "his friend."

No ordinance was so guarded, so enforced, or made the ground of so many promises for its observance, or penalties for its violation. Lev. 26: 43; Isa. 58: 13–14. Like marriage it was a primary institution, in the primeval and paradisaic state of man, made in the image of his Almighty Maker! It has survived the fall of man—been re-ordained in the law, and inscribed by the finger of God on the "tables of stone"—the basis of the old covenant.

Second. The new (new to me till now) applies to the precise days appropriated for the seventh day Sabbath, consequently through the Jewish year; and the order of their commencement and the condition of their succession in the sacred calendar.

Please read Lev. 23: 4–21. The Passover was fixed on the fourteenth day of the first month—the day of full moon in that month. The fifteenth, or day following the Passover sacrifice, was the first of the seven days of unleavened bread. The sixteenth was the day for offering the sheaf of the first fruits. This was God's order. I ask, was it not God's only and unvarying order on this point? Note. The Sabbaths, the weekly Sabbath days through the year, were made dependent on the Passover and its two consecutive days in every year. Thus Lev. 23: 15–18; Deut. 16: 9. "From the morrow after the Sabbath; from the day ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering, seven Sabbaths shall be complete. Even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days"—to Pentecost.

Again. "Ye shall bring a sheaf of the first of your harvest to the priest; and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord; on the morrow after the Sabbath shall the priest wave it." Lev. 23: 11. In Deut. 16: 9,—"Seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee; begin to number the seven weeks from such time as thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn." Thus these points seem to have been clearly settled by the very words of "the law of God."

1st. That the first day of unleavened bread was a "Sabbath day"—the fifteenth day Nisan, (the Passover having been sacrificed the fourteenth.)

2d. That on "the morrow after" that "Sabbath" they were to offer the wave sheaf—"the first fruits"—on the fifteenth.

3d. That thence they were to "count seven Sabbaths complete"—forty-nine days; and that "the morrow after" the seventh Sabbath was the day of Pentecost—the fiftieth day.

4th. That this order that God gave in his law, was sustained by the Lord Jesus at the opening of the gospel age. His resurrection took place on the first day of the week, "the morrow after the Sabbath"; and thence "seven Sabbaths complete" reached to the Pentecost —the fiftieth day thereafter. Acts 2.

There may be no need to show that "the rest (Sabbatism) that remaineth," is to be the antitype of Sabbatic institution.

"The conclusion of the whole matter" is, that as these "seven Sabbaths complete" were dependent on the variable "time of the Passover," which varied with the moon's changes in different years; therefore the sacredness, the solemnity and sanctions given by God to "the Sabbath day," depended not on the day itself, but on the divine appointment. Just as it was with the passover, the day of atonement, and the jubilee. These all vary with the moon's changes.

Note. As Sabbatarians disregard this law of God as to the primary order and succession of the regular Sabbath days—nay, more, as they do not even attempt to "obey the law" in observing the Sabbath (by "offering two lambs of the first year," etc.), they are and must be mistaken in their views of the whole subject. "The Son of man is LORD, even of the Sabbath day." And we may all say amen, and act accordingly.

"FEED MY LAMBS."

"Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."—ACTS 20: 28.

I feel like falling on my face in gratitude to the Good Shepherd that he is graciously pleased to honor me with a crumb for his lambs, whom he has promised to carry in his bosom. May he increase it as he did the five loaves and the two small fishes to the feeding of thousands, with twelve baskets of fragments. Without this we could only exclaim, What are these among so many? Praise his name! our sufficiency is of him.

The crumb that I have to present is this: "HAVE FAITH IN GOD,"—the words of the Good Shepherd himself. How they come to strengthen my own faith this morning! And may they cause the heart of many a little lamb to leap for joy in God, as well as my own.

Have faith in God. Be bold enough to believe God, and obey him in the face and eyes of all opposition. As a brother said to me to-day, while dining,

"Did you ever think what a presumptuous man Abraham was?"

"Yes," said I, "he had presumption enough to go right out on God's simple word—'Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee,' not knowing where he was going!"

I wonder if some of his friends and neighbors did not think him a little fanatical! Then that he should die without inheriting so much of this land as to set his foot on! What a triumph to unbelief! "We told him so," no doubt many exclaimed, as they heard how he was wandering about in tents, having no home for his family and his beautiful wife. How foolish not to stay at home, like all his forefathers, and enjoy himself, and let his family take some comfort, like other men much better than himself have always done. How strange that some people like to be odd from every body else!

This was our father Abraham. Now, dear lambs, dare you follow in his footsteps? Then there was Lot took such a strange notion: just because two strange men came to his house one night and told him that they were going to destroy the city in which he lived, he was foolish enough to believe them, and went out the next morning, when every thing was just as quiet as ever it was, and woke up his sons-in-law, and said to them, "Up, get you out of this place; for the Lord will destroy this city." But he seemed like one beside himself to his sons-in-law. No doubt their wives were ashamed of their father to hear him talk so wild, and that he should be so credulous as to put confidence in those strange men that no one knew.

So Lot returned with a faint heart to his home, where he lingered until the men laid hold on him, and on his wife, and on his two daughters, and hurried them out; but one even of this little group of four was left on the way; and when Lot and his two daughters, the only ones of that whole city who escaped, entered into Zoar, the sun had risen as beautifully and as calmly upon Sodom as ever before. What a time here for shame for Lot. My dear lambs of the flock, can you go and do likewise?

Then again the christians fleeing from Jerusalem, the only stronghold in all the country, which was then invaded by a desolating army, simply because the Lord had told them to do it. And they were to go without household stuff or the garment in the field—make themselves homeless wanderers in the mountains, just because Jesus told them to do it.

Are you prepared thus to obey Jesus, ye lambs of his flock? Faith always calls us to do what sight would not do. Just the very thing that the "wise and prudent" would not do, is the thing which faith calls us to do. Are you prepared for the sacrifice? Did you ever think why Jesus was not born in the high priest's palace? This, above all other places, would have been the one to introduce him favorably to the Jews. The reason is very obvious. Had he come in this way they would not have received him by FAITH, and this Scripture would have been broken—"BUT THE JUST SHALL LIVE BY FAITH."

"Now faith is a confidence of things hoped for, a conviction of things unseen."—Sharpe's Trans. And so important is faith, it is impossible to please God without it. For "he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Now, beloved lambs of the flock, will you believe this? And when you seek the Lord with all your hearts, and yet do not see any results, but only seeming defeat, will you believe that there are results?

"'Tis in this way, the Lord replied,
I answer prayer for grace and faith;
These inmost trials I employ,
From pride and self to set thee free;
Break all thy schemes of earthly joy,
That thou mayst seek thine all in me."

For the World's Crisis.

GENTLE HINTS.

"O how I wish I could do something for the cause of God; but, alas! I have but one small talent, and as for money, I have none, and what can I, a poor unlettered one, do to advance so momentous a cause?"

In the first place, you can pray; and fervent prayer is the key which unlocks heaven; it is the heart and lungs of the church. A human being is just as well without these organs as a church without prayer.

Secondly, you can almost always attend public worship, by putting forth a little exertion; and really, from the warm-hearted exclamation with which you commenced, I conclude you desire to "let every nerve and sinew tell for God." If you work hard, your neighbors know it; and when they see you walking one, two, three miles, or more, every Lord's day to meet with "those of like precious faith," don't you think it has an influence upon them? I am of the opinion that it may cause your ungodly neighbors to think deeply sometimes, when they see you pass so statedly, even in inclement weather. Then, when you arrive at the house of God, your personal presence not only gladdens and strengthens the hearts of the church, but prepares your minister to preach a better sermon. Yes, he certainly does preach better for your being there. When he enters the house, and sees your seat vacant, his heart sinks within him, and he almost involuntary soliloquizes thus:—"I have prayed, and labored hard to get something to feed the sheep, but their absence proves they are not sufficiently interested to help build up the church; and then it is such an excellent time and place for his Satanic Majesty to suggest inability for such a calling, etc.; no marvel if he improves it. And do you think a minister can preach as well with a heart thus made heavy, as when the personal presence of his people say, we appreciate your labors? But our minister is a man strong in faith,—gets his message right from God, therefore circumstances will not change it.

But list. Did not Isaac expect to pronounce a PROPHETIC blessing on his son? And did he not expect circumstances would help him perform the same? Why did he direct that son to go out and hunt certain choice venison, and then prepare it in a manner pleasing to his appetite, in order to prepare him to pronounce such a blessing? (Gen. 27th Chap.) Many facts in Scripture show us that circumstances do affect men of God, strong in faith. It is true, they will try to do the best they can under all circumstances; but can a man who is half sick work as well as one in perfect health? The fact is, delinquencies at the house of God makes a minister heart sick. Depend upon it your steady personal presence in the house of God does much to advance the cause, especially if you sit up in a proper manner, and pay good attention, without whispering, or unnecessarily turning a book, or otherwise disturbing the congregation.

Why, the minister sent by God seldom preaches much over one hour; and can you not, as a general thing, prepare yourself to sit up, and listen with becoming attention to the gospel you so highly recommend in words, for one hour? Only two hours in a week, or two out of 188, that you listen to the gospel, and shall not that be done in the most proper manner? If we who profess to love God, and wait for his Son from heaven, whisper unnecessarily, what can be said to those who make no such profession? If we habitually lay down our head and appear weary of the exercises of the house of God, what does it argue to the unconverted? If nature should oblige us to yawn, will we not raise our handkerchief to our mouth, and do it as secretly and quietly as possible; instead of stretching our mouth wide as possible, and breathing out "ho-ho-hum" sufficiently loud to annoy a dozen or more who happen to be sitting near us? If we cannot do without a quid of tobacco in our mouth for one hour and a half while we worship, but chew and thus besmear the house of God in a manner sickening to any cleanly person, does it not say we are more strongly attached to a filthy weed than to the worship of Jehovah? Really there is much truth in the old adage, that "Actions speak louder than words." Brethren and sisters, will we not heed the command to "Abstain from all appearance of evil?" Do not these things have a decided appearance of evil?

Then if we do earnestly desire to advance the cause of God with our one talent, and limited means, let us be willing to deny self, receive a rebuke proffered in all kindness and good will, and say with David,—"Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil which shall not break my head."

"WHICH DIES? THE LAW, OR THE SINNER?"

We will give a few extracts from Dr. Clarke's comments on this subject. On the last clause of the first verse of Rom. 7: 1, he says,

"'As long as he liveth,' or as long as IT liveth; law does not extend its influence to the dead, nor do abrogated laws bind. It is all the same whether we understand these words as speaking of a law abrogated, so that it cannot command; or of its objects being dead, so that it has none to bind. In either case the law has no force."

We did not consult Dr. Clarke on this point till this hour; and therefore were quite ignorant of the fact that we were so perfectly in agreement when we wrote our article, "IS IT SO? ARE WE STILL UNDER THE LAW?"

For brevity, we pass over his comments touching marriage, in the second and third verses, and give his views on the fourth verse.

"'Wherefore, my brethren.' This is a parallel case. You were once under the law of Moses, and were bound by its injunctions; but now ye are become dead to the law, a modest, inoffensive mode of speech, for the law which was once your husband, is dead; God has determined that it shall no longer be in force; so that now, as a woman whose husband is dead is freed from the law of that husband, or from her conjugal vow, and may legally be married to another; so God, who gave the law under which ye have hitherto lived, designed that it should be in force only till the advent of the Messiah. That advent has taken place; the law has, consequently, ceased; and now you are called to take on you the yoke of the gospel, and lay down the yoke of the law; and this is the design of God, that you should do so. 'That ye should be married to another . . . who is raised from the dead.' As Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, the object of God in giving the law was to unite you to Christ; and as he has died, he has not only abolished that law which condemns every transgressor to death without any hope of a revival, but he has also made that atonement for sin by his own death, which is represented by the sacrifices prescribed by the law. And as Jesus Christ is risen again from the dead, he has thereby given the fullest proof that, by his death, he has procured the resurrection of mankind, and made that atonement required by the law."

Ver. 6. 'But now we are delivered from the law.' "We who have believed in Jesus Christ are delivered from the yoke by which we were bound, which sentenced every transgressor to perdition, but provided no pardon even for the penitent, and no sanctification for those who are weary of their inbred corruptions. 'That being dead wherein we were held.' To us, believers in Christ, this commandment is abrogated; we are transferred to another constitution; that law which kills, ceases to bind us; it is dead to us who have believed in Jesus Christ, who is the end of the law for justification and salvation to every one that believes."

Ver. 7. 'Is the law sin?' "The apostle had said, ver. 5, 'the motions of sin, which were by the law, did . . . bring forth fruit unto death'; and now he anticipates an objection. Is therefore 'the law sin?' To which he answers as usual, By no means. Law is only the means of disclosing this sinful propensity, not of producing it: as a bright beam of the sun introduced into a room, shows millions of motes, which appear to be dancing in all directions; but these were not introduced by the light, they were there before; only there was not light enough to make it manifest; so the evil propensity was there before, but there was not light sufficient to discover it. 'By the law is the knowledge of sin.'"

We think the justness of these comments must be conceded by all. The whole tenor of the apostle's argument, touching this question, goes to prove that the law is abrogated, "and we are transferred to another constitution." Our forefathers were once under the constitution of England, and a monarchial government. Many of its laws were good, excellent, and well adapted to that system of goverment. But the pilgrim fathers were in bondage under that dominion. To obtain liberty, they emigrated to this land. Here, after a severe struggle, they acquired their independence from English law, and framed a new constitution, and laws for the government of this new colony. Some of these laws were like those of the former constitution, under which they were once held. But this new constitution is established upon a far better basis, one of freedom. Now who believes that the Puritans considered themselves under any obligation to be in subjection, or obedience, to that code of laws under which they had been formerly living? Was not their allegiance transferred to another constitution entirely, so that they paid no more regard to the former code than though it had never existed? And in respect to such laws as were like those of the previous constitution, did they obey these because they belonged to England's code, or to that of the United States? Did they argue, think you, because a part of these laws were in harmony with the old, that therefore they were under obligation to keep every law of the former constitution? Nay, verily! When the independence of the United States was declared, our pilgrim fathers then knew that their yoke of bondage was broken, and that they were no longer subjects of England, and bound by her laws, but were now to be enrolled under a new charter, and observers of better laws, established on a broader basis.

Believers in Christ have been transferred to another constitution, brought entirely out from the Sinaic code, and their names are enrolled under quite a different charter. Their freedom in Christ has been declared from heaven, the throne of God; and the word to them now is, "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage."

THE NEW WHEEL WITH ONE BROKEN SPOKE.

A HINT AS TO THURMAN'S CHRONOLOGY.

BRO. GRANT:—I have, for some years, been a believer in the Savior's soon coming; and the opposition of the churches and the popular clergy to the doctrine, has had but little effect on my mind. But when I read the papers, and see how men who profess to believe in the speedy advent of Christ, differ in opinion, I am sometimes almost confounded. It seems to me that some who write for the Crisis, and publish books for the people, are not aware what an influence they have upon the minds of the people by differing so much in opinion.

There are some in this place who, with me, are looking for the Savior. There are others who are almost persuaded to believe the doctrine. They have read the Crisis, also books and tracts on the subject, and have lately been reading Thurman's work, and were quite interested. But when they see other intelligent and learned men coming out against it, they are somewhat stumbled, and are almost ready to give up the whole thing.

I once met a Methodist minister on the road, who had bought a new wagon just before, and as I sat in my carriage looking at it, I discovered that a spoke was broken out of one of the wheels. I mentioned it to the brother. He smiled, and said that people took more notice of that broken spoke than they did of all the rest of the wagon. And, from that, he preached me a sermon that I have never forgotten. He said that people would watch each other, and if they detected any thing wrong, they would say more about that than they would about all the good deeds they ever performed. I have often thought of it, and proved his words true many times.

So it is with books. Though they may be right in the main, yet if people can detect any little errors in them, or anything that they think is an error, they will take more pains to bring that before the world, than they will all the truth there may be in them. Would it not be better to acknowledge the truths, as well as to publish the errors?

My occupation is farming, and I have long since learned that a small team will do more, if they pull together, than a large team pulling all over the lot.

"Well," says one, "that French don't know much." I don't profess to know much, but I have been looking for a long time to find somebody that does know something. The Bible says, in the time of the end, the wise shall understand. It looks to me as though we had been living in the time of the end long enough for somebody to be wise enough to understand something about the "sealed book," if they are ever going to. May the Lord give us all wisdom to understand his word aright.

Norway, Me. M. O. FRENCH.

For the World's Crisis.

BROTHER, PLEASE EXPLAIN.

I am aware that those looking for the soon coming of the Lord feel like separating themselves from all connections with earthly governments; that is, not having any thing to do with making laws, or enforcing the same, farther than to pay all obligations arising from the fact that they may owe tribute; if so, then render to "Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's."

I am aware, also, that in view of holding these principles our people are non-combatants; and yet, to be undecided in our own minds as regards the great principles at stake in the present contest, would be impossible. We have a choice; we have sympathies; and they are with freedom and those God-given rights so nobly declared in the declaration of the independence of this nation; and I pity the man who professes to be a child of God, and is not in harmony with and loving these principles. But I find that some of our brethren are so earnest in declaring their non-combatant principles, that they sometimes forget that every human government must be sustained by the sword (though they have no right to take the sword), and condemn men that take the sword to sustain their own government; and forgetting to explain sufficiently their non-combatant principles; and forgetting at the same time to condemn the instigators in this contest, they make a wholesale condemnation of all parties, and are taken at once to be rebels against the government, and their influence is gone, and if regained it must be by a long explanation of what they mean by non-combatant principles.

Now, Bro., I think we ought to be careful how we talk, these times, and save our influence; and if we talk out our non-combatant principles, let it be understood that, while we feel that we have no right to take the sword, yet our sympathies are with those God-given principles bequeathed to us by the founders of this government; and that we are willing, so far as conscience will allow, to stand by the same. I am a non-combatant; but after all, my sympathies are with the right, and against rebellion. I can't help it, and God forbid that I should; and so far as I can go conscientiously in the sight of heaven, and with the present truth, I am bound as a christian to sustain the right; and I have no doubt that all those looking for the soon coming of Jesus will say, Amen. Then, Bro., let us be careful. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Permit me, very respectfully, to inform your Ladyship that I have not taken any steps to connect myself with the Episcopal Church, that I never was imbued with any such intention, that I never said to any one that I expected so to do, that I never was in an Episcopal pulpit, and never imagine I shall be; that I never made the acquaintance of more than five Episcopal clergymen in all my life; that although some six years ago, one Episcopal gentleman, worth $100,000, urged me to take holy orders for a rectorship, I politely declined; and that I do neither intend, nor dream of ever joining the Episcopalians, having no love or taste for their forms and orders or mode of worship. Madam, will this disclaimer answer you? "Whose mouths must be stopped." Titus 1: 10, 11. I wonder if any power but the "King of Terrors" will ever be able to stop your mouth! LOWELL.

Our meetings in Lowell, Mass., held from Dec. 4th to 11th, were seasons of refreshing from the Lord. The congregations were large, attentive and intelligent. For many years, we have not seen the prospect look so encouraging in that city as at the present time. Our meetings were held in Wyman's Hall, which will seat about four hundred, and is a pleasant room. At some of our meetings many stood up, and others went away because they could not find standing room.

During our meetings, we had quite a battle with the Spiritualists, who have a strong hold in the city. The truth of the Lord exposed some of their dark corners, and made error look horridly. Some of the demon worshipers were very much stirred up, and felt felt like crying out, as in Paul's day, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Many questions were asked, which served to make the truth look brighter. The demons and their followers have great hatred against the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, for it strikes a death blow to their whole system, as it does to all other false religions. Thank the Lord God for an armor that quenches "all the fiery darts of the wicked." It is good fighting.

There are some faithful, tried souls in Lowell, who love the way of life. In storms and tempests they have stood by the cause of Christ, and feel determined to endure to the end. Several requested prayers, and were blessed. Our love-feast on the morning of the 11th was a heavenly season. The testimonies were earnest, and came bursting forth from overflowing hearts. Tears of joy spoke of the deep feelings im their bosoms. Some who had been for years on the christian pilgrimage, said they never felt such peace, joy and love before. The light and truth are spreading. Many new ones are becoming deeply interested in the blessed hope. In the evening we had a heavenly communion season, while some sixty sat around the table of the Lord. His Spirit rested upon us. We all felt encouraged to press forward in the christian warfare till the Prince of Peace comes to put down all opposition, and set up his heavenly kingdom.

QUOTING SCRIPTURE.

It always grieves us to see a misquotation of Scripture. When we pretend to give the word of the Lord to prove a point, let us be particular not to add to it, or take from it.

We have often called the attention of our contributors to the subject. And again we wish to urge them to never write a passage of Scripture without first turning to it in the Bible, and then be sure and write it word for word as it is in the book. And if you wish to leave out a part of the verse, or some verses, be particular to put three or four periods where anything is omitted; thus,—"Come unto me, ... and I will give you rest." Matt. 11: 28.

Another point we would impress upon those who write for others to read: always quote the Scripture referred to, as but few will take the trouble to look out the passages. But few have their Bibles at hand when they read the paper; or, if they have, they will not stop to hunt up the texts mentioned. If you expect to make an impression on the mind of the reader, write out in full all the Scripture you wish to have read in connection with your article. In this fast age people want things right at hand, where they can see them at once.

Every one who searches the Scriptures should have Cruden's Condensed Concordance. No family should be without one. All who have not a copy, will do well to deny themselves of some selfish gratification till they have saved money enough to buy one. All tea and coffee drinkers, tobacco users, and those who eat rich food, can do this in a short time, besides reaping a rich physical benefit, if they will only let them for ever alone.

FAIRS AND FESTIVALS.

It is enough to make one's heart bleed, when he looks at the low standard of religion in our world. No wonder men are turning infidel by the thousand. They see but little evidence of a pure christianity about them, and this leads them to think the whole system is only one of priestly contrivance to keep up a party, and get a living. No two words, we think, are more applicable to these days, than those of Paul in 2 Tim. 5: 1, when speaking of "the last days," he describes them by calling them "perilous times."

If there should be a revival in these days and the youth become the humble followers of Jesus, they are soon drawn back into the world again by the examples of those who profess to be Christians. They are not taught by precept and example too, that they must come out from the world and be "separate," but almost the entire practice of the mass of professors is calculated to lead them into forbidden paths; and then Satan uses them to help on his own cause; for none are used by him to better advantage than are backsliders.

The following is one mode by which thousands are led astray:—

"Remember the Fair and Festival, by the ladies of the —— Methodist church, at —— Halls, this evening. Hall's band of Boston is engaged for the occasion. An extensive Fair table of useful and fancy articles, various amusements, such as shooting gallery, fishing pond, money battery; also the war-worn battle flags of the 2d, 6th, 9th, 11th, 16th, 26th, 33d regiments, and 7th battery, will present an entertainment of unusual interest. In —— Hall, the folks of olden time, a country school of fifty years ago, and a Quaker wedding, in full costume and exact form, will be presented each evening. Refreshment tables will be bountifully supplied. Oysters and ice creams will also be served. Tickets 25 cents. Extra horse cars leave the Hall (both directions) at 9,50 P. M., 10 1-2, 11, and 11-12. Please procure your car tickets to save delay."

The foregoing would not have been tolerated in the early days of Methodism. While writing this line, one who was familiar with the facts remarked, "They got a good deal of money, and had a jolly time. They had to pay twenty-five cents for admission, ten cents to see the 'old folks,' ten cents to see the 'country school,' ten cents to see the 'Quaker Wedding,' and ten cents for every time they put a hook in the 'fishing pond.'" Can it be possible that our Savior wishes to have money obtained in such a way to help on his cause? But we are told "the church is in debt." But when the church was poor it kept out of debt; how is it that the more it has of this world's goods, the more it gets into debt; and the more fairs, festivals, picnics, tea meetings, etc., etc., need to be held to get out of debt? Something must be wrong. When we look at the pride and extravagance we cease to wonder at the results. A thousand Wesleys are needed, and as many Luthers to awake nominal christendom from its perilous position. Who will help sound the alarm?

AHASUERUS.

Who was Ahasuerus, the husband of Esther, and king of Persia, who was persuaded by Haman to issue a decree to kill all the Jews? His name does not occur in the profane history of the kings of Persia, hence it becomes necessary to identify the Ahasuerus of the Bible with some one of the kings of Persia, before we can compare sacred and profane history together. This point has become one of new interest since the appearance of Bro. Thurman's chronology, inasmuch as he dates the beginning of the 2300 days and seventy weeks of Daniel from the twelvth year of the reign of Ahasuerus, when he issued the decree to kill all the Jews in his hundred and twenty-seven provinces.

Archbishop Usher entertained the opinion that Darius Hystaspes was this Ahasuerus, and that Vashti,—the queen, and wife of Ahasuerus,—was Atossa; and that Artystona was the Esther mentioned in the Bible. But, according to Herodotus, Artystona was the daughter of Cyrus, as well as Atossa, and hence could not have been Esther, for the latter was a Jewess, and not a Persian. And, besides, as Artystona was the daughter of Cyrus, if she had been born the last year of Cyrus' life, she must have been about three-score years of age, if living at the time Ahasuerus became the husband of Esther. But Esther was among the "fair young virgins sought for the king" Ahasuerus, which could not be said of a woman about sixty years of age. Atossa had four sons by Darius, besides daughters, who were born to him after he became king; consequently she could not have been the Vashti whom Ahasuerus divorced in the third year of his reign. In addition to all this positive evidence against the position of Usher, that Darius Hastaspes was the Ahasuerus who irrvocably divorced his queen Vashti, whom he assumes to be Atossa, the daughter of Cyrus, Herodotus says "Atossa had unbounded influence" over Darius, even to the time of his death, and was instrumental in persuading him to appoint Xerxes as his successor; hence she could not have been divorced in the third year of his reign.

Joseph Scaliger, and some others, claim that Xerxes was the Ahasuerus mentioned in the Book of Esther, instead of his son Artaxerxes Longimanus; and that Amestris, his queen, was Esther. This cannot be; for, according to Herodotus, Xerxes had by Amestris a son who was married in the seventh year of his father's reign (Herod. B. 9, S. 108). Hence Amestris, the wife of Xerxes, could not have been Esther, who was not married till the seventh year of her husband's reign.

It is said there is some resemblance between the names of Xerxes and Ahasuerus; but no more, we think, than between many other names of different individuals.

Again, those who endeavor to make out that Xerxes was the Ahasuerus of Scripture, bring the following for proof: "In the third year of his reign," Ahasuerus "gave a grand feast to his nobles, which lasted one hundred and eighty days" (Esther 1: 3); and Xerxes "in his third year, also assembled his chief officers to deliberate on the invasion of Greece (Herod. vii. 8)." "Again, Ahasuerus married Esther at Shushan, in the seventh year of his reign: in the same year of his reign, Xerxes returned to Susa with the mortification of his defeat, and sought to forget himself in pleasure."—Kitto. Once more: It is claimed by those who would make Xerxes to be Ahasuerus, that it is not probable that Artaxerxes Longimanus would be friendly to the Jews in the seventh year of his reign, and then be persuaded in his twelvth year to issue such a decree as was brought about by Haman.

Such is the evidence presented to prove that Artaxerxes was not the Ahasuerus who was the husband of Esther. To our mind the arguments are very weak. The fact that Ahasuerus made a great feast in the third year of his reign, and married a wife in his seventh; and that Xerxes "assembled his chief officers" "in his third year" "to deliberate on the invasion of Greece," and in his seventh year "returned to Susa with the mortification of his defeat, and sought to forget himself in pleasure," is hardly sufficient to prove they are both the same individual. And in relation to the objection urged, that it is not probable that Artaxerxes should change his mind in five years from friendship to enmity against the Jews; we would barely remark, we think men have often been changed from friends to enemies in much less time than that.

We now turn to a brief presentation of the evidence that Ahasuerus, the husband of Esther, was Artaxerxes Longimanus, the son of Xerxes.

In the "History of the World," by John Frost, LLD., on p. 153, he says:—"The eastern writers deny to Xerxes the honor of having ever ruled the Persians, and make Artaxerxes to have ascended the throne immediately after the decease of his grandfather." His "favorite lady was a Jewess. After reigning, according to Persian writers, an hundred and twelve years, he died." Taylor, in his "Manual of Ancient History," p. 66, says:—"Xerxes is unknown by name to the oriental historians." For this reason, some may have confounded the acts of the two.

Prideaux, when speaking of Artaxerxes Longimanus, says:—"In Scripture he hath the name of Ahasuerus, as well as that of Artaxerxes, and was the same who had Esther for his queen."—Prid. vol. 1, p. 221.

Josephus says:—"After the death of Xerxes, the kingdom came to be transferred to his son Cyrus, whom the Greeks call Artaxerxes. . . . In the third year of his reign he made a costly feast for his friends, and for the nations of Persia, and for their governors. . . . In like manner did Vashti, the queen, gather her guests together and made them a feast in the palace." He then proceeds to give an account of the divorce of Vashti, the wife of Artaxerxes, and his marriage to Esther.

In the Septuagint Scriptures, wherever the word Ahasuerus occurs in the book of Esther, it is rendered Artaxerxes; and the apocryphal additions to the book of Esther invariably call her husband Artaxerxes. Indeed, we see no room to doubt this conclusion.

SPREAD OF SPIRITUALISM.

Some, who are not posted in facts, think that Spiritualism is losing ground. We might as well say the Mississippi river was losing ground because it makes less noise near its mouth than it does away up near its source, when tumbling among the rocks. Spiritualism has become like the mighty Amazon, too broad and deep to be stopped by any human efforts. It is sweeping thousands from their former christian moorings downward to perdition. Its surface may seem calm, but there is a tremendous undertow in its current that is overthrowing some of the strongest men.

In an address of Judge Edmonds, delivered at Lamartine Hall, New York, Nov. 17th, 1861, and published in the Banner of Light, Nov. 30, 1861, he says of Spiritualism:—

"The belief is not confined to the United States—it is spreading all over the world. I have received within a day or two, a letter from Calcutta, which gives evidence of its progress there. These manifestations have gone throughout mankind everywhere, and are ever of the same general character. . . .

A revelation has been made to mankind for the first time, of what is to be his future condition. Another great point gained is the demonstration, by evidence addressed alike to our senses and our reason, of the fact of our immortality. Hitherto it has been assumed to be revealed to us through Jesus—that is, the general truth was taken as revealed, and philosophers have gone abroad in search of reasons to establish it, because so few would receive it from revelation only. It was necessary it should be proved; and, until these manifestations came, there was no proof, except to the abstract understanding.

All the world has to do is to establish that one single human being has lived beyond the grave."

CAN DEMONS FORETELL EVENTS?

Some have been led to believe that the demons, or familiar spirits, can foretell coming events; and yet their warmest friends are compelled to admit that they make some great blunders. Those most familiar with them know that their prophecies are nearly as uncertain as those of men; only there is this difference: the demons have more extended knowledge of human affairs than have men, and consequently can give earlier information of distant events, than can be obtained by ordinary means; but they have no power to foresee. They can only judge from passing events, and the opinions of men, as to what will take place next, excepting what light they get from the Scriptures. They well know that the Bible is true, and what is therein revealed must be accomplished; and they know from what is fulfilled that we are near the end of the present dispensation; and that for this reason the remaining portion must soon transpire.

A spirit speaking through Mrs. Laura Cuppy, in the Lyceum Hall, Boston, Nov. 8, 1863, as reported in the Banner of Light, Nov. 21, 1863, said:—

"We would say here that the power of foreseeing future events is limited in all cases, and is limited by certain conditions. We see certain causes, and see the effects which will be the natural result of those causes; but something may interpose to change the whole course of events. After the battle of Solferino, who would have anticipated peace as the next movement? The spirits who discerned the mind of the leading powers, could have foretold it; because, perceiving what was in the minds of those individuals, they could see what their purposes would lead to, if carried out; but some unforeseen event might have occurred to change the whole result of those purposes. We occupy higher ground than yourselves, and can see much that you cannot see; but we can only anticipate results just so far as we can penetrate through causes to effects, and the intentions of leaders; and when some event occurs for which we were not prepared, which we and they could not foresee, our predictions may be at fault. We ask you, therefore, to take our utterances for what they are worth, and no more. We are not able to give you positive intelligence; but can give you the probable results of certain purposes."

The spirits are compelled to make the foregoing acknowledgement, in view of well known facts. The Lord challenges them to foretell future events. He says, "Let them bring forth, and show us what shall happen; let them show the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come. Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods."—Isa. 41: 22-23.

LIGHT WANTED.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you, or some other one of the many able writers for the Crisis, please answer the following questions, and greatly oblige the inquirer?

I. Do not the 2300 days, in Dan. 8: 14, cover or measure, a space of time during which the "sanctuary and host are trodden under foot?" See ver. 13th.

II. Are the seventy weeks in Dan. 9: 24 a part of the 2300 days? and if so, is it correct to commence those days at a decree "to restore and to build that which should be trodden down during the time specified? or in other words, if the numbers measure the space from the treading down to the cleansing of the sanctuary, ought not the time to be reckoned from the time when the sanctuary began to be trodden down, instead of the time when a decree is made "to restore and to build" it?

These questions are based on the assumption that the temple, or Jerusalem, or both, are intended by the term "sanctuary." But if it is claimed, as held by Bro. Miller and others, that the earth is the sanctuary; did not the earth begin to be trodden down many centuries before the decree "to restore and to build Jerusalem" went forth? and does not the same, or quite as serious a difficulty, present itself when we attempt to commence the 2300 days upon this hypothesis?

III. Is the time of trouble, spoken of in Dan. 11: 1, identical with the "great tribulation" predicted by the Savior in Matt. 24: 21, as claimed by many? and if so, how comes it to pass that the one is caused by the standing up of Michael, and the other by the "abomination of desolation?"

IV. If the great tribulation is upon the christian church, and that commenced in the sixth century, what special application could it have to the country of Judea, more than to any other portion of the earth, where the gospel had been preached and disciples had been raised up? See Matt 24: 16-22, Mark 13: 14-19, Luke 21: 20-24.

V. What record have we of any very severe and extensive persecution against the christian church in Judea, in, or after the sixth century? and finally, what has been the state and condition of christianity in that country since the sixth century.

If you will answer the above queries, I shall be glad. I may have a few more at some future time, if you don't get tired of it. If you do, say so, and I will stop.

Mohegan, R. I. A. DURFFE.

1. We understand that the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14, are given to mark the length of the period covered by the events of the entire vision, beginning at the time when Daniel "saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward." We do not see that the scripture requires that the treading down of "the sanctuary and the host" should begin at the commencement of the vision; but the treading down of "the sanctuary and the host" are to transpire in the course of the accomplishment of what Daniel saw in the vision. In other words, we think the vision covers a period longer than the time the sanctuary is trodden under foot by the Gentiles.

2. We believe the "seventy weeks" are a part of the 2300 days, commencing at the same time.

It does not look consistent to begin the "seventy weeks" at a "commandment to restore and build Jerusafem," if their commencement was to mark the time when the sanctuary began "to be trodden under foot;" but, as before stated, we do not understand that the beginning of the "seventy weeks" and the 2300 days, mark the commencement of the treading down of the sanctuary, but the beginning of the vision.

We understand that "the sanctuary" which should "be trodden under foot," or "trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," (Luke 21, 24) is the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, where Adam lived in the garden of Eden, which will be "cleansed" at the coming of Christ, and made new, preparatory for possession by the saints.

3. We do not think the "time of trouble" mentioned in Dan. 12: 1, is the same as the "great tribulation" spoken of in Matt. 24: 21; for it appears that the "time of trouble" is caused by the standing up of Michael, which is evidently not till the coming of the Son of man. We think the "trouble" mentioned in Daniel will come upon the wicked; whereas, the "great tribulation" we believe to be already in the past; and that the sun was darkened "immediately after."

4. We do not see evidence to believe that since the sixth century, or even before that time, the tribulation was confined to the land of Judea, more than other countries, whether it was upon the Christian or Jewish church.

5. We do not know of any record to show that since the sixth century there has been any more severe persecution in Judea than in many other places. When speaking of the events in A. D. 532, Bower says:—

"While the Arian king was striving, by the most just and equitable laws, to clear the church from all simony in the west, the Catholic Emperor [Justinian] was employing the most unjust and unchristian means of clearing her from all heresies in the east, that of persecutuion, and the most cruel persecution any christian emperor had yet set on foot, or countenanced. For by an edict which he issued to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or christians, such as did not, in the term of three months, embrace and profess the Catholic faith, were declared infamous; and, as such, excluded from all employments, both civil and military; rendered incapable of leaving any thing by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. These were convincing arguments of the truth of the Catholic faith; but many, however, withstood them; and against such as did, the imperial edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their habitations with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Others betook themselves to flight, carrying with them what they could conceal for their support and maintainance; but they were plundered of the little they had, and many of them inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasants who guarded the passes. . . . The Jews, who were very numerous in Samaria, openly revolted; and, ranging themselves under the banner of one Julian, a noted robber, whom they chose for their king and their leader, engaged the imperial troops in the field; but after a most obstinate and bloody dispute, were utterly defeated, with the loss, if Procopius is to be credited, of one thousand men."—Bower's History of the Popes, Vol. 1, p. 334.

CLEAN LIPS.

We clipped the following from the Christian Messenger published in Halifax, N. S. It is an extract from an article published by a minister, and worthy of a candid consideration by all who wish to be clean physically and morally. When speaking of the article, he says he wrote it "with many tears." In conclusion he says:—

"And now I have one solemn word of warning to add. There are plenty of professors of religion who still use tobacco, and plenty of ministers who do so. God forbid that I should unchristian them. But say it in all seriousness and sadness, I know of no truly spiritually-minded minister who uses tobacco. Oh my brethren, suffer the word of exhortation. There is such a thing as heavenly-mindedness. Such a thing as living in the Spirit, and walking in the Spirit. Such a thing as communion with God. The 'Lord God of Elijah' still lives. But our hands and our lips must be clean, and our consciences undefiled or he will not dwell with us."

We would most kindly and earnestly urge all who are in the habit of using tobacco in any form, to go before the Lord in prayer, and ask him for aid to break off from the habit now and forever, resolving, in his strength, never to use it any more. We have known several who had used it for many years, who have adopted this course, and had their appetite for the poisonous weed all taken away at the time, so that they have never hankered after it since. But few who use it are aware of its injurious effects upon them, both morally and physically. Let us have "clean lips."

VOICES FROM THE POOR.

FROM THE LAME.

I have had the paper free from its commencement. I should not know how to do without it. It cheers my poor heart in my lonely hours to read the letters from the brothers and sisters of like precious faith. I have not been able to walk for twenty years, during which time I have been unable to work, and have lived mostly on charity. But I have been cheered with the hope of Christ's soon coming. It is my all. You have my sincere thanks for the paper thus far, and if you think that I have had it long enough, and that some one else would be more benefitted by it, do as you think best, but I shall keep pressing onward till I gain the prize. GEORGE.

——, Mass.

FROM THE DEAF.

I am a poor man, and have no money to pay for the paper any longer. I have always tried to be honest, and don't like to be in debt. I like the paper, and think it the best religious paper in the country. I am deaf, and have been for seventeen years; all things are therefore still to me. I hear no gospel preaching, and have not for seventeen years. I feel sorry that I have to give up your paper, but it will be better than to run in debt for it. I have worked hard to get my living, and hope the Lord will supply all my wants. I wish that I could still have your blessed paper to cheer my lonely hours, but I cannot expect you to send them for nothing. S.

——, Maine.

FROM THE MAIMED.

I received your bill, and am sorry that I have not the money to send you. I broke my arm the 5th of June, and have not been able to do much since. I have a large family to support. I should like the paper very much, and will pay you as soon as I can. S.

——, Mass.

Minnesota Free List.

It is proposed that the churches and brethren, in each town and county, do what they can to supply their own poor with the Crisis for the coming year. Will the brethren in the following places take the matter in hand, and see what they can do?

Cleveland	1	Northfield	2
Garden City	1	St. Charles	1
Minneapolis	1	Saratoga	1
Monticello	1	Utica	1

A CORRECTION.—Sr. L. P. Hastings, of Morenci, Mich., was spoken of in a late Crisis as "a former free subscriber." The letters referred to seemed to imply this, and hence we supposed it was so; but upon examination we find it is not so marked on our books. She is a paying subscriber; and, although for some time in arrears, has now paid in advance. Sr. H. will receive this as our apology for the mistake.

For the World's Crisis.

A WARNING FROM CELESTA.

BRO. GRANT:—From a firm sense of duty to my God, and my brethren and sisters scattered abroad in the land, let me through the Crisis say to all, Do not be in haste to come to Celesta until you hear more particulars through the Crisis and other papers. I have been here over three months, but intend to leave soon. Six persons have left since I came here, and probably some ten more will leave as soon as they can get away, including nearly all here from abroad. Brethren and sisters, beware of another gospel. With true christian regard, S. L. MANLEY.

BOOK NOTICE.

HEAVEN, EARTH, AND HELL: A Poem of the Past and Future. By Rev. Charles Neaseld, M. A., Vicar of Stratton St. Margaret, Wilts. 31 pp. 12mo. London, 1862.

More than a year ago we received a copy of a "Confessio Fidei Reformata," from the author of the above Poem, done in elegant Latin, with its profession of hope for immortality through Christ alone as plain and explicit as Latin could make it. The readers of that short lived paper, The Restitution, had, we trust, a little benefit of it. We were informed by Mr. Dobney that Mr. N. was likely to make some answer for his heresy, if other disputes within the Church of England had not become more engrossing.

A little persevering effort has lately brought us a copy of the Poem. Its title sounds terribly orthodox, just because that third name in the list of localities has become a synonym of all that is neither good nor transient. We have heard of an orthodox preacher who thought it hardly polite to use the Scriptural title for the bad place, even in preaching.

The bard utters his verse in too classic style, at the outset, to win the popular ear. But when he comes to speak his mind on the grave question that men are now asking, he talks as plain English as need be. He asks:

And is an immortality of woe
The debt which mortal men to justice owe?
Is this the penal sentence of that law
Which shakes intelligence with trembling awe?
Can ages after ages, without end,
Thousands of centuries their course extend,
And thousands without number roll in vain
To close or mitigate the sinner's pain?—
Millions of souls in earth's last fire be doomed
To live and mourn forever unconsumed?
Are those undying worms and quenchless flames
The torments of imperishable frames?
Tremendous thought! which who can bear to trace?
Infinite evil to the human race!
For still the way which multitudes pursue
Is broad; the narrow path is found by few:
And this was known to that all-seeing Mind,
Who first in His own image made mankind,
Parent of Good, Almighty. By what fate
Can evil thus o'er good predominate
Even in the final issues of His work?
Some error, sure, in this belief must lurk,
However hallowed by tradition old,
Whoe'er have taught it, or whoever hold;
Unless we read it in the holy page,
Which man may not amend from age to age—
To read and search, our rightful heritage.
But is the sentence written there so plain
That none who mark may err, or mark in vain,
Without the heretic's or sceptic's crime?
No: witnesses have risen in every time,
Whose eyes could in both covenants discern
Far other justice, other wisdom learn,
Nor ask the ken of Origen to show,
Through fiery trial in the gulf below,
A glimmering hope of heavenly rest from woe.
Yea, before Origen have martyrs read
A middle way for judgment on the dead:
Thus didst thou witness, philosophic saint,
Justin unblamed! without heretic taint;
And thus did Irenæus, prelate blest,
What he had early heard and read attest;
Arnobius, too, the same belief confessed:
And what if haply learned clerks should find
Great Athanasius of the self-same mind?
Of truth "the nearer to the spring we go,
More limpid, more unsoiled the waters flow."
Erewhile the knowledge-loving soul of Locke
Saw Christian faith thus based upon a rock;
And of our prelates, chief among a few,
This vantage mighty Warburton could view.

But when o'er-jealous eyes their vigils keep,
And minds too fearful resolutely sleep,
Unfriended truth must oft in silence weep,
While several laws and popular esteem
For Holy Writ put some Platonic dream.
Yet of the truth let modesty disclaim
The infallible monopoly we blame:
A privilege we covet not absurd,
Granted in turn, to search the written Word,
Tell what we read, and patiently be heard;
So that a modicum the task pursue
Of needful knowledge, and of reverence due;
Nor every theological opiner,
Loud village oracle, or town diviner,
Boast with prophetic seal a call to speak,
Who little dreams of Latin, less of Greek,
And knows of Hebrew nothing but the name;
As if from heaven the word in English came,
And his own ignorance could never err,
Of highest lore high-souled interpreter;
Not weighing, as incapable to see
"Which doctrine, this or that, may best agree
With the whole tenor of the work divine,
And plainest point to Heaven's revealed design."

Are, then, undying worms and quenchless flames,
Eternal fire and punishment, but names?
Or frightful metaphors of mystic law,
Meant but to keep the multitude in awe?
No: these ambiguous threats the Book explains,
In places manifold, of mortal pains,
Perpetual sorrows during forfeit lives,
And fearful final death which nought survives;
In these dread sufferings, not with life agreeing,
Is menaced death of intellectual being.
This, this is death, in hell to perish whole,
Sin's wages, dire destruction of the soul:
The body's death is but the mystic sleep
Of nature: bosomed in a viewless deep,
The soul remains now naked of the clay,
Known, if unknowing, till the judgment day,
To wake and rise new-bodied at that call
Whose power commands, creates, and quickens all:
Sudden, in order, is the voice obeyed,
And life or death from sovereign will conveyed.

Pp. 13-16.

Evil is not immortal; death may work
In life; in death life endless can not lurk.
See the Life-giver's victory unalloyed;
All power of foes, death's empire, all made void;
The last destroying enemy destroyed;
Evil departing, good in triumph crowned,
Good infinite, salvation without bound:
No more of final, but not endless, pains:
Joy everlasting, joy alone remains,
And Love Divine o'er all, felt and immediate reigns.
Thus is that sayipg better understood,
"All partial evil universal good:"
For present good leaves evil past behind,
Scarce more remembered than the passing wind;
And no proportion (the results compare)
This finite to that infinite can bear.

P. 20.

In the following passage the poet alludes to the evils we are now suffering, without naming the cause of them:

Pray that all nations, tempested, may rest,
Under one universal empire blest;
Engines of war, now grown gigantic, cease,
And arts and arms obey the Prince of Peace;
No rivers more with blood impurpled flow,
For Indus, Danube, Seine, or classic Po;
Nor Transatlantic brethren many waters
And grounds make impious with fraternal slaughters,
Leaving to children's children long regret
Of madness found in tribute-bearing debt:
O Liberty! did thy directing hand
Sow dragon's teeth in thine own spacious land?
Such iron crop unhoped so soon to yield,
And bring such bloody harvest of the field?

Pp. 28, 29.

Here is his picture of the Reign of Peace:

One law shall spread o'er all the race of man,
From Chili's heights wide-circling to Japan;
One faith o'er Afric's burning wilds bear sway,
One Austral meads and Greenland snows obey.
But oh! what woes on earth may yet arise!
What wars, what struggles, what apostasies!
How may the nations madly rush to arms,
Ere conquering faith diffuse her peaceful charms!
Soon may heaven's kingdom o'er all kingdoms come,
And land and sea be made one Christendom!
When peace hath had her sublunary reign,
Soon may the just behold a new domain,
Whence sorrow shall depart, with sin and death and pain!

How long, O Lord, how long?

C. F. H.

PRAYER.—When a pump is frequently used, but little pains are necessary to have water; the pump pours out at the first stroke, because the water is high. But if the pump has not been used for a long time, the water gets low; and when you want it, you must pump it a long while, and the water only comes after great efforts. It is so with prayer. If we are instant in prayer, every little circumstance awakens the disposition to pray, and desires and words are always ready; but if we neglect prayer, it is difficult for us to pray; for the water in the well gets low.

CHLOE.

I trust those of our readers who have not read the touching story of "Chloe Lankton," will not delay to secure a copy of her book. It ought to be placed in every Sunday School library. "The Lord's prisoner" on a bed of pain and anguish for more than thirty years! Can we realize the strength and grace needed for such a warfare? She seems to be an exemplification of what God's grace CAN accomplish in the most adverse outward circumstances. How extensive the influence that has emanated from the humble chamber of this chastened child of God, eternity alone will reveal. Who would not be of the number of those who "do what they can," both in word and deed, to smooth the rough path of her pilgrimage to that land where the inhabitant shall no more say, "I am sick"?

TO "CHLOE."

His loving kindness changeth not,
Who chose for thee thy painful lot;
Though called a heavy cross to bear,
A crown of glory soon thou'lt wear.
A lonely orphan bowed with grief,
No human hand can give relief,
Jesus thy thorny pillow smoothes,
And every secret sorrow soothes;
His love the patient sufferer cheers,
Until the morning light appears
Oh yes, there's "light beyond the clouds,"
The eye of Faith e'en now unshrouds
Thy mission-work—no narrow sphere,
Chloe is loved both far and near;
And should'st thou tarry till He come,
Thy Lord himself will take thee home.
Rich fruits of sorrow then appear,—
"Well done"—the plaudit thou shalt hear;
Blissful thy rest, thou wearied one,
Fervent thy prayer,—"Come Savior, come."

Correspondence.

From Sr. Hill.

Pen cannot portray the feelings of my heart in praise and thankfulness to our God for his enduring mercy to the children of men. I feel that I want to give you a little history of the Lord's doings in this place.

The church here had been in a sleeping condition, two or three years, until about fifteen months ago, when the spirit of the Lord directed brother O. D. Woodruff here to preach the soon coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The result was, the church was aroused, sinners converted, backsliders reclaimed, and in the past summer, nineteen souls were buried with Christ in baptism, myself with the rest; and I do feel to praise and thank the Lord that I have had the light that has converted me to the Second Advent faith. Again I say, praise the Lord.

Before I was converted to the Advent faith, I was a Spiritualist, which I should be now, if I believed in immortal-soulism; but thank the Lord, I am free from the snare of Satan in that respect. Oh how foolish the idea of people being alive when dead. I often wonder how so many can believe in inherent immortality, when the Bible says nothing about it. It is because there are so many blind leaders leading the blind. Thanks be to God, some are getting their eyes open, through the preaching of the Adventists. Last Sabbath Bro. Hiram Munger preached in the Advent Chapel in this place. His discourse was on the first principles of Christianity, which was very instructive. There were one hundred and fourteen hearers, and all, as far as I have heard, were pleased with the discourse. Why was it? Because it was the truth from God's word. And Bro. Grant, I do feel it would do a great deal of good for the more experienced ministers of the gospel to go out into the highways and hedges. We have have had good practical preachers here, but I do feel that we need some doctrinal preachers to come here also; and if it is not asking too much, I will invite you to come and preach to us once, if no more.

When I read in the Crisis, or look at your photograph, which I have, I often exclaim, "I wish I could hear Bro. Grant preach." I cannot hold out much inducement to bring you here, for we are few in number; but we are strong in the faith. I do feel the Lord would reward you, if you should come here, for we are longing for more substantial food.

Your sister in Christ, MRS. E. HILL.
Wallingford, Ct.

From Bro. G. A. Strooter.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you one more new subscriber for three months. I have adopted this plan in new places, and when they get it and read it three months, they want it longer. It is prized very highly wherever I go.

Bro. Grant:—The battle goes well. Victory is turning on Zion's side. Thank God. The truth is gaining ground, especially the great truth, called life and deatth; and the coming of our Lord the second time. Let us, Brn., keep these grand truths up before the minds of the people. They are needed in these times. We are almost home. Our warfare is nearly over. A few more battles, a few more struggles; a little more persecution, a few more journeyings, over hills, through valleys, in heat and cold, in wet and dry; a few more meetings and partings with the dear children, and then we will meet to part no more. Glory to God, I'm bound to see the end of the race, let it cost what it will. It will be good when we all get home. Glory to God. Pray for me. GEO. A. STREETER.
No. Dana, Mass,

From Bro. Wm. Roworth.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been very much interested in Bro. Thurman's work, notwithstanding some think he is mistaken in some of his points. I feel satisfied his view of the sixty-nine weeks "unto Messiah the Prince" is correct. I am glad the brethren are waking up on the subject of time; and I think the wise will understand; for so the angel declares. I think it is right all the evidence should be presented. The great fault with some brethren has been, they have been too positive, and have even fixed the day; such a course does harm. My prayer is that the Lord may bless the presentation of the evidence; and oh! let us be found watching for the event. Your Bro., looking for the coming kingdom, WM. ROWORTH.
New York, 354 Pearl Street.

Bro. A. Dole.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to say through the Crisis to the brethren, sisters and friends of Bro. Adinus Dole, that he has been confined to his house about a year, unable to work. A short time since, he was attacked with bleeding of the lungs, which has reduced him very low. It is not probable he will live many months. Bro. Dole formerly lived in Conn. If any one who knew and loved him, and his family, would esteem it a privilege to lend to the Lord, I would say in their behalf it would be thankfully received.

Bro. Dole's address is 29 Van Schaick's Street.

IRA YOUNG.

Suddenly killed, Nov. 22nd, 1864, by the falling of a tree which crushed in his skull, Bro. Ira Young, of Wardsboro, Vt., aged fifty-four years.

Thus one terrible, fatal blow, given without a moment's warning, has deprived society of an excellent and honorable member, Wardsboro of almost the only professing male Adventist, the church of God of a faithful christian brother, a heart-broken wife of an indulgent and affectionate husband. He was the first man I ever knew in that town, fifteen years ago, who was looking for our Lord; and while time and change, removal and death, had sadly diminished the numbers since 1849, he stood bravely up for the doctrine, still praying, waiting, and his house the constant pilgrim's home. For him we have no fears or doubts—let him sleep—his waking is sure—then cometh immortality—Amen!

But for her who has laid away in death all her five children, and now sits solitary and alone, a widow at her board and altar; O who shall administer comfort? God pity thee in thy desolateness, in thy afflictions of body, and in all thy loneliness and woe. Our words are too feeble,—our arms too short. Jesus be thy Friend, our sister. He can. He will save and bless. Brethren in the ministry, ye who traverse the mountains proclaiming His coming, you will miss Bro. Young from the pleasant cottage. But it may be that less than four years will bring him back from Hades to die no more. I incline to believe it.

Bro. Young was buried Nov. 25th. Sermon by Rev. Mr. Howard, of the M. E. church. Text, Amos 4: 12,—"Prepare to meet thy God." Yes, prepare. "For the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised." "After death the JUDGMENT." Dear brother Ira Young; Hail, and Farewell! D. T. TAYLOR.

TO MY SISTER SOPHIA.

Sweet sister, thou hast deeply felt
Thy Heavenly Father's chast'ning rod,
As one by one the blows were dealt
That laid thy loved ones neath the sod;
Through tribulations dark and deep,
Compelled to press thy weary way,
In sorrow and in woe to weep
Through the long and lonesome day.

Five sons are snatched from thy embrace,
And nought is left save here and there
Fond memories of each darling face,
And golden locks of shining hair.
Now from thy side another torn,
Thy husband,—constant, tried, and true,
And to the parting grave is born
Without one parting word "adieu."

If from those closed lids and eyes
One last fond word and look were given;
'Twould soothe thy heavy heaving sighs,
And light thy path to joy and heaven.
Cut from the cold and marble brow,
Looking so peaceful, pure, and fair,
One treasured gem, and thou hast now
An added lock of dark brown hair.

Prepared to meet thy God in peace,
Thy work well done—now take thy rest;
Sleep, brother—thine a sweet release,
Sleep on to wake among the blest.
We'll miss the coming of those feet,
That led us to thy mountain home;
Thy loving smile no more will greet,
As weary, worn, and sad we come.

We'll miss the fervent, earnest prayer,
Oft as we humbly kneel to pray
With one who sits in sorrow there,
And weeps the leaden hours away:
With throbbing brow and aching heart,
Alone to tread life's vale of tears,
No loved ones nigh to share thy part,
Or cheer thee through the lonely years.

Alone! and yet not all alone,
To face the storms of life below;
Thy Savior from his starry throne,
Doth pity all thy pain and woe.
What if no farewell words were spoken?
It is thy loving Father's will
That earthly ties should thus be broken,—
Ah! bid thy sorrowing "heart be still,"

Turn from the graves of buried love,—
Check thy sad spirit's sorrowing sigh;
Look up to Him who rules above,
And wait His coming from the sky.
Thy lost ones all shall come again,
To greet thee on a brighter shore,
Where sickness, sorrow, death and pain,
Shall smite thy broken heart no more.

Rouses Point, Dec. 1864. AUGUSTA.

N. F. HODGES.

Died in Sandwich, N. H., Dec. 4th, of consumption, Nellie Frances Hodges, only daughter of Benjamin B. and Mary A. Hodges, aged eleven years, ten months, and ten days.

Nellie was always unusually kind and lovely to all, and was therefore beloved by all. About thirty minutes before she died, she commenced in a clear and musical strain to sing those beautiful lines,—

"I'm going home to die no more,"

and sung them over three times, which were her last words. And what seemed to make it wonderful was, that she was never known to sing a word before. This, with her christian meekness, causes her parents not to sorrow as those which have no hope.

The writer endeavored to comfort the friends on the occasion from 1 Cor. 15: 21.

T. W. PIPER.

ELD. T. TRIPP.

Died in Solon, Me., Sept. 19th, 1864, Eld. Timothy Tripp, aged seventy-eight years.

Eld. Tripp was among the first who embraced the doctrine of life only through Christ, as taught by Elias Smith. He also took the first volume of the first religious newspaper ever published in the United States; viz., the Herald of Gospel Liberty. He was among the first to believe the news of Jesus' soon coming; and fell on sleep full in the faith of soon being made like him, to die no more. He leaves a large family of children and grand children to mourn his loss. The writer endeavored to comfort them with the words of Rev. 14: 13.

L. L. HOWARD.

C. CRONEY.

Died at Athol, Mass., Nov. 5th, 1864, of congestion of the lungs, Caroline, wife of F. A. Croney, aged forty-four years, seven months, three days.

Also, Nov. 7th, Mrs. L. Vineca, mother of Caroline Croney, aged seventy-four years.

Thus death has laid its cold hand upon mother and daughter, and they sleep in the silent tomb, awaiting the resurrection of the just. They died in hope of joining in the victor's song over death, hell and the grave, at the sounding of the trump of God. We endeavored to comfort the mourning friends from the words of Paul,—"Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." J. HEMENWAY.

ALLA DENNEN.

Fell asleep in South Livermore, Maine, Oct. 14th, 1864, of quinsy, little Alla, son of Chandler and Emily Dennen, aged two years, one month, and seventeen days.

He was a lovely boy, of a lamb-like disposition. His mother fell asleep in Jesus some sixteen months before. So we are called to lay them away for a little while, till death has done its last work, and Jesus bids his saints arise, clad with life and immortality. Funeral service by Bro. D. M. Hanscomb. C. DENNEN.

TERRIBLE FIRE.—A letter from Japan in the Tribune says that, in consequence of the explosion of shells at the attack made by Choein, a leading Damio on Miaco, the capital of the Mikado, the spiritual sovereign of Japan, some months ago, fires broke out in many places, which caught up by a high wind then blowing, raged unchecked until this populous city was reduced to ashes. According to the native accounts the fire raged two entire days, laying in waste nearly one thousand blocks or squares, destroying seventy-eight thousand houses and temples, and three thousand seven hundred ware-houses. About five-sixth of the city was in ashes, and half a million people were made homeless. Japanese houses are not altogether paste and paper affairs. A very large portion of the European peasantry are sheltered by no better.—The great temple of Hun-quan-gee, the most famous in the empire, was burned.

Discharge of the St. Albans Raiders.

The report that the St. Albans raiders have been discharged and even allowed to retain their plunder, will excite a feeling of profound indignation in this country. A different result was certainly expected, notwithstanding Canadian sympathy with the rebels. The law of nations so plainly condemns the use of neutral territory as a basis of hostile operations, that there would seem to be no loophole for the escape of these raiders, even if self-interest did not prompt the Canadians to give them up.

The law of nations applicable to the case is so clearly expounded by the Toronto Globe, that we need not enlarge upon the alternatives which have been forced upon us. It says:

"We do not know that people generally are aware of the length to which the law of nations allows a country to go for the purpose of self-preservation. If these raids continue we shall not only render it probable that Canada may be invaded by United States troops, but we shall actually give the United States a right to do so. It is to no purpose, we may allege, that we have done all we can to stop the raids; should they be made the fact will be proof either that we had not done all we might or that we are incapable of preserving our neutrality—either way giving the United States a very good plea to justify pursuit of their foes into our territory. On this point we quote Dr. Phillimore, who, in volume 1, page 227 of his valuable work on International Law, says: 'A rebellion or a civil commotion, it may happen, agitates a nation; while the authorities are engaged in repressing it, bands of rebels pass the frontier to shelter themselves under the protection of the conterminous State, and from thence, with restored strength and fresh appliances, renew their invasion upon the State from which they have escaped. The invaded State remonstrates. The remonstrance, whether from favor to rebels or feebleness of the executive, is unheeded, or at least, the evil complained of remains unredressed. In this state of things the invaded State is warranted by international law in crossing the frontier, and in taking the necessary means for her safety, whether these be the capture or dispersion of the rebels or the destruction of their stronghold, as the exigencies of the case may require.'"

This authority, derived from the latest and best British writer on the law of nations, is certainly conclusive. But Vattel says the same thing. If his neighbor, he says, affords a refuge to his enemies, enabling them to recruit and attack him at leisure, he must either prevent them from so doing, or else they may be sought and fought on his territory. "This," adds Vattel, "is what shall happen to those nations who are not in a condition to make their territories respected. Very soon the theatre of war will be established there. There they shall march, there they shall fight as in a country open to all comers."

Such is the law of nations. This is no time for vaporings or for threats. But we can assure our Canadian neighbors that the United States Government will fall short of its duty, in the estimation of the people, if it does not at once put an ample force upon the frontier to pursue and arrest raders, giving explicit orders that no boundary line shall stop pursuit. If the rebels are to be allowed to establish a new base of hostile operations in Canada, it is an act of war, and that country must suffer the consequences. We have a right to strike at the enemy's base wherever it is located, and to defend ourselves by carrying war to the firesides of those by whom hostile operations are aided and abetted.—Boston Journal.

IMPORTANT ORDERS FROM GEN. DIX.

Headquarters Department of East New York, Dec. 14. 1864. General Orders No. 97. Information having been received at these headquarters that the rebel mauraders, who were guilty of murder and robbery at St. Albans have been discharged from arrest, and that other enterprises are actually in preparation in Canada, the Commanding General deems it due to the people of the frontier towns to adopt the most prompt and efficient measures for the security of their lives and property.

All military commanders on the frontiers are therefore instructed, in case further acts of depredation and murder are attempted, whether by mauraders or persons acting under commissions from the rebel authorities at Richmond, to shoot down the perpetrators if possible while in the commission of their crimes, or if it be necessary with a view to their capture to cross the boundary between the United States and Canada, said commanders are hereby directed to pursue them, wherever they may take refuge, and if captured they are—under no circumstances—to be surrendered, but are to be sent to these headquarters for trial and punishment by martial law.

The Major General commanding the Department will not hesitate to exercise to the fullest extent the authority he possesses under the rules of law recognized by all civilized States in regard to persons organizing hostile expeditions within neutral territory and fleeing to it for an asylum after committing acts of depradation within our own, such an exercise of authority having become indispensable to protect our cities and towns from robbery and murder.

It is earnestly hoped that the inhabitants of our frontier districts will abstain from all acts of retaliation on account of the outrages committed by the rebel mauraders, and that the proper measures of redress will be left to the action of the public authorities.

By command of Major General Dix.
D. I. VAN BUREN,
Col. and Ass't Adj. Gen.

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 15. A public meeting has been called in Troy to endorse Gen. Dix's order relative to rebel raiders from Canada.

Quebec C. E. Dec 15. The discharge of the St. Albans raiders surprised the members of the government, and the ground of the discharge is pronounced ridiculous. The magistrate, it is likely, will be severely dealt with. New warrants have been issued by the Superior Court Judge for the re-arrest of the raiders, and constables are in pursuit. An efficient military force is to be sent to the border towns immediately, to prevent further depredations.

Montreal, C. E., Dec. 15. The conduct of Mr. Coursol, the Magistrate, and Lemothe, the Chief of Police, is denounced. Lemothe is accused of complicity. An investigation is going on by the Council. It is thought that Lemothe will be dismissed.

Toronto, C. W., Dec. 15. There is a profound sensation in regard to Coursol's decision in the case of the raiders. The best legal authorities pronounce it contrary to law, and it meets with general condemnation.

A Montreal correspondent of the New York Herald writes to that paper that there are facts connected with Judge Coursol's discharge of the St. Alban's raiders, on Wednesday, which lead disinterested parties to think that it was a preconcerted arrangement from the first. While the case was going on in the Court room, and before Coursol had given his extraordinary decision, it was evident to the spectators that the prisoners were to be discharged, and that they knew it would be so, as they were well supplied with over-coats and mufflers, and all ready for a journey. The correspondent says:

"The decision was given about four P. M., and in a few moments the raiders had their money and had flown.

The decision, added to the under-handed course of the authorities in giving up the money, creates great excitement here, and I heard one of our most prominent business men remark this morning that he would sell his real estate a great deal less than he would have done before this decision was made public.

The southerners here are jubilant, and boast of all kinds of bloody work that they have in progress, and the people of the frontier must lose no time in rallying to the defense of their property. It is rumored that the raiders have gone to take part in a raid upon Detroit.

The people of the border cannot be too vigilant, as this province is crowded with southerners and deserters, all desperate men, who are ready for any chance that promises booty, and they will operate boldly, knowing the indifference and sympathy of the authorities. Let them be prepared to give them a warm reception."

☞ A Canadian who bought a ticket on the Grand Trunk Railroad to go to Montreal and return the ticket specifying "good for this day and tomorrow," being one day late in returning, was put out of the car, because he refused to pay his fare a second time, whereupon he sued the company, and recovered $100 damages.

Washington, Dec. 13. The resolution providing for the abrogation of the Reciprocity treaty was passed by the house with an alacrity that insures the termination of the Treaty on the sixteenth of March, 1866—twelve months after its ten years stipulated existence.

Philadelphia, Dec. 15. A special dispatch to the Evening Telegraph from Washington says another scout has arrived from Savannah, and reports that Savannah was captured on the 10th inst.

War Department,
Washington, Dec. 16, 9 A. M.

To Major Gen. Dix:

The following official report of the battle before Nashville has been received from Major General Thomas:

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 15, 9 P. M.

I attacked the enemy's left this morning and drove it from the river below the city very nearly to Franklin pike, distance about 8 miles. I have captured Chalmers' headquarters and train, and a second train of about 20 wagons, with between 800 and 1000 prisoners and 16 pieces of artillery.

The troops behaved splendidly, all taking their share in assaulting and carrying the enemy's breastworks. I shall attack the enemy again to-morrow if he stands to fight, and if he retreats during the night will pursue him, throwing a heavy cavalry force in his rear to destroy his trains if possible.

(Signed) GEO. H. THOMAS,
Major General.

New York, Dec. 16. A private dispatch from a reliable source at Montreal states that there is a perfect panic in Canada among railway managers, in anticipation of non-intercourse with the United States, which is expected, unless the government takes prompt action to allay excitement on the borders. At Montreal, at five o'clock to-day, nothing was known of the rebel raiders, nor were there further developments in relation to the restoration of the money stolen from the St. Albans banks.

Washington, Dec. 17. The President has received dispatches announcing the complete defeat of Hood's army, which is rapidly being dispersed or captured.

A salute of two hundred guns is to be fired in Franklin Square at noon. Flags are displayed and every one is jubilant.

Dispatches have been received to-day from Gen. Foster, who had a personal interview with Gen. Sherman at Fort McAllister, which had been taken by assault on the preceding day. Savannah was closely besieged and its capture was confidently expected.

Near Franklin, Tenn., Dec. 18. We have pushed the enemy to-day beyond Franklin, capturing his hospitals containing over 1500 wounded, and about 150 of our wounded in addition to the above. Gen. Knipe, commanding a division of cavalry, drove the enemy's rear guard through Franklin to-day, capturing about 250 prisoners and five battle flags, with very little loss on our side.

In addition to the captures of yesterday, I have the honor to report the capture of Gen. Rucker and about 250 prisoners of the enemy's cavalry.

Maj. Gen. Edward Johnson's entire division with all the brigade commanders, were captured in the works which were taken by assault.

GEORGE H. THOMAS.
Major General Commanding.

A call and draft for 300,000 troops to make up the deficiency occasioned by credits on the last call has been ordered by the President.

(Signed) EDWIN M. STANTON.
Secretary of War.

LOOK OUT FOR INCENDIARIES. A Montreal correspondent of the New York Tribune says that a gang of incendiaries are already skulking about Boston, systematically preparing that city for the devouring element. Nothing but the utmost vigilance on the part of the authorities and people will prevent the consummation of their hellish schemes. The people of Boston may trust the city authorities to exercise their share of vigilance, but it is incumbent on every citizen to add his personal watchfulness to theirs, as the Tribune correspondent has his information of the movements of incendiaries from Canada toward Boston and New York from good authority.—Boston Journal.

☞ Three smart shocks of earthquake were experienced at Victoria, Vancouver's Island, on the morning of Nov. 2nd. It raised and shook the ground from North to South, every building in town being rocked by it. Children screamed with fright, ladies rushed from their bed-rooms with terror, horses pricked their ears and trembled, and dogs crouched away howling, with their tails between their legs, says a newspaper correspondent. The top of Mount Baker collapsed on the occasion, about a thousand feet of the main peak disappearing.

☞ The milk dealers of Washington have raised the price of milk to twenty cents a quart.

The Maine Ministerial Conference.

It ought to be borne in mind by all our Advent ministers in Maine, that their conference was adjourned at the Oct. session, to meet in Richmond, Read meeting-house, the first Tuesday in January, 1865, and continue as long as then thought best. It is probable that the Secretary considered the notice of such an adjournment sufficient. But we thought best to call the attention of all the ministering brethren to it especially, hoping to see them interested to be present, to study, investigate, and also preach the word, as also to confer in reference to a united and vigorous prosecution of the war unto the end, in the spirit of Christ, and with the armor of God.

I. C. WELLCOME,
R. R. YORK.

Easterly Maine Conference.

Our Easterly Maine Conference appointed at Frankfort Mills, will commence Thursday evening, January 12th, 1865, at six o'clock. I am requested to say that there are warm hearts and comfortable homes for all that will come to worship with us. Strangers may call on Wm. York, J. Woodman, J. Rogers, Rufus West, and F. A. Baker. Dear brethren, keep in mind the resolve of the North Searsport conference of last August,—and come to the meeting purposely to worship the Lord of hosts.

M. YOUNG, Clerk.

Conference in Holden.

A conference will be held in Holden, Mass., at the Town Hall, commencing Wednesday, Dec. 21st, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sabbath. Preaching by different ministering brethren. Prayer and conference meeting at 10 A. M., preaching at 2 P. M., and also at 6 in the evening.

All in Holden and its vicinity who love God and the salvation of sinners, and desire to know and understand the truth, and be prepared for the day of his coming, are cordially invited. Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, but exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. Pray for God's blessing upon the meeting.

In behalf of the church, H. K. FLAGG.

Conference.

The Maine Western Central Quarterly Conference will be holden at the Union Chapel in Cornville, commencing Thursday, January 5th, 1865, at half-past 6 o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. Brethren from a distance will please inquire for Brn. Chas. Stratton, J. Flanders, P. Gardner, — Hight, — Warren, J. Fogg, or B. Tuttle. Provision will be made for all. Come, brethren and sisters, let us see to it that we have on the gospel armor, and meet together prepared to labor with a zeal worthy of the cause in which we are engaged.

D. W. GRIFFIN, Clerk.

Meetings in Dansville, N. Y.

Elder Edwin Burnham will commence laboring with the church of God in Dansville, N. Y., on the second Sunday in January, 1865, if the Lord will, to continue for a length of time, according to the will of God. The object of the meetings will be to convict sinners of the truth that they may be converted, whether in the professed church or out of it. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to visit us during these meetings, who will make it their sole purpose in visiting us to help on in this work. We believe in prayer; therefore, brethren, pray for us.

Discussion Resumed.

The discussion between Eld. S. W. Bishop and myself, (which was broken off after the second evening, on account of the sickness and death of my little girl), will be resumed Jan. 4th, 1865, at New Market Hall, Providence, R. I. A. DURFEE.

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session with the church in Danielsonville, Conn., commencing the first Wednesday in January. The friends of Jesus and others are invited to attend.

A. C. GREENE, Secy.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co., now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. As the new hymn book is not to be published at present, we have contracted with Bro. Himes for the "Christian Lyre," so that we can supply those who want them in Maine at wholesale and retail. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. WELCOME & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 481. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by
H. L. HASTINGS,
167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in STATISTICAL ACCOUNTS of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heavens.

III. THESSALONICA; OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and shows more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth. The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a library of themselves.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the various Doctrines of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrine of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Judgment of the Wicked; "Will All Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul;" with The Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

For the World's Crisis.

THE LAND OF PEACE.

There is a land, whose peaceful shore
Shall never know of conflicts more;
Its fields shall never feel the dread
Of blighting war nor warrior's tread;
Nor o'er its verdant valleys large,
Shall ever form the awful charge
Of steeds and men in fearful fray,
Of battle's fierce and wild array.

The woe and waste of war's sad death
Shall never blight that blooming earth;
Its skies shall never dim with strife,
Its plains ne'er stain with wasted life;
And echo ne'er shall spread the sound
Of bugle note, to gather round
The flaunting flag of right or wrong,
That leads the hosts to strife along.

No widow's sighs nor orphan's tears
Shall ever dim eternal years;
No prison tale of want and pain
Shall ever grieve the heart again;
No war-environed city there,
Shut in with death and dark despair,
Or maddened with the awful roar
That gun and mortar do outpour.

And never o'er the smiling main
Shall sail the war-bound ship again,
To rain its wrath upon the strand,
At some fierce chieftain's dark command;
But peace shall rule o'er land and wave,
While never 'bove a warrior's grave
Shall bend the mournful cypress low,
To bid the tears of love to flow.

Yea, o'er that land shall joy and peace
Through all the circling years increase;
The Prince of Peace shall bear the sway
O'er all the earth in that bright day;
His love shall free the earth from ill,
His love shall ever guide each will
In paths of purity and bliss,
In scenes of joy and happiness.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 6.

THE TRUE DATE OF MESSIAH'S BIRTH AND CRUCIFIXION.

Having shown that Daniel's 69 weeks of years began with the "going forth of the commandment" under Cyrus, B. C. 488, and reached their end in the fifth year before the Christian Era, it may be well to assign our reasons for believing that Christ was born B. C. 5, and thus add strength to the argument.

Also having shown that Daniel's 62 weeks of years commenced with the completion of Jerusalem's "wall" in the thirty-second of Artaxerxes' reign, B. C. 406, which measurement was to terminate prior to the crucifixion, and having seen that 62 weeks of years B. C. 406 do end before A. D. 30, at which point we have placed the cross, it becomes us to show why we place the crucifixion in A. D. 30, and thus strengthen our position.

I. Time of the birth of Christ.

1. Christ was born before the death of Herod.

2. Josephus informs us that there was an eclipse of the moon at Jerusalem just before the death of Herod, which, by astronomical computation locates Herod's death B. C. 4, and as Christ was born previously, and fled into Egypt and remained there a space of time, his birth must have been B. C. 5, just where Daniel's 69 weeks of years end. Says Dr. Hales: "Christ's birth, therefore, could not have been earlier than B. C. 6, nor later than B. C. 5." Robinson remarks: "The birth of Christ cannot in any case be fixed later than the autumn of B. C. 5.

3. John the Baptist began to preach and baptize, "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, (Luke 3: 1—3) and Jesus coming to his baptism, "began to be about thirty years of age" (Luke 3: 23); and a "total eclipse of the moon at Rome, on September 27th, at 32 minutes after three in the morning," about a month "after the death of Augustus Cæsar," at whose death Tiberius began his independent reign, A. D. 14, is "indisputably fixed," says Dr. Hales, (as the beginning of Tiberius' reign,) "reckoning from the death of Augustus,"—not including his joint reign with Augustus, but counting Tiberius' two years joint reign with Augustus, as we should, A. D. 12 is astronomically and historically fixed as the true starting point of the reign of Tiberius; "in the fifteenth year of" which Christ began to be about thirty years of age, in A. D. 26, from which point, by tracing back thirty years, we find the true time of his birth in the fifth year before the Christian Era; thus, A. D. 26 added to B. C. 5, diminished by 1 in crossing the Christian Era, is 30. Thus B. C. 5 is clearly shown to be the true date of Messiah's birth, just 483 years after the "going forth of the commandment" under Cyrus, B. C. 488. That point is settled.

II. Time of the crucifixion of Christ.

1. Having located the birth of Christ in the fifth year before the Christian Era, and having seen that Christ was about thirty years old at his baptism, "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius," which synchronizes with A. D. 26, about which time he commenced his ministry, during which he attended just four annual passovers, the last one being just prior to his death, (John 2: 13, John 5: 1, John 6: 4, John 13: 1,) we thus learn that his crucifixion was in A. D. 30, over thirty-three years after his birth.

2. Numerous declarations of Scripture compel us to believe that Christ was crucified on Thursday. Such as the disciples' statement on the morning of his resurrection: "This is the third day since these things were done"—Friday, first day since; Saturday, second day since; Sunday, "third day since these things were done." But if Friday had been the day of the crucifixion, the matter would stand thus; Saturday, first day since; Sunday only the second day "since these things were done." Over twenty direct texts of Scripture irresistibly drive us to the conclusion that Christ was crucified on the third day before his resurrection took place, on Sunday morning; thus, Saturday the first day before, Friday, the second day before, and Thursday the third day before.

Christ was crucified at the passover, which invariably was at a full moon, and, as Josephus says, while the sun was in Aries. Then in order to find the true year of the crucifixion, we must look for a year in which the full moon falls on Thursday: for Christ was crucified both on Thursday, and on a full moon. It has been astronomically demonstrated that from A. D. 29, for a period of eight years, the only paschal full moon that fell on Thursday, was on April 6, A. D. 30. This covers all the disputed ground, none being wild enough to think of locating the crucifixion either before or after these eight years. Thus the combined light of Scripture and astronomy clearly fixes the year of the crucifixion, once and forever, and immovably, in A. D. 30. This is positive. Messiah was to be cut off "after 62 weeks," or 434 years from the time Jerusalem's "wall" was "built," B. C. 406, which measurement terminates about half a year before the crucifixion, thus making it true to the letter that Christ was "cut off," not precisely at, but literally "after" the end of this measurement. How precise is he fulfillment.

This gives us confidence in prophetic measurements, and despite the popular claim that Christ is to come as a thief, we feel inclined to compute the time reaching to "the glory that should follow," feeling confident it has not been placed in the Bible in vain. True, Christ is to come on one class as a thief; for through the seer of Patmos he declares, "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief (Rev. 3: 3), but nowhere does he intimate that he will come on the watchers as a thief. The very opposite of this is here plainly intimated, and elsewhere distinctly affirmed,—"But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. (1 Thess. 5: 4.)

The cry about past failures shall not deter us from looking at the question of time, for it is positively a part of God's arrangement for the church, else why did he place it in the Bible? The question of time, and nothing else, was under consideration when Gabriel affirmed, "The wise shall understand." Did he tell the truth? Yes. Have they understood it in past years? No. Then does it not remain to be understood despite past mistaken computations? Certainly. Well, when? Not while sealed, of course,—for it was "closed up and sealed till the time of the end." (Dan. 12: 9.) Then what? "The wise shall understand. Understand what? That which was to be "sealed up till the time of the end," namely; the time. Do not the signs of the times indicate that we are approaching the termination of the "time of the end?" Certainly. Then we have reached the period for the time to be understood. Who can object to God's plan because of human failures? Who?

N. B. Our Scriptual, historial, and astronomical location of Messiah's birth B. C. 5, and his death A. D. 30, hurl into oblivion the claim that the 2300 days ended A. D. 1844, even if it were not true that the seventh of Artaxerxes had been chronologically-misplaced, from which point they begin their measurement. But with the displacing of their starting and terminating points, by invulnerable facts, their entire superstructure is totally washed away by a mighty flood of truth. But never mind,—let error go—it is worthless, and we kindly offer you something valuable in its place. W. SHLDON.

THE SEAL BROKEN.

What are we to understand by the remark now frequently seen in our paper, and found finally affixed to Bro. Thurman's book as its title—"The Sealed Book of Daniel opened"? To those just becoming interested in the study of prophetic truth, it may not appear to be a singular idea that some brother has at last found the key of knowledge on this subject, and given the true light on the chronological data of the prophetic periods; but to those who have studied long and carefully, examining great numbers of books of many authors on this subject, it appears a singular idea that any one man should claim to be the humble instrument of opening the sealed book of Daniel. Still it may be a fact that Bro. Thurman has done this work of breaking the seal, and opening the book, although I, and others, might doubt it. For one, I am glad he has been stirred up to write and publish it. It shows an interest in God's word, and it will also awaken others to an interest on this highly important subject.

Well, what do you think of his time? This is often asked me. I must say, first, that I have not yet found time to study Bro. T.'s book. Secondly, that I have studied such works enough the last thirty years to learn that I am not competent to decide all points treated upon in the chronology of our Bible; neither has it been my fortune to associate with any man who could do it, nor to obtain the writings of any one who believed himself competent to do it, whose calculations have not failed, except it be Bro. T.'s. His book is not yet tested fully by time. Thirdly, I think well of his (?) time, although I have not read fully his calculations. The time he states for the return of our Lord is no new thought to me, and thousands of others; yet his plan of calculating and arriving at it may be peculiar to himself.

But some of the thoughts of which I wish here to speak are, that so much should be said about the "new light," "the sealed book opened," "the correct chronology of the Bible found," etc., etc., all referred to Bro. T. as its point of emanation. This seems odd indeed, after we have believed, spoken, written, and published to the world, as a people, for more than twenty years, that we had reached "the time of the end," and that the seal had been removed from the book of Daniel,—that many were running to and fro, and knowledge increasing. We have believed that the ending of the 1260 years began "the time of the end," and that the seal was removed then. Others in Europe, as Edward Bickersteth, believed "the time of the end" signified a "time," prophetic, or 360 years, and that it commenced in the epoch of the Reformation, A. D. 1507, and ending with the coming of Christ in 1867, during which time there has been great research on the subject of Daniel's prophecy, by very many eminent writers, in all parts of Christendom, running "to and fro"; i. e., traversing, investigating, contradicting each other's expositions, thus calling much attention to the subject, and finally expelling the mystery until the true light should dawn upon the church gradually, so that the import of the prophecy should be understood. Yet if it is the subject of "definite time" that was "sealed up," and finally to be opened and known; and if A. D. 1868 is the true time for the ending of the periods (and I dare not say it is not), then Thomas Scott, D. D., who wrote his commentary nearly a hundred years ago, may perhaps be justly entitled to the claim of "opening the sealed book of Daniel," for his calculations end the periods in 1866. Or the learned G. S. Faber, B. D., may come in for such a claim; for in his celebrated "Dissertation on the Prophecies," pp. 287, 300, he ends the periods A. D. 1866.

But if 1867 is the true date, then should not the eminent Mr. Bickersteth, of England, who wrote several valuable works on the prophecies, and published an excellent time chart and table, as early as 1836, and who ends the periods in 1867, be called the instrument who opened the sealed book? Perhaps Mr. R. C. Shimeall, of New York, whose able and valuable work has not yet been fully digested, and who ends the periods in 1867, may have a share in the opening of the sealed book.

We might name ten or twelve other eminent authors, whose calculations end the periods in A. D. 1864—1866—1868, and whose books we, and many of our brethren, have been collecting and studying all the way since 1843, with interest, and perhaps benefit. With these works in our libraries, and minds, we have felt curious, and sometimes a little ashamed, when some of our brethren who embraced and taught certain time views, which they thought correct, and we thought might be, would remark in public that no eminent writer had given argument extending the periods beyond ——, and that there was no evidence on which to sustain an argument. But now those points of time are in the past, we are close to other points to which our minds have been turned for twenty years, as probably the farthest point to which the church could look. And with all the light accumulated from all sources during "the time of the end," let us not repudiate the labors, toils, researches and valuable information given by so many eminent christian scholars on this subject, to make one brother our oracle for chronological data. He may have much new light, and if so, let us be glad to accept it, just so fast as we are capable of testing it, and find it to be true light on any point; but certain it is that most eminent writers on these points have had modesty enough to prevent them from claiming to be the instrument, individually, of opening the sealed book. Let us learn the truth and believe it.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

THEIR INFLUENCE ON THE DEAR CHILDREN.

To the Saints scattered abroad:—Dear brethren and sisters, for a long time, my mind has been dwelling on the duties and responsibilities resting upon fathers and mothers. Are we doing all we can for our children? We are at work to shed the light of God's blessed truth on the world around us, and sometimes it seems as if it were to no purpose; but still we toil on to support meetings, send for this minister and that one, then invite in our neighbors and friends, ask God's blessing on the preacher, that he may be able to so present the truth that the congregation may be converted to God; then how eagerly we watch the congregation to see if there is likely to be any good resulting from our labors. At the same time, we forget to bestow that labor on our children that is necessary in order to instruct them in the things of God; and so our children many times grow up around us unconverted. Soon they are out from under our control, and dazzled by the giddy world, they whirl themselves out of our reach. We look after them, we call after them, "O my son, my son! oh, my children, this is the way, walk ye in it." But your words are like sounding brass, unheeded. You watch their course, until alas, too many of our children go about the world hardened in sin, without hope and without God in this dreadful wicked world. Solomon says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

What shall be done, to best promote the welfare of our children? Organize your Sabbath Schools now. Do not put it off till you get better prepared; or because you have but a few children, or for want of teachers, or for any other cause. These are times when the work of a week must be crowded into a day; or of a year into a few weeks. Children are old enough to repent and be converted, as soon as they are old enough to sin. Who can tell how much good can be accomplished in our little Sabbath School in a single year!

You who are interested in the dear children, take a look with me at the little Sabbath School in New Haven. One year ago about this time, we gave out to the children that on the next Sabbath, at noon, we would meet the children of the parents, to see if we could organize a Sabbath School. At the time appointed, the children were on hand. I think about fifteen in number. Soon after, it numbered twenty-five or more. The writer of this article was chosen superintendent. The teachers were chosen, the children were divided into four classes, according to age, etc. Many were the prayers of the teachers, and I believe of the church generally, that the good Lord might bless the effort now begun. Many times have I seen the tear trickle down the cheek of both teachers and parents of this dear Sabbath School. The prayers of teachers and parents have been head from heaven; the school has been steadily growing more and more interesting. Scholars that at first were but little interested soon became more and more so, as time passed by, till at last a few began to be interested in the religion of our blessed Lord and Savior, and by repentance and faith in Christ, have yielded themselves to him as servants of God. The work has been going on quietly, without noise; but all the more deeply, until seven, without being advised, as far as I know, at their own request, desired the privilege of being baptized. When this request was made known to the church, many of the older pilgrims were found in tears for joy. Accordingly, Sunday Nov. 27th, seven children—five young ladies, and two boys—were baptized on the shore. The girls from twelve to seventeen years old. The youngest, little Willie Hotchkiss, eight years old, said he loved Jesus and wept because he was afraid his father was not going to let him be baptized, on account of his being so young. That afternoon little Wille was very happy in meeting. On going home at night, he told his father how happy he was Said he thought he could tell everybody how to be converted. He was so happy he said he wanted to whistle all meeting time. I believe Willie does not sing yet. To night while I am writing this, the children have a prayer meeting by themselves, and little Willie is among them. The Lord bless the Lambs.

Thus you see, dear friends, the Lord is with us. For the promise is unto us and our children. Organize your children into the Sunday School, get the best teachers you can; much depends on having good teachers, such as will be faithful to them. Next study to keep the children interested. Get the question book lately published, and if you cannot yet Sunday School books to suit you, get the cards printed and sold at the Crisis office. Take the Young Pilgrim, and pass them to the children every Sabbath. There are pretty verses in them for the children to learn and repeat at Sabbath School in concert. Dear friends, the Lord is soon coming. Let us so act, that it may be well with us, and we be admitted with unbroken families into our blessed abode. G. W. DENNY.

"THE RELIGION OF THE DAY."

The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion, without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the flesh and with the devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection deliverance, for the binding of the adversary, and for the Lord's return. It is a second-rate religion—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fair exterior, but an aching heart—a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings. It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times—very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of Apostolic days, but even of the Reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted on certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. All is thus bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow is paralyzed.—Man: his Religion and his World, by H. Bonar.

"HE SHALL SIT AS A REFINER AND PURIFIER OF SILVER."

'Tis sweet to know that He who tries
The silver, takes his seat
Beside the fire that purifies,
Lest too intense a heat
Raised to consume the base alloy
The precious mettle to destroy.

'Tis good to think that well He knows
The silver's power to bear
The ordeal to which it goes;
And that with skill and care
He'll take it from the fire, when fit
For his own hand to polish it.

'Tis blessedness to feel that He,
The piece he has begun,
Will not forsake till he can see,
To prove the work is done,
An image by its brightness shown,
The perfect likeness of his own.

But, ah! how much of earthly mould,
Dark relics of the mine,
Purged from the ore must he behold;
How long must he refine,
Ere in the silver he can trace
The first faint semblance to his face.

Thou great Refiner, sit thou by
Thy promise to fulfill,
Moved by thy hand, beneath thine eye,
And melted at thy will;
Oh! may thy work forever shine.
Reflecting beauty pure as thine.

WHITE LIES AND BLACK LIES.

IS IT NOT A LIE?

"All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."

Conversation between Slipshod and Timewell.

T. Good morning, neighbor Slipshod, I have a message for you.

S. Speak on!

T. The things concerning you are not good. Report says you vow and pay not.

S. Lie? Tell a lie?

T. Did you not promise to do that work for neighbor Simpkins?

S. I did.

T. The time specified?

S. It was.

T. That money due brother Larkin—was not the exact time for refunding it specified?

S. Well!

T. In either of the above cases did you render satisfactory reasons for non-compliance?

S. Perhaps not; but do you call this lying?

T. What is a lie?

S. A criminal falsehood!—willful deception!—intentional fraud!—a—a—a—

T. Stop, stop, neighbor, no wincing. Lies are of various kinds, of various degrees of aggravation. There are black lies and white lies, lies of vanity, pride, ambition, flattery, convenience, interest, fear, wantonness, cruelty; lies of first, second, and third rate malignity. There are also passive or practical lies—lies acted out. Point your finger in a wrong direction to an inquiring traveller—you give him the lie.

S. Very well!

T. Again. Some are habitual liars—lie at nearly every breath—like the common swearer, he swears and knows it not. "Mr. Timewell, will you let me have that barrel of lime," said neighbor Slipout. "On my word," said he, "I'll pay you next week." Some six months have elapsed, and not a farthing for the lime yet; nor do I ever expect it. Accuse this same man of stealing, would he not take it as an insult? Still, in the eye of God's law, he is a thief—cutting asunder the silken cords of social, civil, and religious compact—spreading widely the seeds of discord and ruin. Now, Mr. Slipshod, I am not accusing you of lies of first-rate malignity; far from it. But are you not openly violating a positive precept, the law of love, sundering the tenderest and dearest ties of friendship? Besides, there is an item (else I mistake) that renders your case peculiarly aggravating.

S. Friend Timewell, to what do you allude?

T. You profess to be a christian?

S. I do.

T. Pray in the social circle, I suppose?

S. Certainly.

T. Exhort sometimes?

S. Occasionally.

T. Well, what does the world think of you, and especially those individuals whom you have defrauded—whose spirits you have often grieved—and to whom you have falsified your word again and again? What effect think you, your prayers and exhortations will have upon their minds? Your voice to them is like the crackling of thorns under a pot! They must (and every one that knows you, will) necessarily write down your name, HYPOCRITE! HYPOCRITE!! Now, Mr. Slipshod, before we part, allow me to say to you in good faith, that these "white lies," these sins you term venial, are the little foxes that destroy the vines. They eat as doth a canker,—grieve the Holy Spirit—deaden the conscience, and cause the ways of Zion to be evil spoken of. I beseech you, as you value your own soul, the best interests of the community, the honor of God in the salvation of a perishing world—REPENT of this thy great wickedness—REPENT! make restitution, and henceforth be an honest man.

SILKIE'S POKE.

There was no finer looking cow in all the field than Silkie. Her form was beautiful, her legs short, neck and head small, eye full and clear, and her hair so soft and glossy that it gave her the name she bore. She was a good milker, gentle and affectionate in her disposition; but, alas, poor Silkie had one drawback,—she wore a long poke on her neck!

Now every body who saw Silkie said,—"What a noble animal! and what a pity that she must wear that poke!" Nobody wanted to buy her. Nobody ever even asked her price. Not only so, but that poke hurt the character of all the rest of the cows; for, very naturally, people said, "One unruly cow and one poke will spoil all the rest." The farmer was at a loss to account for the fact that his neighbor Jones could sell any number of cows, and as fast as he could raise them, while he could sell none; but he forgot the poke.

This poke, too, was a great disadvantage to poor Silkie herself. To be sure it kept her out of the corn, and the peas, and the mowing lot, the very places she wanted to be in; but it also was a daily and hourly trouble. If she stooped down to eat, she must turn and twist her head one side, and carefully get the poke the other side, or she would starve. If she went to the trough to drink, long before she could get her mouth to the water, the poke would be thrust against the trough. If she wanted to pass over bars, she must toss up that long poke, or it would be between the rails and almost break her neck. If she wanted to brush a fly off her back, she must swing the everlasting poke round and strike herself with it.

They said that Silkie was very affectionate in disposition, and very likely she was; but her poke seemed to be a part of herself, and when she made towards another cow to have a little friendly conversation with her, before she could get near enough to whisper in her ear, that poke would be thrust into her, and away she would run! In vain she said she "was misunderstood," and that she "lamented the poke as much as any cow could;" still, there was the poke! and that was enough. It was, to all appearance, part of dear Silkie's self. It hurt her character; it hurt the character of all her friends; it hurt her owner; it hurt herself most of all.

The reader will make the application. The moral is a good one. There are many running up and down the land, who think they have a perfect right to go where they please, say what they please, trample down the good, and destroy what they can; and they think it is all right. Such ought to have on Silkie's poke, and be kept out of the clover fields. O. A. S.

A MERCHANT'S STORY.

A member of a large mercantile firm recently gave me a bit of his early experience. Said he:

"I was seventeen years old when I left the country store where I had 'tended' for three years, and came to Boston in search of a place. Anxious, of course, to appear to the best advantage, I spent an unusual amount of time and solicitude upon my toilet, and when it was completed I surveyed my reflection in the glass with no little satisfaction, glancing lastly and most approvingly upon a seal ring which embellished my little finger, and my cane, a very pretty affair, which I had purchased with direct reference to this occasion. My first day's experience was not encouraging. I traversed street after street, up one side and down the other, without success. I fancied towards the last, that the clerks all knew my business the moment I opened the door, and that they winked ill-naturedly at my discomfiture as I passed out. But nature endowed me with a good degree of persistency, and the next day I started again. Towards noon I entered a store where an elderly gentleman stood talking with a lady by the door. I waited until the visitor had left, and then stated my errand. 'No sir,' was the answer given in a peculiarly crisp and decided manner. Possibly I looked the discouragement I was beginning to feel, for he added, in a kindlier tone: 'Are you good at taking a hint?'

"I don't know," I answered, while my face flushed painfully.

"What I wish to say is this,' said he, smiling at my embarrassment; 'If I were in want of a clerk, I would not engage a young man who came seeking employment with a flashy ring upon his finger, and swinging a fancy cane.'

For a moment mortified vanity struggled against common sense, but sense got the victory, and I replied, with rather a shaky voice, I am afraid, 'I am very much obliged to you,' and beat a hasty retreat. As soon as I got out of sight I slipped the ring into my pocket, and walking rapidly to the Worcester depot, I left the cane in charge of the baggage-master 'until called for.' It is there now, for aught I know. At any rate I never called for it. That afternoon I obtained a situation with the firm of which I am now a partner.—Ex.

GEMS OF PIETY.

BY REV. J. MASON.

Selected for the Crisis, by A. M. A.

Fear God for his power, trust him for his wisdom, love him for his goodness, praise him for his greatness, believe him for his faithfulness, and adore him for his holiness.

God repented that he made man, but never repented that he redeemed man.

We may know what God intends for us, by what he hath wrought in us.

God takes notice of every particular child of his, as if there were none else; and yet takes notice of all, as if they were but one man.

There is a sure rule—God never takes any thing from his people, but he gives them something better in the stead of it.

The more we fear God, the less we shall fear man.

If God's earthly presence is so good, what is his heavenly presence? If the love of God set us to work, the God of love will pay us our wages.

They that deny themselves for Christ, shall enjoy themselves in Christ.

Men had rather hear of Christ crucified for them, than be crucified for Christ.

If Christ denied innocent nature out of love to us, shall not we deny corrupt nature out of love to him?

If we are willing, God will help us; if sincere, God will accept us. A serious remembrance of God, is the fountain of obedience to God.

If God hath done that good for us which he hath denied to the world, we ought to do that service for him which is denied him by the world.

Uneven walking, with a neglect of watching, makes a disconsolate soul.

Four things a christian should especially labor after; viz.: to be humble and thankful, watchful and cheerful.

Salvation draws near to man when it is his main care. Religion must be our business, then it will be our delight.

It will cost something to be a christian; it will cost more not to be one.

The gate that leads to life is a straight gate, therefore we should fear; it is an open gate, therefore we should hope.

Do the Lord's work in the Lord's time.

Pray whilst God hears; hear whilst God speaks; believe whilst God promises; obey whilst God commands.

That man hath no sense of mercy that wants a sense of duty.

Two duties must run through a christian's life, like the warp through the wool—blessing and trusting.

We may judge of our eternal state by our spiritual state; and our spiritual state by the delightful and customary actions of our lives.

If we expect to live with Christ in heaven, we must live to him on earth.

Let not religion be your diversion, but your business.

If sin does not taste bitter, Christ cannot taste sweet.

Presumption abuses Christ; despair refuses him.

If we would stand, Christ must be our foundation; if we would be safe, Christ must be our sanctuary.

Christ satisfied God to the uttermost, and therefore can save sinners to the uttermost.

None are so lowly as Christ was, none so loving.

Our Judge instead of condemning us, stepped from the bench and died for us.

It matters not who are our accusers, if Christ be our advocate.

We must commit our souls to God's keeping, and submit ourselves to God's disposing.

We should obey his revealed will, and then be resigned to his providential will.

Neither contentment nor discontentment arises from the outward condition, but from the inward disposition.

God had rather his people should fare poorly than live proudly.

A christian should never say he hath nothing to do.

WANT OF PUNCTUALITY.

It is astonishing how many people there are who neglect punctuality. Thouands have failed in life from this cause alone. It is not only a serious vice in itself, but it is the fruitful parent of numerous other vices, so that he who becomes the victim of it, gets involved in toils from which it is almost impossible to escape. It makes the merchant wasteful of time; it saps the business and reputation of the lawyer, and it injures the prospects of the mechanic. In a word, there is not a profession, nor a station in life, which is not liable to the canker of this most destructive habit. Many and many a time has the failure of one man to meet obligations brought on the ruin of a score of others. Thousands remain poor all their lives, who, if they were more faithful in their word, would secure a large run of custom, and so make their fortunes. Be punctual, if you would succeed.

PREACHING.

Be simple in your preaching. Jesus was, Paul was, and all successful preachers have been so.

Be not too rapid; such preaching is like the hasty shower; rather imitate the steady rain, which soaks, softens, fructifies.

Preach down sin, and preach up holiness.
Preach down self, and preach up Christ.
Preach prayerfully as before God.
Preach to the conscience and the heart.

Aim to please God in every sermon, and in every sentence.

Never let the flock stray for want of pasture; let there be food for the soul in every sermon.

It is grievous to think how many go away from sermons with the word of grace in their ears, but not the work of grace in their hearts.—Ex.

VERBAL VICES.

TO MY YOUNG FRIENDS:—Let me say to you, that indulgence in verbal vice soon encourages corresponding vices in conduct. Let any one of us come to talk about any mean, low, or vile practice with a familiar, countenancing tone of voice, and when the opportunity occurs for committing the mean or vile act, do you think it likely that we would be as strong against it as before?

It is by no means an unknown thing that men of correct lives and correct habits talk themselves into crimes, into sensuality, and finally into perdition. On the same principle, bad language easily runs into bad deeds. Select any sin you please; then suffer yourself to converse in its dialect, to use its slang, to speak in the character of one who approves or relishes it, and I need not tell you how soon your or my moral sense will lower down its level. Thus, becoming intimate with it, we soon lose our horrors of it. This obvious principle of itself furnishes a good reason for faithfully watching that "unruly member," the tongue! P. TANDY.

FORGETTING SELF.

"Dear Bessie," said Mrs. Riley to her little daughter, "I am so glad you are trying to overcome that naughty habit of taking the largest apple, the best seat, and always thinking of yourself first, instead of last."

Bessie. Indeed, mamma, I am trying; I had just got that beautiful large apple to my mouth, when I saw you looking quite frightened. I knew what you meant, and I gave it to John in a moment. It was very hard work, for I do love apples so very much. Mamma, you said you would tell me about a little girl you once knew, that you would like me to imitate.

Mrs. R. I will do so at this moment, my child. Little Grace was not pretty, but every one loved her. She took no delight in fine clothes, yet she was never without ornament: for she had a "meek and quiet spirit," which is ever more beautiful than any outward show of finery. I am sure none could be with her long without receiving some little kind attention from her. Like you, Grace found it very difficult at first to love her neighbor as herself. She would often say, I wish I knew some very good person for me to try and be like; and then her good mother would tell her of the dear Savior, who went about healing the sick, giving sight to the blind, making the lame to walk, and binding up the broken-hearted. Grace loved to hear this; and she would say, with her little face beaming with love to this dear Savior, "Mother, I will try to be like him; for though I cannot cure people, and give them sight, yet I can help them, and try to comfort them by loving words and kind actions. And I can be gentle and patient to brother John when he vexes me and is very disagreeable. Oh! it will be very hard work, but I know you will help me, mother; and Jesus too, for he loves little children, and rejoices when he sees them trying to do right for his sake."

And now, Bessie, this delightful child is a good, useful, happy woman. She is still striving every day to be like Jesus. Can you guess who it is? for it is some one you know quite well.

Bessie. Papa had a sister Grace, and his name is John; is it Aunt Holyard, mamma?

Mrs. R. Yes, Bessie, it is your own aunt, whom we all love so much, because she is so kind to every one; often forgetting herself in her eagerness to please and serve others. How glad I shall be when I see my Bessie forgetting herself.

Bessie pomised to try.

Dear little reader! will you join Bessie in trying to forget yourself, and in being like Jesus, who never hurt, annoyed or neglected any one. Fancy him smiling down from heaven upon you, and that will make you very anxious to go on pleasing him. He will help you to overcome the naughtiest fault you have. You cannot be good and kind without his help; but always remember he loves to help the little ones.

All my nature is unholy,
Pride and passion dwell within;
But the Lord was meek and lowly,
And was never known to sin.

Lord! though now thou art in glory,
We have thine example still;
I can read thy sacred story,
And obey thy holy will.

Help me by that rule to measure
Every word and every thought;
Thinking it my greatest pleasure
There to learn what thou hast taught.

GOOD MANNERS.

"Will you please to have this seat, sir? I prefer to stand," said a fine little boy, who was sitting in a pew, to an old gentleman who was standing in the aisle.

"Thank you, my little man," said the gentleman, smiling very graciously upon the little fellow, "and you shall sit upon my knee, if you please."

When the service closed, the gentleman inquired of him his name, and asked him, "Why did you give up your good seat?"

"Mother teaches me, sir,' said he, "never to sit when an older person is standing near me."

Now look at another scene.

"Will you let the ladies have seats, and you sit on the form yonder? said a gentleman to four boys in a pew.

"I shan't," says one.

"They may sit on the form themselves, if they please," said another.

Not one of them moved. All the people near turned and looked with surprise and disgust upon them.

"They can't be Sabbath School scholars," one remarked.

"At any rate," another said, "they have had no good bringing up at home."

Very soon the sexton came and ordered them all out of the pew. They were obliged to obey, and out they marched with their heads hanging down, looking so ashamed. Nobody, however, pitied them.

Which example, children, is the most worthy of imitation—that of the polite boy, or of the four obstinate ones? And which honored their parents most?—Nation.

JOHN HANDSON'S NIGHT WORK.

John Handson was a bluff boy of fifteen. He was a smart, active, fearless fellow; the boys thought a good deal of him, and he thought a good deal of them, and a good deal of himself. On one occasion his father had business which called him to a distant city, and left John to "take care" of the family. John felt proud of his trust, and did well for several days, acting under the counsel and advice of his mother, just as he ought to have done. By-and-by he grew impatient, and did many things quite independent of her. The younger children did not like his sayings and doings at all. "He orders us around," they said, "as if he were king."

At last he took the entire management of things, and one day acted not only against his mother's wishes, but talked very ill-temperedly to her. Going to bed that night, he could not sleep. His conduct towards his mother troubled him, and he tossed from one side of the bed to the other, trying to get an easy place. He blamed the bed, and Bridget who made it, and then he thought he was sick, and worried along for some time; in fact, John suspected what the matter really was, only he was too proud to own it. He knew it was his treatment of his mother that troubled him, and for a long time he tried to sleep it off, or think of something else, or excuse himself in one way or another.

Happily John did not succeed. Conscience would do its work, and John listened to all that it said; and the consequence was that, pretty near midnight, for it was as late as that, the boy got up, stole to his mother's chamber, and with tears in his eyes, and penitence in his heart, begged her to forgive him. "And oh! he says, now that he is a man, "it was the sweetest moment of my life when I was forgiven."

That hour was the turning point in that boy's life. If he that night had hardened himself, the next day he would probably have behaved worse than before, and so on, and on until the bad boy became a bad man. But John yielded to the voice of conscience and he made thorough work of it. He confessed his fault, and asked to be forgiven, and experienced the sweets of forgiveness. The next day John's management was improved; he was more kind and considerate towards his brothers and sisters, and respectful towards his mother; and he was prepared by it afterwards to taste the sweets of God's forgiveness and favor. His word to every boy is, "If you have wronged your mother, be sure to own your fault, and ask to be forgiven. Harden not your hearts, boys."

☞ Be kind and obliging to all, but intimate only with the good. Thus you will gain esteem, and offend nobody.

THE LAND OF PEACE.

There is a land, whose peaceful shore
Shall never know of conflicts more;
Its fields shall never feel the dread
Of blighting war nor warrior's tread;
Nor o'er its verdant valleys large,
Shall ever form the awful charge
Of steeds and men in fearful fray,
Of battle's fierce and wild array.

The woe and waste of war's sad death
Shall never blight that blooming earth;
Its skies shall never dim with strife,
Its plains ne'er stain with wasted life;
And echo ne'er shall spread the sound
Of bugle note, to gather round
The flaunting flag of right or wrong,
That leads the hosts to strife along.

No widow's sighs nor orphan's tears
Shall ever dim eternal years;
No prison tale of want and pain
Shall ever grieve the heart again;
No war-environed city there,
Shut in with death and dark despair,
Or maddened with the awful roar
That gun and mortar do outpour.

And never o'er the smiling main
Shall sail the war-bound ship again,
To rain its wrath upon the strand,
At some fierce chieftain's dark command;
But peace shall rule o'er land and wave,
While never 'bove a warrior's grave
Shall bend the mournful cypress low,
To bid the tears of love to flow.

Yea, o'er that land shall joy and peace
Through all the circling years increase;
The Prince of Peace shall bear the sway
O'er all the earth in that bright day;
His love shall free the earth from ill,
His love shall ever guide each will
In paths of purity and bliss,
In scenes of joy and happiness.

THE TIME QUESTION.—NO. 6.

THE TRUE DATE OF MESSIAH'S BIRTH AND CRUCIFIXION.

Having shown that Daniel's 69 weeks of years began with the "going forth of the commandment" under Cyrus, B. C. 488, and reached their end in the fifth year before the Christian Era, it may be well to assign our reasons for believing that Christ was born B. C. 5, and thus add strength to the argument. Also having shown that Daniel's 62 weeks of years commenced with the completion of Jerusalem's "wall" in the thirty-second of Artaxerxes' reign, B. C. 406, which measurement was to terminate prior to the crucifixion, and having seen that 62 weeks of years B. C. 406 do end before A. D. 30, at which point we have placed the cross, it becomes us to show why we place the crucifixion in A. D. 30, and thus strengthen our position.

I. Time of the birth of Christ.

1. Christ was born before the death of Herod.

2. Josephus informs us that there was an eclipse of the moon at Jerusalem just before the death of Herod, which, by astronomical computation locates Herod's death B. C. 4, and as Christ was born previously, and fled into Egypt and remained there a space of time, his birth must have been B. C. 5, just where Daniel's 69 weeks of years end. Says Dr. Hales: "Christ's birth, therefore, could not have been earlier than B. C. 6, nor later than B. C. 5." Robinson remarks: "The birth of Christ cannot in any case be fixed later than the autumn of B. C. 5.

3. John the Baptist began to preach and baptize, "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, (Luke 3: 1—3) and Jesus coming to his baptism, "began to be about thirty years of age" (Luke 3: 23); and a "total eclipse of the moon at Rome, on September 27th, at 32 minutes after three in the morning," about a month "after the death of Augustus Cæsar," at whose death Tiberius began his independent reign, A. D. 14, is "indisputably fixed," says Dr. Hales, (as the beginning of Tiberius' reign,) "reckoning from the death of Augustus,"—not including his joint reign with Augustus, but counting Tiberius' two years joint reign with Augustus, as we should, A. D. 12 is astronomically and historically fixed as the true starting point of the reign of Tiberius; "in the fifteenth year of" which Christ began to be about thirty years of age, in A. D. 26, from which point, by tracing back thirty years, we find the true time of his birth in the fifth year before the Christian Era; thus, A. D. 26 added to B. C. 5, diminished by 1 in crossing the Christian Era, is 30. Thus B. C. 5 is clearly shown to be the true date of Messiah's birth, just 483 years after the "going forth of the commandment" under Cyrus, B. C. 488. That point is settled.

II. Time of the crucifixion of Christ.

1. Having located the birth of Christ in the fifth year before the Christian Era, and having seen that Christ was about thirty years old at his baptism, "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius," which synchronizes with A. D. 26, about which time he commenced his ministry, during which he attended just four annual passovers, the last one being just prior to his death, (John 2: 13, John 5: 1, John 6: 4, John 13: 1,) we thus learn that his crucifixion was in A. D. 30, over thirty-three years after his birth.

2. Numerous declarations of Scripture compel us to believe that Christ was crucified on Thursday. Such as the disciples' statement on the morning of his resurrection: "This is the third day since these things were done"—Friday, first day since; Saturday, second day since; Sunday, "third day since these things were done." But if Friday had been the day of the crucifixion, the matter would stand thus; Saturday, first day since; Sunday only the second day "since these things were done." Over twenty direct texts of Scripture irresistibly drive us to the conclusion that Christ was crucified on the third day before his resurrection took place, on Sunday morning; thus, Saturday the first day before, Friday, the second day before, and Thursday the third day before.

Christ was crucified at the passover, which invariably was at a full moon, and, as Josephus says, while the sun was in Aries. Then in order to find the true year of the crucifixion, we must look for a year in which the full moon falls on Thursday: for Christ was crucified both on Thursday, and on a full moon. It has been astronomically demonstrated that from A. D. 29, for a period of eight years, the only paschal full moon that fell on Thursday, was on April 6, A. D. 30. This covers all the disputed ground, none being wild enough to think of locating the crucifixion either before or after these eight years. Thus the combined light of Scripture and astronomy clearly fixes the year of the crucifixion, once and forever, and immovably, in A. D. 30. This is positive. Messiah was to be cut off "after 62 weeks," or 434 years from the time Jerusalem's "wall" was "built," B. C. 406, which measurement terminates about half a year before the crucifixion, thus making it true to the letter that Christ was "cut off," not precisely at, but literally "after" the end of this measurement. How precise is he fulfillment.

This gives us confidence in prophetic measurements, and despite the popular claim that Christ is to come as a thief, we feel inclined to compute the time reaching to "the glory that should follow," feeling confident it has not been placed in the Bible in vain. True, Christ is to come on one class as a thief; for through the seer of Patmos he declares, "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief (Rev. 3: 3), but nowhere does he intimate that he will come on the watchers as a thief. The very opposite of this is here plainly intimated, and elsewhere distinctly affirmed,—"But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. (1 Thess. 5: 4.)

The cry about past failures shall not deter us from looking at the question of time, for it is positively a part of God's arrangement for the church, else why did he place it in the Bible? The question of time, and nothing else, was under consideration when Gabriel affirmed, "The wise shall understand." Did he tell the truth? Yes. Have they understood it in past years? No. Then does it not remain to be understood despite past mistaken computations? Certainly. Well, when? Not while sealed, of course,—for it was "closed up and sealed till the time of the end." (Dan. 12: 9.) Then what? "The wise shall understand. Understand what? That which was to be "sealed up till the time of the end," namely; the time. Do not the signs of the times indicate that we are approaching the termination of the "time of the end?" Certainly. Then we have reached the period for the time to be understood. Who can object to God's plan because of human failures? Who?

N. B. Our Scriptual, historial, and astronomical location of Messiah's birth B. C. 5, and his death A. D. 30, hurl into oblivion the claim that the 2300 days ended A. D. 1844, even if it were not true that the seventh of Artaxerxes had been chronologically-misplaced, from which point they begin their measurement. But with the displacing of their starting and terminating points, by invulnerable facts, their entire superstructure is totally washed away by a mighty flood of truth. But never mind,—let error go—it is worthless, and we kindly offer you something valuable in its place.

THE SEAL BROKEN.

What are we to understand by the remark now frequently seen in our paper, and found finally affixed to Bro. Thurman's book as its title—"The Sealed Book of Daniel opened"? To those just becoming interested in the study of prophetic truth, it may not appear to be a singular idea that some brother has at last found the key of knowledge on this subject, and given the true light on the chronological data of the prophetic periods; but to those who have studied long and carefully, examining great numbers of books of many authors on this subject, it appears a singular idea that any one man should claim to be the humble instrument of opening the sealed book of Daniel. Still it may be a fact that Bro. Thurman has done this work of breaking the seal, and opening the book, although I, and others, might doubt it. For one, I am glad he has been stirred up to write and publish it. It shows an interest in God's word, and it will also awaken others to an interest on this highly important subject.

Well, what do you think of his time? This is often asked me. I must say, first, that I have not yet found time to study Bro. T.'s book. Secondly, that I have studied such works enough the last thirty years to learn that I am not competent to decide all points treated upon in the chronology of our Bible; neither has it been my fortune to associate with any man who could do it, nor to obtain the writings of any one who believed himself competent to do it, whose calculations have not failed, except it be Bro. T.'s. His book is not yet tested fully by time. Thirdly, I think well of his (?) time, although I have not read fully his calculations. The time he states for the return of our Lord is no new thought to me, and thousands of others; yet his plan of calculating and arriving at it may be peculiar to himself.

But some of the thoughts of which I wish here to speak are, that so much should be said about the "new light," "the sealed book opened," "the correct chronology of the Bible found," etc., etc., all referred to Bro. T. as its point of emanation. This seems odd indeed, after we have believed, spoken, written, and published to the world, as a people, for more than twenty years, that we had reached "the time of the end," and that the seal had been removed from the book of Daniel,—that many were running to and fro, and knowledge increasing. We have believed that the ending of the 1260 years began "the time of the end," and that the seal was removed then. Others in Europe, as Edward Bickersteth, believed "the time of the end" signified a "time," prophetic, or 360 years, and that it commenced in the epoch of the Reformation, A. D. 1507, and ending with the coming of Christ in 1867, during which time there has been great research on the subject of Daniel's prophecy, by very many eminent writers, in all parts of Christendom, running "to and fro"; i. e., traversing, investigating, contradicting each other's expositions, thus calling much attention to the subject, and finally expelling the mystery until the true light should dawn upon the church gradually, so that the import of the prophecy should be understood. Yet if it is the subject of "definite time" that was "sealed up," and finally to be opened and known; and if A. D. 1868 is the true time for the ending of the periods (and I dare not say it is not), then Thomas Scott, D. D., who wrote his commentary nearly a hundred years ago, may perhaps be justly entitled to the claim of "opening the sealed book of Daniel," for his calculations end the periods in 1866. Or the learned G. S. Faber, B. D., may come in for such a claim; for in his celebrated "Dissertation on the Prophecies," pp. 287, 300, he ends the periods A. D. 1866.

But if 1867 is the true date, then should not the eminent Mr. Bickersteth, of England, who wrote several valuable works on the prophecies, and published an excellent time chart and table, as early as 1836, and who ends the periods in 1867, be called the instrument who opened the sealed book? Perhaps Mr. R. C. Shimeall, of New York, whose able and valuable work has not yet been fully digested, and who ends the periods in 1867, may have a share in the opening of the sealed book.

We might name ten or twelve other eminent authors, whose calculations end the periods in A. D. 1864—1866—1868, and whose books we, and many of our brethren, have been collecting and studying all the way since 1843, with interest, and perhaps benefit. With these works in our libraries, and minds, we have felt curious, and sometimes a little ashamed, when some of our brethren who embraced and taught certain time views, which they thought correct, and we thought might be, would remark in public that no eminent writer had given argument extending the periods beyond ——, and that there was no evidence on which to sustain an argument. But now those points of time are in the past, we are close to other points to which our minds have been turned for twenty years, as probably the farthest point to which the church could look. And with all the light accumulated from all sources during "the time of the end," let us not repudiate the labors, toils, researches and valuable information given by so many eminent christian scholars on this subject, to make one brother our oracle for chronological data. He may have much new light, and if so, let us be glad to accept it, just so fast as we are capable of testing it, and find it to be true light on any point; but certain it is that most eminent writers on these points have had modesty enough to prevent them from claiming to be the instrument, individually, of opening the sealed book. Let us learn the truth and believe it.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

THEIR INFLUENCE ON THE DEAR CHILDREN.

To the Saints scattered abroad:—Dear brethren and sisters, for a long time, my mind has been dwelling on the duties and responsibilities resting upon fathers and mothers. Are we doing all we can for our children? We are at work to shed the light of God's blessed truth on the world around us, and sometimes it seems as if it were to no purpose; but still we toil on to support meetings, send for this minister and that one, then invite in our neighbors and friends, ask God's blessing on the preacher, that he may be able to so present the truth that the congregation may be converted to God; then how eagerly we watch the congregation to see if there is likely to be any good resulting from our labors. At the same time, we forget to bestow that labor on our children that is necessary in order to instruct them in the things of God; and so our children many times grow up around us unconverted. Soon they are out from under our control, and dazzled by the giddy world, they whirl themselves out of our reach. We look after them, we call after them, "O my son, my son! oh, my children, this is the way, walk ye in it." But your words are like sounding brass, unheeded. You watch their course, until alas, too many of our children go about the world hardened in sin, without hope and without God in this dreadful wicked world. Solomon says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

What shall be done, to best promote the welfare of our children? Organize your Sabbath Schools now. Do not put it off till you get better prepared; or because you have but a few children, or for want of teachers, or for any other cause. These are times when the work of a week must be crowded into a day; or of a year into a few weeks. Children are old enough to repent and be converted, as soon as they are old enough to sin. Who can tell how much good can be accomplished in our little Sabbath School in a single year!

You who are interested in the dear children, take a look with me at the little Sabbath School in New Haven. One year ago about this time, we gave out to the children that on the next Sabbath, at noon, we would meet the children of the parents, to see if we could organize a Sabbath School. At the time appointed, the children were on hand. I think about fifteen in number. Soon after, it numbered twenty-five or more. The writer of this article was chosen superintendent. The teachers were chosen, the children were divided into four classes, according to age, etc. Many were the prayers of the teachers, and I believe of the church generally, that the good Lord might bless the effort now begun. Many times have I seen the tear trickle down the cheek of both teachers and parents of this dear Sabbath School. The prayers of teachers and parents have been heard from heaven; the school has been steadily growing more and more interesting. Scholars that at first were but little interested soon became more and more so, as time passed by, till at last a few began to be interested in the religion of our blessed Lord and Savior, and by repentance and faith in Christ, have yielded themselves to him as servants of God. The work has been going on quietly, without noise; but all the more deeply, until seven, without being advised, as far as I know, at their own request, desired the privilege of being baptized. When this request was made known to the church, many of the older pilgrims were found in tears for joy. Accordingly, Sunday Nov. 27th, seven children—five young ladies, and two boys—were baptized on the shore. The girls from twelve to seventeen years old. The youngest, little Willie Hotchkiss, eight years old, said he loved Jesus and wept because he was afraid his father was not going to let him be baptized, on account of his being so young. That afternoon little Wille was very happy in meeting. On going home at night, he told his father how happy he was Said he thought he could tell everybody how to be converted. He was so happy he said he wanted to whistle all meeting time. I believe Willie does not sing yet. To night while I am writing this, the children have a prayer meeting by themselves, and little Willie is among them. The Lord bless the Lambs.

Thus you see, dear friends, the Lord is with us. For the promise is unto us and our children. Organize your children into the Sunday School, get the best teachers you can; much depends on having good teachers, such as will be faithful to them. Next study to keep the children interested. Get the question book lately published, and if you cannot yet Sunday School books to suit you, get the cards printed and sold at the Crisis office. Take the Young Pilgrim, and pass them to the children every Sabbath. There are pretty verses in them for the children to learn and repeat at Sabbath School in concert. Dear friends, the Lord is soon coming. Let us so act, that it may be well with us, and we be admitted with unbroken families into our blessed abode. G. W. DENNY.

"THE RELIGION OF THE DAY."

The religion of the day is an easy-minded religion, without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the flesh and with the devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection deliverance, for the binding of the adversary, and for the Lord's return. It is a second-rate religion—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love. It is a hollow religion, with a fair exterior, but an aching heart—a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings. It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times—very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of Apostolic days, but even of the Reformation. It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted on certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. All is thus bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow is paralyzed.—Man: his Religion and his World, by H. Bonar.

"HE SHALL SIT AS A REFINER AND PURIFIER OF SILVER."

'Tis sweet to know that He who tries
The silver, takes his seat
Beside the fire that purifies,
Lest too intense a heat
Raised to consume the base alloy
The precious mettle to destroy.

'Tis good to think that well He knows
The silver's power to bear
The ordeal to which it goes;
And that with skill and care
He'll take it from the fire, when fit
For his own hand to polish it.

'Tis blessedness to feel that He,
The piece he has begun,
Will not forsake till he can see,
To prove the work is done,
An image by its brightness shown,
The perfect likeness of his own.

But, ah! how much of earthly mould,
Dark relics of the mine,
Purged from the ore must he behold;
How long must he refine,
Ere in the silver he can trace
The first faint semblance to his face.

Thou great Refiner, sit thou by
Thy promise to fulfill,
Moved by thy hand, beneath thine eye,
And melted at thy will;
Oh! may thy work forever shine,
Reflecting beauty pure as thine.

WHITE LIES AND BLACK LIES.

IS IT NOT A LIE?

"All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death."

Conversation between Slipshod and Timewell.

T. Good morning, neighbor Slipshod, I have a message for you.

S. Speak on!

T. The things concerning you are not good. Report says you vow and pay not.

S. Lie? Tell a lie?

T. Did you not promise to do that work for neighbor Simpkins?

S. I did.

T. The time specified?

S. It was.

T. That money due brother Larkin—was not the exact time for refunding it specified?

S. Well!

T. In either of the above cases did you render satisfactory reasons for non-compliance?

S. Perhaps not; but do you call this lying?

T. What is a lie?

S. A criminal falsehood!—willful deception!—intentional fraud!—a—a—a—

T. Stop, stop, neighbor, no wincing. Lies are of various kinds, of various degrees of aggravation. There are black lies and white lies, lies of vanity, pride, ambition, flattery, convenience, interest, fear, wantonness, cruelty; lies of first, second, and third rate malignity. There are also passive or practical lies—lies acted out. Point your finger in a wrong direction to an inquiring traveller—you give him the lie.

S. Very well!

T. Again. Some are habitual liars—lie at nearly every breath—like the common swearer, he swears and knows it not. "Mr. Timewell, will you let me have that barrel of lime," said neighbor Slipout. "On my word," said he, "I'll pay you next week." Some six months have elapsed, and not a farthing for the lime yet; nor do I ever expect it. Accuse this same man of stealing, would he not take it as an insult? Still, in the eye of God's law, he is a thief—cutting asunder the silken cords of social, civil, and religious compact—spreading widely the seeds of discord and ruin. Now, Mr. Slipshod, I am not accusing you of lies of first-rate malignity; far from it. But are you not openly violating a positive precept, the law of love, sundering the tenderest and dearest ties of friendship? Besides, there is an item (else I mistake) that renders your case peculiarly aggravating.

S. Friend Timewell, to what do you allude?

T. You profess to be a christian?

S. I do.

T. Pray in the social circle, I suppose?

S. Certainly.

T. Exhort sometimes?

S. Occasionally.

T. Well, what does the world think of you, and especially those individuals whom you have defrauded—whose spirits you have often grieved—and to whom you have falsified your word again and again? What effect think you, your prayers and exhortations will have upon their minds? Your voice to them is like the crackling of thorns under a pot! They must (and every one that knows you, will) necessarily write down your name, HYPOCRITE! HYPOCRITE!! Now, Mr. Slipshod, before we part, allow me to say to you in good faith, that these "white lies," these sins you term venial, are the little foxes that destroy the vines. They eat as doth a canker,—grieve the Holy Spirit—deaden the conscience, and cause the ways of Zion to be evil spoken of. I beseech you, as you value your own soul, the best interests of the community, the honor of God in the salvation of a perishing world—REPENT of this thy great wickedness—REPENT! make restitution, and henceforth be an honest man.

SILKIE'S POKE.

There was no finer looking cow in all the field than Silkie. Her form was beautiful, her legs short, neck and head small, eye full and clear, and her hair so soft and glossy that it gave her the name she bore. She was a good milker, gentle and affectionate in her disposition; but, alas, poor Silkie had one drawback,—she wore a long poke on her neck!

Now every body who saw Silkie said,—"What a noble animal! and what a pity that she must wear that poke!" Nobody wanted to buy her. Nobody ever even asked her price. Not only so, but that poke hurt the character of all the rest of the cows; for, very naturally, people said, "One unruly cow and one poke will spoil all the rest." The farmer was at a loss to account for the fact that his neighbor Jones could sell any number of cows, and as fast as he could raise them, while he could sell none; but he forgot the poke.

This poke, too, was a great disadvantage to poor Silkie herself. To be sure it kept her out of the corn, and the peas, and the mowing lot, the very places she wanted to be in; but it also was a daily and hourly trouble. If she stooped down to eat, she must turn and twist her head one side, and carefully get the poke the other side, or she would starve. If she went to the trough to drink, long before she could get her mouth to the water, the poke would be thrust against the trough. If she wanted to pass over bars, she must toss up that long poke, or it would be between the rails and almost break her neck. If she wanted to brush a fly off her back, she must swing the everlasting poke round and strike herself with it.

They said that Silkie was very affectionate in disposition, and very likely she was; but her poke seemed to be a part of herself, and when she made towards another cow to have a little friendly conversation with her, before she could get near enough to whisper in her ear, that poke would be thrust into her, and away she would run! In vain she said she "was misunderstood," and that she "lamented the poke as much as any cow could;" still, there was the poke! and that was enough. It was, to all appearance, part of dear Silkie's self. It hurt her character; it hurt the character of all her friends; it hurt her owner; it hurt herself most of all.

The reader will make the application. The moral is a good one. There are many running up and down the land, who think they have a perfect right to go where they please, say what they please, trample down the good, and destroy what they can; and they think it is all right. Such ought to have on Silkie's poke, and be kept out of the clover fields. O. A. S.

A MERCHANT'S STORY.

A member of a large mercantile firm recently gave me a bit of his early experience. Said he:

"I was seventeen years old when I left the country store where I had 'tended' for three years, and came to Boston in search of a place. Anxious, of course, to appear to the best advantage, I spent an unusual amount of time and solicitude upon my toilet, and when it was completed I surveyed my reflection in the glass with no little satisfaction, glancing lastly and most approvingly upon a seal ring which embellished my little finger, and my cane, a very pretty affair, which I had purchased with direct reference to this occasion. My first day's experience was not encouraging. I traversed street after street, up one side and down the other, without success. I fancied towards the last, that the clerks all knew my business the moment I opened the door, and that they winked ill-naturedly at my discomfiture as I passed out. But nature endowed me with a good degree of persistency, and the next day I started again. Towards noon I entered a store where an elderly gentleman stood talking with a lady by the door. I waited until the visitor had left, and then stated my errand. 'No sir,' was the answer given in a peculiarly crisp and decided manner. Possibly I looked the discouragement I was beginning to feel, for he added, in a kindlier tone: 'Are you good at taking a hint?'

"I don't know," I answered, while my face flushed painfully.

"What I wish to say is this,' said he, smiling at my embarrassment; 'If I were in want of a clerk, I would not engage a young man who came seeking employment with a flashy ring upon his finger, and swinging a fancy cane.'

For a moment mortified vanity struggled against common sense, but sense got the victory, and I replied, with rather a shaky voice, I am afraid, 'I am very much obliged to you,' and beat a hasty retreat. As soon as I got out of sight I slipped the ring into my pocket, and walking rapidly to the Worcester depot, I left the cane in charge of the baggage-master 'until called for.' It is there now, for aught I know. At any rate I never called for it. That afternoon I obtained a situation with the firm of which I am now a partner.—Ex.

GEMS OF PIETY.

BY REV. J. MASON.

Selected for the Crisis, by A. M. A.

Fear God for his power, trust him for his wisdom, love him for his goodness, praise him for his greatness, believe him for his faithfulness, and adore him for his holiness.

God repented that he made man, but never repented that he redeemed man.

We may know what God intends for us, by what he hath wrought in us.

God takes notice of every particular child of his, as if there were none else; and yet takes notice of all, as if they were but one man.

There is a sure rule—God never takes any thing from his people, but he gives them something better in the stead of it.

The more we fear God, the less we shall fear man.

If God's earthly presence is so good, what is his heavenly presence? If the love of God set us to work, the God of love will pay us our wages.

They that deny themselves for Christ, shall enjoy themselves in Christ.

Men had rather hear of Christ crucified for them, than be crucified for Christ.

If Christ denied innocent nature out of love to us, shall not we deny corrupt nature out of love to him?

If we are willing, God will help us; if sincere, God will accept us. A serious remembrance of God, is the fountain of obedience to God.

If God hath done that good for us which he hath denied to the world, we ought to do that service for him which is denied him by the world.

Uneven walking, with a neglect of watching, makes a disconsolate soul.

Four things a christian should especially labor after; viz.: to be humble and thankful, watchful and cheerful.

Salvation draws near to man when it is his main care. Religion must be our business, then it will be our delight.

It will cost something to be a christian; it will cost more not to be one.

The gate that leads to life is a straight gate, therefore we should fear; it is an open gate, therefore we should hope.

Do the Lord's work in the Lord's time.

Pray whilst God hears; hear whilst God speaks; believe whilst God promises; obey whilst God commands.

That man hath no sense of mercy that wants a sense of duty.

Two duties must run through a christian's life, like the warp through the wool—blessing and trusting.

We may judge of our eternal state by our spiritual state; and our spiritual state by the delightful and customary actions of our lives.

If we expect to live with Christ in heaven, we must live to him on earth.

Let not religion be your diversion, but your business.

If sin does not taste bitter, Christ cannot taste sweet.

Presumption abuses Christ; despair refuses him.

If we would stand, Christ must be our foundation; if we would be safe, Christ must be our sanctuary.

Christ satisfied God to the uttermost, and therefore can save sinners to the uttermost.

None are so lowly as Christ was, none so loving.

Our Judge instead of condemning us, stepped from the bench and died for us.

It matters not who are our accusers, if Christ be our advocate.

We must commit our souls to God's keeping, and submit ourselves to God's disposing.

We should obey his revealed will, and then be resigned to his providential will.

Neither contentment nor discontentment arises from the outward condition, but from the inward disposition.

God had rather his people should fare poorly than live proudly.

A christian should never say he hath nothing to do.

WANT OF PUNCTUALITY.

It is astonishing how many people there are who neglect punctuality. Thouands have failed in life from this cause alone. It is not only a serious vice in itself, but it is the fruitful parent of numerous other vices, so that he who becomes the victim of it, gets involved in toils from which it is almost impossible to escape. It makes the merchant wasteful of time; it saps the business and reputation of the lawyer, and it injures the prospects of the mechanic. In a word, there is not a profession, nor a station in life, which is not liable to the canker of this most destructive habit. Many and many a time has the failure of one man to meet obligations brought on the ruin of a score of others. Thousands remain poor all their lives, who, if they were more faithful in their word, would secure a large run of custom, and so make their fortunes. Be punctual, if you would succeed.

PREACHING.

Be simple in your preaching. Jesus was, Paul was, and all successful preachers have been so.

Be not too rapid; such preaching is like the hasty shower; rather imitate the steady rain, which soaks, softens, fructifies.

Preach down sin, and preach up holiness.
Preach down self, and preach up Christ.
Preach prayerfully as before God.
Preach to the conscience and the heart.

Aim to please God in every sermon, and in every sentence.

Never let the flock stray for want of pasture; let there be food for the soul in every sermon.

It is grievous to think how many go away from sermons with the word of grace in their ears, but not the work of grace in their hearts.—Ex.

VERBAL VICES.

TO MY YOUNG FRIENDS:—Let me say to you, that indulgence in verbal vice soon encourages corresponding vices in conduct. Let any one of us come to talk about any mean, low, or vile practice with a familiar, countenancing tone of voice, and when the opportunity occurs for committing the mean or vile act, do you think it likely that we would be as strong against it as before?

It is by no means an unknown thing that men of correct lives and correct habits talk themselves into crimes, into sensuality, and finally into perdition. On the same principle, bad language easily runs into bad deeds. Select any sin you please; then suffer yourself to converse in its dialect, to use its slang, to speak in the character of one who approves or relishes it, and I need not tell you how soon your or my moral sense will lower down its level. Thus, becoming intimate with it, we soon lose our horrors of it. This obvious principle of itself furnishes a good reason for faithfully watching that "unruly member," the tongue! P. TANDY.

FORGETTING SELF.

"Dear Bessie," said Mrs. Riley to her little daughter, "I am so glad you are trying to overcome that naughty habit of taking the largest apple, the best seat, and always thinking of yourself first, instead of last."

Bessie. Indeed, mamma, I am trying; I had just got that beautiful large apple to my mouth, when I saw you looking quite frightened. I knew what you meant, and I gave it to John in a moment. It was very hard work, for I do love apples so very much. Mamma, you said you would tell me about a little girl you once knew, that you would like me to imitate.

Mrs. R. I will do so at this moment, my child. Little Grace was not pretty, but every one loved her. She took no delight in fine clothes, yet she was never without ornament: for she had a "meek and quiet spirit," which is ever more beautiful than any outward show of finery. I am sure none could be with her long without receiving some little kind attention from her. Like you, Grace found it very difficult at first to love her neighbor as herself. She would often say, I wish I knew some very good person for me to try and be like; and then her good mother would tell her of the dear Savior, who went about healing the sick, giving sight to the blind, making the lame to walk, and binding up the broken-hearted. Grace loved to hear this; and she would say, with her little face beaming with love to this dear Savior, "Mother, I will try to be like him; for though I cannot cure people, and give them sight, yet I can help them, and try to comfort them by loving words and kind actions. And I can be gentle and patient to brother John when he vexes me and is very disagreeable. Oh! it will be very hard work, but I know you will help me, mother; and Jesus too, for he loves little children, and rejoices when he sees them trying to do right for his sake."

And now, Bessie, this delightful child is a good, useful, happy woman. She is still striving every day to be like Jesus. Can you guess who it is? for it is some one you know quite well.

Bessie. Papa had a sister Grace, and his name is John; is it Aunt Holyard, mamma?

Mrs. R. Yes, Bessie, it is your own aunt, whom we all love so much, because she is so kind to every one; often forgetting herself in her eagerness to please and serve others. How glad I shall be when I see my Bessie forgetting herself.

Bessie pomised to try.

Dear little reader! will you join Bessie in trying to forget yourself, and in being like Jesus, who never hurt, annoyed or neglected any one. Fancy him smiling down from heaven upon you, and that will make you very anxious to go on pleasing him. He will help you to overcome the naughtiest fault you have. You cannot be good and kind without his help; but always remember he loves to help the little ones.

All my nature is unholy,
Pride and passion dwell within;
But the Lord was meek and lowly,
And was never known to sin.

Lord! though now thou art in glory,
We have thine example still;
I can read thy sacred story,
And obey thy holy will.

Help me by that rule to measure
Every word and every thought;
Thinking it my greatest pleasure
There to learn what thou hast taught.

GOOD MANNERS.

"Will you please to have this seat, sir? I prefer to stand," said a fine little boy, who was sitting in a pew, to an old gentleman who was standing in the aisle.

"Thank you, my little man," said the gentleman, smiling very graciously upon the little fellow, "and you shall sit upon my knee, if you please."

When the service closed, the gentleman inquired of him his name, and asked him, "Why did you give up your good seat?"

"Mother teaches me, sir,' said he, "never to sit when an older person is standing near me."

Now look at another scene.

"Will you let the ladies have seats, and you sit on the form yonder? said a gentleman to four boys in a pew.

"I shan't," says one.

"They may sit on the form themselves, if they please," said another.

Not one of them moved. All the people near turned and looked with surprise and disgust upon them.

"They can't be Sabbath School scholars," one remarked.

"At any rate," another said, "they have had no good bringing up at home."

Very soon the sexton came and ordered them all out of the pew. They were obliged to obey, and out they marched with their heads hanging down, looking so ashamed. Nobody, however, pitied them.

Which example, children, is the most worthy of imitation—that of the polite boy, or of the four obstinate ones? And which honored their parents most?—Nation.

JOHN HANDSON'S NIGHT WORK.

John Handson was a bluff boy of fifteen. He was a smart, active, fearless fellow; the boys thought a good deal of him, and he thought a good deal of them, and a good deal of himself. On one occasion his father had business which called him to a distant city, and left John to "take care" of the family. John felt proud of his trust, and did well for several days, acting under the counsel and advice of his mother, just as he ought to have done. By-and-by he grew impatient, and did many things quite independent of her. The younger children did not like his sayings and doings at all. "He orders us around," they said, "as if he were king."

At last he took the entire management of things, and one day acted not only against his mother's wishes, but talked very ill-temperedly to her. Going to bed that night, he could not sleep. His conduct towards his mother troubled him, and he tossed from one side of the bed to the other, trying to get an easy place. He blamed the bed, and Bridget who made it, and then he thought he was sick, and worried along for some time; in fact, John suspected what the matter really was, only he was too proud to own it. He knew it was his treatment of his mother that troubled him, and for a long time he tried to sleep it off, or think of something else, or excuse himself in one way or another.

Happily John did not succeed. Conscience would do its work, and John listened to all that it said; and the consequence was that, pretty near midnight, for it was as late as that, the boy got up, stole to his mother's chamber, and with tears in his eyes, and penitence in his heart, begged her to forgive him. "And oh! he says, now that he is a man, "it was the sweetest moment of my life when I was forgiven."

That hour was the turning point in that boy's life. If he that night had hardened himself, the next day he would probably have behaved worse than before, and so on, and on until the bad boy became a bad man. But John yielded to the voice of conscience and he made thorough work of it. He confessed his fault, and asked to be forgiven, and experienced the sweets of forgiveness. The next day John's management was improved; he was more kind and considerate towards his brothers and sisters, and respectful towards his mother; and he was prepared by it afterwards to taste the sweets of God's forgiveness and favor. His word to every boy is, "If you have wronged your mother, be sure to own your fault, and ask to be forgiven. Harden not your hearts, boys."

☞ Be kind and obliging to all, but intimate only with the good. Thus you will gain esteem, and offend nobody.

THE CHRISTIAN'S WALK.

Christian! walk carefully, danger is near,
On in thy journey, with trembling and fear;
Snares from without and temptations within,
Seek to entice thee again into sin.

Christian! walk cheerfully, though the fierce storm
Darken the sky with the clouds of alarm;
Soon will those clouds and the tempest be past,
And thou dwell in safety with Jesus at last.

Christian! walk humbly; exult not in pride;
All that thou hast is by Jesus supplied;
Hold thee still up, he directeth thy ways,
To him be forever the glory and praise.

Christian! walk steadfastly while it is light,
Swift are approaching the shadows of night;
All that thy Master hath bidden thee do,
Haste to perform, for thy moments are few.

Christian! walk prayerfully; oft wilt thou fall,
If thou forget on thy Savior to call;
But safe shalt thou walk thro' each trial and care,
If thou art clad in the armor of prayer.

Christian! walk hopefully; trouble and pain
Cease when the haven of rest thou dost gain;
This from the lips of the Judge thy reward—
"Enter forever the joy of thy Lord"!

For the World's Crisis.

A PREPARATION FOR THE COMING OF THE LORD.

WHAT CONSTITUTES IT?

BY O. R. FASSETT.

This question, so important, is answered by considering what was necessary to make the people ready for the first advent of the Messiah. John the Baptist thundered the words over Judea and the whole region of Palestine: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."

It was customary among Oriental tribes and nations for a herald to go before a prince, or a hero, or a distinguished individual, and announce his coming, and make a suitable preparation for it, and that the people might be prepared to do him honor. This Oriental custom Jesus followed by sending his messenger before him. Matt. 3: 1—6. This had been predicted. Isa. 40: 3; Mal. 3: 1—6; and 4: 5—6.

Accordingly John the Baptist, after near four hundred years of reticence of the prophets and priests, issues from the wilderness of Judea, and startles the people by his earnest annunciation of the Lord's advent among them. He came dressed as old Elijah (2 Kings 1: 8; Matt. 3: 4) and in his power and spirit fulfilled his appointed mission, as confirmed by the language of Christ, Matt. 11: 13—15.

The Jewish Sanhedrin appointed a delegation of their priests to visit the remarkable prophet, to ascertain, if possible, who he was or claimed to be (John 1: 19—27); whether the promised Christ—"that Prophet," whom Moses predicted, or "Elias." John answered them definitely, that he was neither "Christ," nor "that Prophet," nor "Elias;" but was the voice of his messenger. Rebuking him for baptizing, seeing he professed to be none of these personages, they left him to his course; for they could do nothing, as the people were gone after him. Matt. 3: 5.

Nearly all the Jewish nation, however, could but be convinced that he was a distinguished prophet. He bore all the marks of this fact. Matt. 11: 11. And seeing he was not the Christ, the Devil and his emissiaries thought they would let him go on in peace, for they had nothing to fear from him; and did so, until his peculiar mission was fulfilled, when he was beheaded. By this admission however, the nation of the Jews were shut up to the faith that his Successor was no less than the long promised Messiah. Matt. 21: 25—27. But, what was the preparations requisite on the part of the people to meet the advent of their Lord? What did John the Baptist, Christ's forerunner, say was required of them?

1st Negatively. Place or position among the leading sects of the time was not sufficient to constitute a readiness. Matt. 3: 7. The Pharisees and Sadduces were the leading sects of that day. The Doctors of Divinity among them, and those sitting in Moses' seat, as the rulers and instructors of the people, together with the membership of their churches, and attendance on their ministry in the synagogues, needed something more to make them ready for the reception of the Messiah. As they were, they were exposed to the wrath to come." (v. 7."

2d. Negatively. To be a Jew, or a descendant of Abraham, of true and unquestioned lineal genealogy, was not sufficient. Matt. 3: 9, 10. Such may be "Devils,"—or a "generation of vipers," with all their distinguished origin, according to the flesh. John 8: 33—39.

Something more was required. What was it?

Affirmatively. 1st, Repentance. Matt. 3: 2. "Repent ye," "Repent," "Repent," was the cry of John. Jesus when he began his ministry,—of the chosen twelve—and of "the seventy," sent to Israel before the coming of their king into Jerusalem, as predicted by the prophet Zech. 9: 9. Repentance consists in "a godly sorrow for sin, and a reformation of life." "Bring forth therefore fruits answerable to amendment of life," (v. 8.) is the language of John.

2d. Baptism was required. Matt. 3: 5—6. John, was sent to baptize with water, (v. 11.) and on the banks of Jordan, because there was much water there," he took his stand, and preached to gathering crowds, and in Jordan baptized believers. If it was necessary for him to baptize, it was required of the people to be baptized. Jesus himself gave the people an example and fulfilled "all righteousness," in this particular. (v. 13—17.) If he did so, the people were required to follow his example, and obey the command to be baptized. Those who did not, were not justified. Jesus says, "And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John; but the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." Luke 7: 29. 30.

3d. A public confession of sin was requisite. Matt. 3: 6. Secret sins must be confessed in secret before God. Public sins, and an open wicked life, must be confessed publicly. By word of mouth, and in the ordinance of baptism, this is to be done. Rom. 6: 3—6.

4th. Belief in the near advent of the Lord was necessaay. For how could they be prepared to do him honor without this? And of what use was the ministry of John the Baptist, if his message was not to be relied and acted upon? His enunciate was: "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." That of Christ and the twelve and the seventy was,—"The kingdom of heaven is at hand." "The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." "The gospel of the kingdom," as preached by them all, before Jesus entered into Jerusalem in triumph as their promised king, and before his rejection by them as a nation was: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the good news." This constituted the gospel of the kingdom. In it was preached time, and all were required to believe the good news. Some began to believe and follow Jesus in the beginning of his ministry. John 1: 29—51. Many hailed him, and honored him as their king at its close. Matt. 21st ch. Thus, repentance, baptism, confession of sins, and faith in the near advent of the Messiah, as their king, was a pre-requisite to meet the Lord at his first coming.

The reward following was: 1st. A baptism of the Holy Ghost. 2d. To be gathered as the wheat into the garner of God. 3d. Made heirs of the kingdom of heaven. Matt. 3: 2, 11, 12.

The result following a want of preparation was:—1st. Exposure to the wrath to come. 2d. A baptism of fire. 3d. To be burned up, as the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3: 7, 11, 12.

"Prepare ye the way of the Lord." Is again heard, not only in Judea, but throughout the whole world. What mean those voices proclaiming everywhere, the times are fulfilled, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, repent and believe the good news? They mean, 1st, That the Oriental custom will be carried out in respect to Christ's second advent; and that he will have his messenger herald his coming, and prepare his way before him, that a people may be ready to honor him at his coming.

2d, That a preparation is needful, on the part of the people, to meet the coming of the Lord as "the king over all the earth."

That his second advent will be heralded to the nations before his coming, is evident from the following Scriptures: Joel 2: 1—2; Matt. 24: 14, 45—51; 25: 1—13; Rev. 14; 6, 7; which scriptures are now being remarkably fulfilled in all the world; and hundreds of voices are heralding "the gospel of the king dom" to the nations.

But what is necessary to prepare one for the Lord's second appearing, and to stand before him in judgment?

Answer. 1st, Negatively. Place or position among the religious sects of Christendom, merely, will not prepare one to meet and hail the Lord as king. It is evident that the professed christian church at large, will be unprepared for the coming of Christ, together with her religious teachers, as was the Jewish church. Jeremiah 23: 16—32; 25: 15, 38: Matt. 24: 48—51; Matt. 25: 10—12; 2 Tim. 3: 1—5; Rev. 3: 14—22.

2d Negatively. To be a Jew, or the descendant of Abraham, will not entitle one to be respected more than others. Those who declare Jesus of Nazareth still an impostor; who spit on his name, and utter the anathema, "let his bones rot who dare dispute the times of the Messiah;" etc, of that nation, are "the children of the Devil," and "a generation of vipers;" and whosoever declares that because they are the lineal descendants of Abraham, they are ready for the Lord's advent, and entitled to especial respect, are "giving heed to Jewish fables," and building up a sectarian wall, and daubing it with untempered mortar (their own theology) against the divine will, and divine testimony. Beware! ye Judaizers, how you confront John the Baptist to his face, (Matt. 3: 9, 10); teach Jesus Christ doctrine, siding with the hypocritical Jew in his controversy, John 8: 37—44; Matt. 23: 13—33; and St. Paul's theology, in your pride of opinion. Rom. 2: 28, 29. Only Israelites indeed, like Nathaniel of that nation, will be prepared for the Lord's coming. "The Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord."

These constitute "all Israel" who shall be saved. "Shall any teach God knowledge?

Affirmatively. 1st. Repentance on the part of all, in the christian sects, and out of it, who need to repent of pride, formality and wickedness, is a requisite to meet the Lord. The Scriptures are abundant.

2d. Baptism by immersion, on the part of all who believe in the resurrection of the dead, and the forgiveness of sins, is a requirement. And all who have not been baptized since they have believed the gospel for themselves, should be without delay. Infant baptism, with the understanding that it regenerates, and is sufficient, is an error that Mr. Spurgeon is now showing up under the power of the spirit, to the confusion of the whole church of England! God speed him in his work.

3d. Open confession of all public sinful acts, and a wicked life before men, required by the Lord; also a secret confession of all private sins, and public sins, before God, must be made in bitterness of soul; and if we thus "confess our sins," "he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

4th. Belief in "the Gospel of the Kingdom;" and a faith in the immediate advent of the Lord, is required of men who have the opportunities of enlightenment; and a position of waiting, and watchfulness, and love for his appearing. Matt. 25: 10. "They that were ready went in, and the door was shut." Luke 21st: 31, 35, 36. Those who know "that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand," and watch and pray continually, "escape" the "snare," and "stand before the Son of man." Luke 21st ch. "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. "A crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give . . . unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8. "Love or dread for Christ's appearing is a sure index of a true or false christian."—Wesley.

The reward in store for those prepared is: 1st. The baptism of the Holy Spirit,—purified, and made white.

2d. Gathered as the wheat into the garner of the Lord,—saved as his jewels, and presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.

3d. The reward of the kingdom. Matt. 25.

The end of those who refuse to prepare for the coming of the King and Judge of all the earth is:

Exposure to the wrath of God—a baptism of fire, and a complete destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. Matt. 3: 11—12; Matt. 4: 1.

My fellow mortal, whose eye may rest upon this sentence, in the name of God, prepare for the Lord's coming. Make preparation at once, by repentance, confession of all sins, baptism, and a christian faith in Jesus Christ and his coming. Do it without delay.

A SHORT SERMON.

"The serpent said unto the woman, ye shall not surely die."—GEN. 3: 4.

It seems to be rather bad policy to take the Devil's lie for a text; but we may gain some profitable instruction, if we proceed carefully, and examine the subject before us in the light of divine truth. We are informed by inspiration that the devil was a liar from the beginning; and of course it was the devil, in the form of a serpent, that told the dreadful falsehood to the woman, which led her to partake of the forbidden fruit, and gave it to her husband, who also ate of it, and thereby brought death upon their posterity. What a train of suffering and sorrow has followed the human family ever since the fall.

How is it, dear reader, that a large class of the professed christians of the present day are determined to make out that what the serpent told the woman was a positive truth; and that what God told Adam was a lie! Our ortho dox friends say there are two parts, or two natures, in man,—the immortal soul, and mortal body. We would here ask the important question, which did God command not to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil? Was it the immortal soul, or mortal body? Dear reader, we have got into a bad spot for our orthodox friends; for if we say it was the immortal soul, then the death penalty was pronounced on the soul, and it must die; and if they say that it meant spiritual death, or dead in trespasses and sins, then it would be saying, if you eat of the forbidden fruit, you shall be a sinner! That would be no penalty at all; but if they say that it was the body that was to suffer the penalty of death, then, in that case, the immortal soul would escape the penalty entirely. How shall we get out of this dilemma?

I will try to tell how we can come at the truth, and the facts in the case; and show that our Creator told the truth, and nothing but the truth; and that the great deceiver told a lie in the garden of Eden, when he said to the woman she should "not surely die."

In the first place, the soul of Adam was the whole man, made from the dust; and when Adam began to breathe he was then "a living soul"; and when God took away his breath he was a dead soul; for, in Gen. 2: 7, God declares that the man (made from dust) himself was "a living soul" as soon as he began to breathe. And God said to the same dust man, in Gen. 3: 19, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This is the same dust man whom God, in Gen. 2: 7, declared to be the "living soul"; so we see that it was the whole man that was the "living soul"; and the whole man that received the command from God not to eat the forbidden fruit; and the penalty was pronounced on the whole man; and when Adam died, the whole man died, and returned to dust; and as we are the posterity of Adam, we have the same fallen nature in us, and must die. And now, what are the facts in the case? We answer, that Adam did die within one of God's days, which is a thousand years; and as we are all mortal, in consequence of the fall in Adam, and are dying creatures, we shall all die in Adam; and shall all be made alive in Christ; and those who die in their sins will, at the resurrection, die "the second death." The facts, then, in the case, show that Satan was a liar from the beginning; and I think he has been a liar ever since that time. Let us not keep spreading that lie by saying that man has an immortal soul in him as a separate entity, lest we become a partaker of Satan's falsehood, and guilty also of charging a lie upon God.

If the soul is a separate entity from the body, and never dies; then it has no part in the resurrection; and, of course, could not be blessed and holy with those who have a "part in the first resurrection."

Dear reader, the holy book informs us, 1 Tim. 1: 17, that "the only wise God" is "immortal"; and 1 Tim. 6: 16, we are informed that God "only hath immortality"; in 2 Tim. 1: 10, we read that Jesus "abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." How was this done by the gospel? We answer, by the blessed truth that Jesus is our life—eternal life; the one who is to give us eternal life, and make us immortal at the resurrection of the dead.

Dear reader, that great lie that was told in the garden of Eden, by the serpent, is the foundation of modern Spiritualism, Roman Catholicism, Mormonism, Shakerism, Mohammedanism, immortal-soulism, and endless misery. May the good Lord lead us in the right way, and save us at last in his kingdom.

TO A FRIEND.

Creeds may grow old, and systems decay,
And theories be lost forever;
Wealth may depart, and fly in a day,
But friendship that's true, dieth never.

Time passeth by, and yesterday's grave
Buries all that the present may sever,
But above the falling and fallen doth wave
The motto, "Friendship that's true, dieth never."

Eternity's dear, and hope spreads its wings,
Life brightens, and seems a rich treasure,
When the angel of Peace broods o'er me and sings:
"Love, Friendship and Truth last forever."

DEFINITE TIME AGAIN.

I am truly astonished at the sudden and precipitant manner in which some of our friends leap into this turbid and dangerous sea of "definite time." When the unstable, or the inexperienced, untaught and untrained, make such leaps, it does not cause any wonder; but to see preachers of the gospel, who have been more than once mistaken and sorely disappointed, risk in the same direction, with far looser testimony than ever before, does astound some of us. I cannot have any heart to oppose any good, reasonable and consistent "time argument" on the event of the second advent of my Redeemer, by whomsoever expressed; but to be continually "twisting and turning" human and divine chronology to "separate out" a peculiar theory of the time of that event, does not, reasoning from past experience, promise well, unless one is cer tain, absolutely, of the whole truth.

In the case of Mr. Thurman's system, are any sure of the whole truth? Are there no possible mistakes? Are his references historical all exactly right? We will not now dispute his ecliptical calculations; but has he yoked them all exactly with the historical events duly? Some of us think not, and in due time this will be shown. We, some of us, think his quotations from history exceeding lame, and his scriptural applications absolutely monstrous! When we see some of our friends following him in some of his applications of Scripture, we are fain to wonder at their perception.

Dear friends, will it not be better to move with a little more caution before plunging into this matter too deep?

"There will be no failure this time.' 'Some of us have heard that cry before. Yes, a good many times before. Yes, and been witnesses of the effects too. Jehu can drive the chariot, but who picks up the wounded? A well balanced mind moves cautiously. Some minds conclude more suddenly. "Let your moderation be known unto all men." "He that believeth shall not make haste. Did you ever think the same great Teacher who tells us to know when it is near even at the doors, tells the same "ye" who are to know this truth, that "ye" know not when the time is?" See Matt. 24 and Mark 13.

WHO ARE THE BLESSED?

The Psalmist says: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the council of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful."—Ps. 1: 1. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.—Ps. 2: 12. "Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust."—Ps. 40: 4. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble."—Ps. 41: 1. "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled. Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God. Blessed are the peace-makers; for they shall be called the children of God. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.—Matt. 5: 3—11.

"Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it."—Lk. 11: 28. "Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching."—Lk. 12: 37. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."—Jas. 1: 12. "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the lamb."—Rev. 19: 9. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth; yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."—Rev. 14: 13. "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."—Rev. 22: 14.

May we, who profess to be the followers of Christ and are looking for his speedy coming, be found ready when Jesus comes; that he can say of us, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25: 34.

INFIDELITY.

There has been a growing tendency to infidelity for several years past. The cause I can not divine; but I have watched its development from small beginning to the present monster. I was startled thirty years ago to hear a Baptist minister give as his opinion, that the book of Job was a fiction or fable,—a novel written by Moses. Again, some twenty years since, I heard the tutor at Oberlin college deny the personality of the devil; since which time, I have frequently heard the same doctrine advocated by professed christians. How much greater is the step to deny the personality of the Deity! We should then have the Spiritualists' God in all nature. Some christians hold to the bare idea that what are termed the parables of our Savior are fables, or supposed cases. But if we carefully note the reading, we observe that he generally commenced with a positive declaration; as, "Behold a sower went forth to sow." Matt. 13: 3. "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho."—Luke 10: 30. Or, take the simple parable of Matt. 13: 33; "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal." Here you see it asserts that it was positively done.

But is it not called in Scripture a parable? Yes, sure, but what is a parable? Not a fiction; not a falsehood, by which to compare something. No, a truth; a fact by which to illustrate some more intricate fact, and make it plain. And, I think, perhaps here was the origin of much of the infidel belief among the churches of the present day. Think Jesus Christ could originate fables? could originate for parables things which never occurred? Why not suppose Moses made up the story of Job? And if our teachers are so regardless of truth, why not believe that Satan is a character, and not a being? As well may we take the next step with Spiritualists, and say God is not a being, but a principle. O, let us have a whole Bible, and believe that what it says is truth. MINER CAWKINS.

2 PETER 1: 14, 15.

"Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance."

In Clarke's Commentary," we find the following upon the above:—

"The real Peter was not open to the eye, nor palpable to the touch; he was concealed in that tabernacle, vulgarly supposed to be Peter. There is a thought very similar to this in the last conversation of Socrates with his friends. As the great man was about to drink the poison to which he was condemned by the Athenian judges, his friend CRITO said, 'But how would you be buried?'—SOCRATES, 'Just as you please, if you can but catch me, and I do not elude your pursuit.' Then gently smiling, he said, 'I cannot persuade CRITO that I AM that Socrates who now converses with you; but he thinks that I am he whom he shall shortly see dead; and he asks how I would be buried? I have asserted that, after I have drunk the poison, I should no longer remain with you, but shall depart to certain felicities of the blessed.'"

Thus the learned Commentator, and the great Philosopher; but not thus did the apostle Peter teach. His Master had told him, "When thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldst not. This spake he signifying by what death he should glorify God."—John 21: 18, 19.

Peter had always taught that the righteous would enjoy the felicities of glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ. He says in 1 Pet. 5: 4, "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." And Peter gives them assurance in the next verse to that wherein he speaks of his DECEASE, by the following words: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty."

More of the teachings of Peter may be learned by reading his epistles and his sermons recorded by Luke in Acts 2: 14–36, 3: 12–26. The phrase, "put off this my tabernacle," simply means, I must die; "be unclothed," as Paul expresses it in 2 Cor. 5: 4. Christ speaks of "the temple of his body," where it is certain he does not mean that his body dwelt in another body, but means himself. Hence, "put off this my tabernacle," "be unclothed," are merely figurative expressions for decease, death, dissolution, etc. Of the popular interpretation of "decease," Socrates was an ardent supporter; but how strange does the interpretation appear when fully carried out. A murderer is hung for his crime, yet escapes from his tenement at the time of his execution, to laugh at those who supposed they had hung him. So the murderer has not killed men, women, nor children. He plunged the steel into their houses or tabernacles, but the real men, women and children were "not palpable to the touch" of cold steel, and "were concealed in those tabernacles vulgarly called" men, women and children; hence they went to the "spheres" and "spirit land," "safe and sound."

Again: we have not seen our fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, nor friends, but merely their caskets in which they are concealed. Query: "Shall we know each other there?" So no one has been killed since the war commenced, and, according to the Mohammedan ministers of Christendom, all have gone straight to glory. The rifle balls, bullets, cannon balls, bomb shells, swords and bayonets, merely knocked or cut holes through their "mortal coils," letting them out in rather a summary manner, to be sure; but, never mind, as long as the man could not be injured by the missiles of death, they can rejoice in getting rid of "the old clog."

No wonder that the resurrection of the dead is seldom referred to by the masses. If nobody is dead, pray tell me what the resurrection of the dead means? Says Clarke on 15th Cor.:—"One remark I cannot help making: the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive christians than it is now! How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience and cheerfulness through it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it. So apostles preached, and so primitive christians believed: so we preach, and so our hearers believe. (Doubted. F. H. B.) There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid; and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect." F. H. BURBANK.

IS IT RIGHT?

Yes is it right to have the poor preacher go so far to preach and not get scarcely anything? Should you like to be in his place, when he goes home to his wife and family, she having worked very hard to take care of her little ones, and get a little money to buy some provision for them to eat; and when her husband comes home, hear her tell how eagerly she had watched for his return, and had kept the evening meal waiting so as to share it with him; and then, as she asks him "how much did they give you this time, husband, for this is all we have, and I have kept it waiting for you, that we might all share it together?" and hear him tell her,—"nothing, this time wife; but we must trust in God, and all will yet be well. Do you wonder that tears like rain flow from her eyes as she looks upon her little ones? And yet she does not murmur nor complain; but with a calm trust in God, she seeks her closet and pours forth her petition to One who is ever ready to hear the cries of his children. And as she arises from her knees, she feels sure that the Lord will hear the cries of the poor and needy, and surely he will. And now let us take these things right home. Are we living as the word of God commands us?

Is it right to have the family of those we love to hear preach almost suffer for the things we enjoy? O do consider upon these things, ere its too late. Just think of them, ye who have heaped dollar upon dollar and are not willing to give scarcely a cent. What will be your answer, when the Judge says, I was hungry and ye fed me not; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick and ye visited me not? It is true the Master will come soon to reckon with us; O take heed to your ways, and when the preacher comes again, do not say I have not got any money, hope I shall have next time you come; but remember that other things will do as much good as the money. It takes money to buy those things. Be wise. Do as you would be done by. PHEBE.

CHRISTIAN CONTROVERSY.—DISPUTATION.

I believe in controversy and disputation, when they are carried on in harmony; but am adverse to them when they are carried on with hardness, which has a tendency to divide the children of God, rather than to unite them. Christianity was established by controversy and disputation. Its author, Jesus Christ, at the early age of twelve years was found disputing with the Jewish doctors in the temple, and he subsequently confronted the Pharisees and Sadduces, on the subject of mercy, liberality, moral duty, and the resurrection. Paul followed the footsteps of his Master. He confronted the Epicurians and Stoics at Athens, reasoned with the Jews in the synagogue, and with devout persons daily in the markets, and disputed in the school of Tyrannus, for the space of two years.

And when, at length, the dark clouds of corruption and dissipation had well nigh obscured the beauties of primitive christianity, the spell was broken; and society faced again towards truth, by the controversial labors of Luther and his noble compeers; who brought about what is called the Protestant religion.

In due time, John Wesley came upon the stage. He gave much light upon the Scriptures of truth, which caused a great reformation, both in Europe and America.

The day of controversy has not yet passed away. Our views are asserted on every side, and we must defend and explain them. Our characters are assaulted. Hence, while we are ready always to give to all a reason of the hope that is within us; let us live so at the same time, as to give to all who know us, the evidence that they who have this hope in them, purify themselves from all iniquity. We should lay before them, by precept and example, the beauties of christianity. How lovely they shine from a pure heart. Christianity gives to the mind a commendable spirit of charity, which all are called upon to exercise towards their fellow-men.

Surely we see as much need of controversy now, as in the days of Christ and his apostles. Just let us look at those who call themselves Spiritualists, and thousands of other unbelievers, who set at nought the principles of christianity, and are treading it under their feet If there was ever a day for us to confront them, it is now. Therefore let us work with energy. Never was there a time that needed i[t] more than now. Brethren let us be faithf[ul] in the cause of this glorious work, and Go[d] will bless our efforts.

Controversy is so purely a labor of the intellect, it should be waged cautiously an[d] prayerfully, and never till our moral feeling[s] have become in a good degree predominant. Not like a few bigots in this day, who are running head-long in controversy for no othe[r] purpose than to enhance their names hig[h] above their compeers. Brethren, such controversies should never be named, and surely they never will be blest. Therefore whateve[r] we do, in a controversial way, let us do it fo[r] the glory of God, and the good of his children. J. ELKINS.

AN APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS.

Such is the end of the course of this age. Its commerce and its pleasures, its politic[s] and its religion, its philanthropy and its misanthropy, its hypocrisy and its blasphemy its morality, and its open wickedness, all fin[d] their termination here. Christian readers what shall we say to these things? We hav[e] glanced through Scripture and gathered u[p] the sum of its testimony as to the judgment[s] which are impending. And now with all thes[e] predictions before us, what is to be the effec[t] of the inquiry on our souls? Shall we no[t] look into these things, and prayerfully an[d] patiently inquire whether we have as ye[t] understood God's mind respecting them. When He speaks so constantly and impressively of judgment, can we have been right i[n] taking it for granted that the gospel woul[d] silently progress, christianity gradually spread and the world's condition continually improve till the millennium should commence? An[d] can we think of these things—can we loo[k] at the unconverted around us hastening unconsciously to destruction, without bein[g] moved? Can we behold the worldling like [a] man in a boat drifting down a rapid stream with his back to the danger, entertaining himself, as he looks up the river, with all th[e] gay, pleasant objects which are flitting pas[t] him, whilst each moment bears him onwar[d] to the falls, where he must ere long b[e] dashed to pieces, without attempting to rescue him from the overthrow? Can we thin[k] of such a doom as awaits the world in whic[h] we sojourn, and not weep over its guilty condemned inhabitants? Did Jesus weep ove[r] one city, and say, "If thou hadst known, a[t] least in this thy day, the things which belon[g] unto thy peace! but now they are hid fro[m] thine eyes," and shall not our hearts melt—shall not our tears flow, for a whole worl[d] that lieth in wickedness, and daily ripens fo[r] destruction?

The hour of judgment, near as it may be has not yet come. The door of mercy stil[l] stands open: yea, as yet it opens into th[e] scene of those heavenly delights and brida[l] glories which Christ and the church shal[l] share, ere he comes forth from the weddin[g] to execute vengeance on his foes. And shal[l] we not use the opportunity to sound forth th[e] gospel of God's grace? Shall we not war[n] and entreat our poor fellow-sinners, and earnestly beseech them, as the apostle Paul did to be reconciled to God? Knowing the judgments which await the world around us knowing that grace has rescued us from thes[e] judgments, and that when they are executed we ourselves shall be with Him who execute[s] them, is it possible that we can selfishly enjoy the thought of our own security, an[d] leave the poor world unwarned, the grace o[f] Christ and the Father's love unproclaimed or poor sinners uninvited—unurged—UNINTREATED to flee to the shelter of his ope[n] arms? O for more earnest love to Christ an[d] deeper compassion for poor souls.

Brethren, the time is short. The moments glide rapidly away. Soon will the only opportunity be gone that we shall ever have o[f] confessing our Master, and seeking his glory, in the midst of a world which either reject[s] him openly, or the more decidedly rejects hi[m] in reality, for owning him in appearance an[d] in word. May his own Spirit animate us. May our hearts be soft, and tender and humble. May communion with him cause th[e] fountains of compassion for those around u[s] to gush forth. May souls be gathered to hi[s] arms of mercy. May his people be stirred u[p] to pray, and watch, and labor. May we humble ourselves, and stir up and exhort on[e] another, and so much the more as we see th[e] day approaching!

GEMS OF PIETY.

God is in good earnest with us; we ought therefore to be so with him.

They that do nothing are in the ready way to do that which is worse than nothing.

If we hide our talent in the earth, we shall lose our treasure in heaven.

If you lose your time, you lose your hopes; and if you lose your hopes, you lose your souls; and when your souls are lost, they shall never be recovered; and when your time is lost, it shall never be redeemed.

The soft mercies of God will break the hard heart of man. Be afraid of unbelief; that is a great sin.

Do good to others, if they do not thank you for it. The less reward you have on earth, the greater shall your reward be in heaven.

Do not enlarge your sins above God's saving power; believe in the word firmly and constantly.

Trust perfectly in the grace and mercy of God in Christ.

We must hear the warnings of conscience, or we shall feel the woundings of conscience.

Let not another's sin cause you to sin.—Selected.

THE CANON OF PTOLEMY.

The Chronological Tables of this celebrated Egyptian astronomer were originally written in Greek. We give below, from the translation of H. Brown, A. M., that portion of the Canon extending from the Era of Nabonassar to the Era of Philip Aridæus, covering all the disputed ground.

In this translation the eclipses recorded by Ptolemy are not set down. The reader will find the more important ones noticed by Eld. Thurman in his work. Ptolemy reckoned 365 days to each year, disregarding the hours and minutes requisite to make up the true solar year; and there being no intercalation to compensate for this loss, we find the commencement of the year of this era falling one day back of the commencement of the true solar year, every four years.

1. Merodach-baladan. Isa. 39: 1. 2 Kings 20: 12.
2. Esar-haddon or Asnapper. See and compare Ezra 4: 2-10, 2 Kings 17: 24, and 2 Chron. 33: 11. He appears to have reigned over both Babylon and Assyria.
3. Chynaladon.

5. Evil-merodach of 2 Kings 25: 27. The Nebuchadnezzar of Daniel, chaps. 2, 3 and 4.
6. Nerriglissar.
7. Belshazzar.

We wish to call attention to discrepancies between some of the statements of this record and those of the Bible, where no astronomical knowledge is required to settle the point in dispute.

It will be seen that Ptolemy gives the names of three kings beside Nebuchadnezzar (Nabokalassar,) who bare rule over the Jews during the captivity. But in Jeremiah's prophecy (ch. 27: 7) we read, "And all nations shall serve him, his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land shall come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him." And in ch. 25: 12, we learn that at the end of the seventy years' service, the "perpetual desolation" of Babylon should commence. Jeremiah's prophecy is confirmed in 2 Chron. 36: 20. "They were servants to him (Nebuchadnezzar) and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia."

Ptolemy gives Nabokalasser's successor (Evil-merodach) two years only. Josephus gives him eighteen years; and is doubtless correct. Daniel does not give the exact length of his reign; but gives some events connected therewith which prove it to have been more than two years in length. The first reference made to Evil-merodach in Daniel, we find in the second chapter, first verse. In this chapter we have an account of the vision seen by the king in the second year of his reign.* It must have been some months, if not indeed a year or two after this before the events of the third chapter could have occurred; and still later, we have the account of the vision of the great tree, and its subsequent fulfillment—the king being driven from among men for seven years, after which "the glory of the kingdom returned unto" him. (Dan. 4: 36.) That this king was the father of Belshazzar is proven by Dan. 5: 18–21, 22.

It will thus be seen that Evil-merodach could not have reigned less than ten years: and Daniel's account gives reason for us to suppose that he reigned much longer than that.

Ptolemy assigns four years to Nerriglissar, Evil-merodach's son. The reign of Laborsadacus for nine months is also mentioned by historians. He was succeeded by Belshazzar. These conflicting statements can be harmonized as follows: Evil-merodach reigned in all eighteen years. In his eleventh year, he lost his reason, and was driven from men to dwell with the beasts for seven years, during which time the kingdom was administered by his sons: Neriglissar reigning four years; Laborsadacus nine months; followed by Belshazzar, in the third year of whose reign Evil-merodach was restored to his reason and "the glory of his kingdom." He lived after this about one year. His death left Belshazzar sole monarch until the night when he was "slain;" and Darius the Median (Cyaxares) took the kingdom." (Dan. 5: 30, 31.)

It will appear from the above that either Ptolemy or the Bible is fallible. Which we cling to, we hardly need say. There is only one book of which we believe that "it is not to be receded from for the authority of any writing whatsoever," and that is God's revealed word—the Bible.

* As Nabokalasser did not carry any captives to Babylon until the eighth year of his reign, it follows that he is not the Nebuchadnezzar whose "second year" is here spoken of.

For the World's Crisis.

GOOD RESULTS FROM SAVOY CAMPMEETING.

Bro. Grant:—For some time past, I have felt it my duty to write a few lines to the Crisis, that its readers may know the result of our campmeeting, which was of a cheering character. Brn. Pratt, Hemenway, Goodrich, and others, were present to preach the word which proved effectual in arousing many of the children of God to more activity in the cause of truth; and also in the conversion of some that were on the ground. We had the privilege, on Sunday last, of burying one in the likeness of his Savior, beneath the liquid wave, and as she came forth from her watery grave, her countenance beamed with such a heavenly smile, that all were convinced that she had put on her Savior anew. Our heavenly time which we enjoyed, when gathered around the table of the Lord in the afternoon, will be long remembered by those present.

Also, since campmeeting, the work of God has been going on in Dalton and Windsor, and quite a number have found the Savior. We have had the privilege of baptizing one brother, who has just started in the way of life, and others also have put on the Lord by baptism, and still others are waiting, for an opportunity to follow on in this ordinance of the Lord's house. Brethren, pray for us, for the enemies of God gather themselves together against us; but in God have we put our trust. We will not be afraid of what man can do unto us. If the Lord be for us, who can be against us. We never felt before so much like living nearer and nearer to God, from day to day. Brethren, be of good cheer, for if faithful, we shall soon gain eternal life in the kingdom of God.

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

PLEASE REMEMBER.

All letters, communications and remittances, should be addressed to the Editor, Miles Grant.

All drafts, or bank checks, should be made payable to the Treasurer and Business Agent, Geo. T. Adams. Otherwise they cannot be used in the absence of the Editor.

OLD AND NEW YEAR.

Before our readers hear from us again through the columns of "our paper," we shall have passed into a new year. When about to step over the bounds from the old to the new year, it is a good time to resolve that none of our bad habits shall cross the line with us. Let us then at once begin to examine our past lives, and our present mode of living, and see what there is about us that is not pleasing to the Lord. Whatever it may be, let us at once throw it away as a dead weight that is tending to keep ourselves and others from being ready "for the marriage of the Lamb," which is now near at hand. Only "the pure in heart" have the promise of seeing God.

Have we deceived in trade during the past year; let us be decided that we will never do it again. No dishonest people will be found in the kingdom of heaven. These are times noted for covetousness, as Paul prophesied would be the case "in the last days;" hence we are in danger of conforming to the world, and practicing deception in trade for the sake of the profits. All can stop doing so if they will; consequently, they will be without excuse, if not free from this sin.

Have we spoken any unkind words in our families, or to any one else; let none be heard from our lips during the coming year, and for ever afterward. Harsh words accomplish no benefit to any one, but do great harm. They destroy our influence for good, make both the speaker and hearer unhappy. They always wound, and leave scars when healed. "Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."—Eph. 4: 32.

Have we been impatient, and felt hard towards any one; had any evil surmisings, evil imaginations, or feelings of variance? let us put such things all away, and never indulge them again. The Scriptures teach us to "be patient toward all men," "showing all meekness unto all men," and to "be gentle unto all men." Have we violated any of these great principle of christianity during the past year? then let us repent, begin anew, and not allow these wicked things to accompany us into a new year. If we would get the victory over these evil propensities, we must be in earnest about the matter. A few faint resolves will not do the work. We need much watchfulness and prayer to obtain and keep the victory. But how blessed are the fruits. Do not rest till you know this by happy experience. Then it may be truly said, our peace is "like a river." Gentleness, meekness, patience, kindness, long-suffering, love, peace, joy'—what a cluster of good qualities,—these are all elements in the christian character. Do they shine out in our every-day lives? If not, turn a new leaf to-day, cultivate these essential graces, and be ready to welcome the coming King of kings. Christianity was designed to make us lovely and loving. Shall we not show more of its rich fruits the coming year?

Again, now is the time to break off from all bad habits of eating and drinking. Were this done, it woulld be found a great help in gaining a victory over bad passions. Come, drop them all this side, that you may have truly "a happy new year."

DATE OF OUR PAPER.

Probably most of our readers know that it is the practice of newspaper publishers to date their papers several days after they are printed; hence, for instance, a paper printed on Tuesday, as is the Crisis, would be dated the following Saturday; consequently, if they receive "our paper" on Saturday, which is dated Tuesday, and some other paper on the same day, from the same city, dated Saturday, they wonder why they do not receive the Crisis earlier; when the truth is, they were both printed the same day, and arrived together. The only difference is, the other paper is dated four days after it is printed, while ours is dated the day it goes to press, which is Tuesday P. M. A portion of them are received at our office on Tuesday afternoon, the remainder on Wednesday; and in the latter part of the day, we get them ready to carry to the P. O., so that they leave the city Thursday morning. We think the proper way is to date our paper, not when the subscriber receives it, but when the last work is done by the compositor.

Correction.—At the close of the article in the last Crisis, (Dec. 20th,) headed "Light Wanted," instead of one thousand, read "one hundred thousand more."

TRACT FUND.

Dear Brn. and Srs., are we doing all we can to scatter the great truths of the Bible, which are of more value to us than all the world without them? Let us not be backward in lending a hand to the noble tract enterprise. This has already accomplished a great amount of good; but let us press it harder than ever, the coming year. Our days for labor are fast numbering. Men and women are perishing for lack of knowledge, while Satan is laying plans to catch them in his sly net of Spiritualism.

Many have done nobly for the "Poor Fund" and the "Tract Fund;" but let us see a general rally to help scatter the light. Send us a shower of gifts for this important work. This will be a good opportunity to make a new year's gift to the Lord. Instead of giving useless and costly presents to your friends, send them them the Crisis, or some tracts, which may lead them to seek eternal life.

CALLS FOR PREACHING.

Bro. S. Nye, Cyene, Dane county, Wis., writes:—"We are entirely destitute of preaching here. If any of like faith should come this way, we would be glad to have them call, and impart unto us the bread of life. We will see that their wants are supplied, as far as in our power."

Bro. Reuel Willis writes from East Auburn, Me.:—"There are none here who believe in the Advent doctrine. I am alone in this town of five thousand inhabitants. There are four villages in it. The one opposite Lewiston is almost large enough to be a city by itself; and I have never known of a single Advent lecture being delivered in the town. There are a good many here who believe in Spiritualism, and other errors. I wish some good Advent preacher would come here and lecture on the Advent. It would, I think, remove prejudice, and might be the means of doing good."

NEW YEARS' GIFTS.

"What shall I give my friend for a new year's present?"—Suppose you send him the Crisis. It may be of great value to him, as it has been to many others. Could you read the many encouraging letters from members of other churches, who have had the Crisis sent them by some friend, interested in their welfare, you would be satisfied that it is best to make an effort to carry the light into regions "beyond." We must not expect to accomplish much good without some sacrifice; but we get a rich reward, even in this life, by the great addition to our peace and joy that results from efforts to benefit others. Try it.

"VOICES FROM CELESTA."

We had hoped it would not be necessary to say more about "Celesta"; but some are calling earnestly for facts relating to the community at Celesta, Pa., under the control of Bro. P. E. Armstrong. All such will please attend to the testimony of those who are prepared to speak; and after reading their statements, we trust nothing further will need to be said on the subject.

Dr. R. Willard, Hammonton, N. J., writes:

Bro Grant:—From circumstances, I feel compelled to announce to the brethren generally my position in reference to the "Celesta" enterprise.

At its announcement, I confess I felt very kindly towards Bro. Armstrong, believing him a godly man, and possibly divinely moved, and wrote him somewhat encouragingly; but at the same time doubted the correctness of his views generally, not being able to apprehend them in the word.

The idea of being absolved from earthly governments, and especially from inherent death, by going to Celesta, was to me a novel idea, and especially that that mountain should be designed of God as the nucleus to which the saints were to gather, as the incipient kingdom in its stone form. But regarding Bro. Armstrong a far better Bible student than myself, did not presume to call him in question, but waited patiently for development, knowing that, if it was of the Lord, it would stand; but if a human project, it would come to naught.

Now, from all that I can gather, I fear that God is not the prime mover, and yet do not call in question Bro. A.'s honest convictions, but presume that like all other men he may be mistaken.

I have said thus much, having been written to by several in reference to the genuineness of the movement. But let us not be censorious, brethren, but treat him kindly, admonishing him as a brother. Fraternally yours,

R. Willard.

"Facts about Celesta."

The following, under the above heading, is from Bro. D. Edson Smith. Please listen to his testimony, as follows:—

"Wherefore if they shall say unto you, . . . Behold, he is in the secret chambers, believe it not;" "for false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall show signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect."—Matt. 24: 26, and Mark 13: 22.

In the 2nd No. of the "Day Star" is an article from my pen showing how perfectly infatuated I at first was with "Celesta." I wish now to undo publicly what I have written both publicly and privately about "Celesta," on some points, at least. I would say at the outset, that P. E. Armstrong thinks he is honest, but I have good reason to believe that he is lead captive by Satan, and the very movement here is one of the strong "temptations," referred to in the motto of his paper. He has stated his side of the question. I will now state mine, and leave it with the reader to decide by the word of God and their own consciences which is right.

In answer to private invitations, six persons came to "Celesta" thirty months ago. In a little while they had all gone but one, Giles Russell. I was led to believe, from reading No. 1 of the "Day Star," that there were then several families here. On arriving here, I was disappointed in finding no one but P. E. A's own family, Giles Russell, and two brethren who had arrived four days before me. I had also been led to believe that A. owned a saw mill, but found it owned by a man in N. Y. I also found his blacksmith and carpenter shops mere huts, and the printing office and store house a partially inclosed building. I found his wife strongly opposed to the work, but I believe her to be a true child of God, and far beyond her husband in charity. She will not condemn him, but says she pities him, and cannot believe as he does; while he frequently flies into a passion at her, denounces her as the main cause of all the trouble here; and has repeatedly told her, and others in my presence, "He wished she would leave the place; and a few days ago, he said he would not eat with her again till she had reformed. I fear she will die of a broken heart.

His family are all unconverted, except his oldest two, and they have no faith that a large gathering will ever be effected here, and even doubt their father's conversion. I was soon greatly surprised in seeing his lack of government. He does not govern his household, but allows his children to do about as they please. "If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God." (1 Tim. 3: 5.) Next I saw a slackness in providing for even his own house, which caused me to doubt as to such a man's being called of God to act as steward for a large gathering. Soon, I frequently heard loud disputes between him and Giles, and a spirit manifested far from what I conceived to be Christ-like. "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men." —2 Tim. 3: 24. He soon showed a peculiar method of interpreting Scripture. Again, he leads people by private letters to believe things are more comfortable here than they really are, and is strongly opposed to any one's coming here to investigate. All who have come here since July have expressed dissatisfaction on this point. He writes to people to bring nothing from a distance, except bedding, and a few light articles; knowing at the same time that this place is destitute of crockery, tin ware, iron ware; and for lack of help and machinery, chairs, tubs, pails, etc., are not to be had; and A. having no good team, and not possessing, as yet, the necessary energy to get one, persons have to wait months before getting their goods from the depot. Great and unnecessary inconveniences have already been experienced in this matter. He also claims the right, and wishes it so understood, to break into trunks and letters against the owner's wishes; at the same time claiming to be non-resistant. To be sure he gives others the privilege of opening his letters; but that does not make it right for him to open others, contrary to their wishes.

I did not come here with the impression that I had got to quietly bow to and believe all his ideas. But a short time ago, because I expressed to him my doubts as to Gentile times being ended, and the Lord delaying his coming till 1876, he told me I had better leave; and that "If I doubted I was damned;" and because I wished him to state in the paper that his wife was not in the work, and that some had become dissatisfied and left, he flew into a passion, and said, "I had better take the editorship of the paper," etc. Since then he has shown that he himself doubts, by using such language as, "It is possible that Gentile times are not ended, and if they are not, I will convert this into an asylum for poor widows;" at other times, he says if not ended, he will go back into what he calls "Babylon," or he will open a large store here; and knowing now that I will publish to the world the situation of things here, he now assents to having some facts put in the next No. of his paper; thus carrying the impression that he has no wish to deceive. A brother was witness to the above conversation. I at that time saw the spirit of Satan so plain, that I cannot doubt any longer. And Satan soon saw he had driven the man too far, and attempted to palliate the matter; but the scales were removed from my eyes, and I could see that he wished to keep me merely as bait. He said, "If you go away now it will hinder the work, for others will think if you cannot live here, they surely cannot. After there is a large number here, one or two leaving will be but as a particle of dust to a fly-wheel." I told him if the work here was of God nothing could retard it. I told him also that when I came here, it was on the broad, liberal platform of simply loving the appearing of Jesus," as stated in the 1st No. of the "Day Star." But he now says, if Gentile times are not ended, he will not live in "Common Interest." Let those who are preparing to come here remember this; and also that he twits the poor of the fact when angry. In view of these facts, ask yourself, and the word of God, if such a man is not deceived, when he thinks he is called of God to assume the positions assumed by P. E. A. in his covenant and rules.

But the most conclusive evidence is, all who have come here see the matter in a somewhat similar light, as myself. The two men who were here when I came, left long ago. And all who have come since, either have left or will leave when I do, with the exception of a Bro. Lothrop and wife, who have lately come, and a Sr. Heaton. They are not yet decided who is right. P. E. A. can make things appear so nice, that when once under his influence, it is hard to break away until time has demonstrated again and again that the Spirit of Christ is not here. I was so carried away with the writings of the man, that it took nearly four months to fully convince me of the deception.

In reply to all this, P. E. A. will say, "Wait till God condemns." But God will not work a miracle. If we will not believe Christ and the prophets, we will not believe though one rose from the dead. In the last days, Satan is to do lying wonders. So if the inhabitants of "Celesta" escape the draft, taxation and death, it to my mind will appear the attempt of Satan to deceive the very elect. Satan has the power of death till he is destroyed (Heb. 2: 14.) A release from taxation is but a simple matter of justice, if no favors, or protection of the government is asked; and Irish Catholic priests in St. Louis, have lately been released on parole of honor, in the same manner as Giles Russell of this place was.

Look at this candidly dear reader, and compare it with the Bible. Much more might be said, but I forbear for the present.

Yours for the truth,

D. Edson Smith.

Celesta, Pa., Dec. 13th, 1864.

[Voice of the West please copy.

From Bro. Geo. L. Hart.

Dear Brn. scattered abroad:—I take my pen to do what I consider to be a solemn duty. Thanks be to God, my eyes are at last open to see one of the most subtle deceptions of Satan; one which, if possible, would deceive even the very elect. Nearly six months ago, I received the first number of the "Day Star." I thought I saw in its columns a position, if carried out in love and true faith, which would act like a strong cord in binding together the people of God. I prepared to act in the way which I supposed right. I sacrificed all upon the altar, and started for "Celesta," where I expected to find so much unity. But, alas! I found in this so-called "secret place of the Most High," that discord and confusion were the elements which had for the last two years, or more, governed them.

I will now state my reasons why I believe this work to be the work of Satan.

First, P. E. Armstrong, the "Steward," as he terms himself, claims to be the visible head of the church of the first born, which alone is Christ's position. I knew not this until I had been here over two months. P. E. Armstrong claims a possibility of his being the Rock spoken of by Christ, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. He claims a possibility of his being the Shepherd, the stone of Israel. He claims to have the power of Elijah, or the possibility of being one who with the mantle of Elijah shall turn back the Jordan of death to all who shall sign his covenant and receive his seal; it matters not whether infidel, or christian, if he peaceably acknowledges him as the visible head and steward of the church of the first born.

He expresses himself like this:—"God will vindicate me in due time." Again, a portion of earth's territory is redeemed from the hand of Satan with money. If I read aright in Matt. 13: 44, the field is represented as being bought by one more capable of answering the demand of a broken law. Yea, he who gave his own blood for fallen man wore a crown of thorns to cancel the debt that nature unwillingly bears. Simon Magus sought the privilege of buying with money the earnest of our inheritance; but the curse of Jehovah rested upon him for thinking to purchase with money what was purchased with the precious blood of Christ.

Come ye who seek the truth, how think ye in Jehovah's balance weighs the gold of earth beside the agonies of Gethsemane? the fountain gushing from the Son of his love, on Calvary's summit? Wait patiently, and you will ere long see the scheme of antichrist more fully developed. Awake to your duty, watchman. Amalek presses hard in the rear. Pray for me, that I may escape from so fearful a delusion. I mean to leave this place as soon as the Lord provides me the means; for I believe with others that a demon of the most subtle kind possesses the head of this movement. Remember, Satan in his last moments makes war on the remnant of the woman's seed that keep the commandments of God and have the faith of Jesus. Yours waiting for the coming of the Head of the church of the First Born, Geo. L. Hart.

Celesta, Dec. 10th, 1864.

"The Celesta Movement."

Under the above heading, Bro. S. L. Manley, Easton, Pa., writes Dec. 15th, 1864:—

"With no personal grudge or prejudice against P. E. Armstrong's temporal or benevolent views, I do consider this work, in which his infatuation leads him, to be one of the most subtle devices of Satan transformed, to cause the Lord's people not only to listen to 'another gospel,' 'but if it were possible to deceive the very elect.'

When at Celesta, I endeavored faithfully to discharge my duties in laboring in temporal and spiritual things, and could not fully realize but that it was in some way to be demonstrated to be the work of the Lord, until, in answer to prayer, we were fully convinced that the spirit of Antichrist, and not Christ, predominated. Instead of gentleness, long-suffering, goodness, etc., etc.,—strife, anger, variance, etc., etc., at times abounded. And instead of freedom and liberty in prayer and exhortation, a bondage seemed to come over us, until the light at last broke in upon us, and we were led to see the great error of being led away by 'another gospel.'

"When I first arrived here, things went on so finely and pleasantly, I wrote my views of things for the Crisis; but I do sincerely thank our heavenly Father that the same was not published."

[Is not a word to the wise sufficient?—Ed.

WRITE PLAINLY.

We clipped the following from Zion's Herald, and wish to give it to our readers, as expressing what we wish to say to them:—

In obituaries, marriages, and other notices, names of persons and places are sometimes printed wrong, making them either incorrect in orthography, or indicating sometimes very different persons or places from those intended by the writers. Friends seeing this send back corrections, and want the corrected notice re-inserted, giving marked indications of displeasure and censure to editor, printers and proof-readers. The guilty cause of all this is generally in the writers, and we recommend that a portion of the indignation felt be placed to their credit. Manuscripts are often sent us so badly written from habit, carelessness, bad pens, or bad using of them, that none but an angel or a clairvoyant could make out what mortal or immortal name was intended. The editor tries to divine what it stands for, but failing, sometimes calls to his aid the long experienced and well practised eye of the agent. If he fails, as he does occasionally, to know the unchirographical and mysterious symbols, the case is well nigh hopeless, but it then goes to the printers. The latter call a council of typos, and they deliberate in the presence of all the memories of the past, some guessing (for it has to be all guess work now) that it means this, others that it was meant for that, when the council dissolves in confusion, with just as many different opinions as there are different persons composing it, and after consuming considerable precious time, some one of their number, with "stick in hand," "goes it blind," when out comes a name, "hit or miss." That is the best that could be done under the circumstances. The writer ought to be made to pay for the time thus wasted.

Now we appeal to all writers, and say emphatically, be careful in writing proper names, and make every letter plain and distinct, so that any one can easily read and understand. That is the only sure way to lay the axe at the root of this tree of evil. If our readers understood all the difficulties, their wonder would be that there are so few mistakes of this kind in the Herald, rather than that there are so many—for sometimes the compositors luckily "guess" right. We may have to adopt the rule to reject what is not plainly written. To one and all we say earnestly, write all with care; WRITE PROPER NAMES LEGIBLY. If you will not do this, you must pocket inevitable misprints, and bear the blame of it to the parties concerned.

For the World's Crisis.

COME TO THE POINT.

Bro. Grant:—I often notice letters of encouragement written to the Editor of the Crisis, in reference to the improvements made in the management, or rather conducting of the paper. With those, I can add my testimony also; and more especially in the growing interest manifest in the study of prophecy. Although there is much diversity of opinion, yet it helps those seeking for light to get at the truth, if guided in their investigations of God's word by his Spirit.

Yet there are some things which I am tired of, and my observation teaches me that I am not alone in this matter. It is this: there some good ministering brethren, who seem to be very fond of giving us a long diary through the columns of the Crisis of their labors and travels; and we would be as fond of reading them, if we were not compelled to dive down through one of Bro. Munger's slop barrels containing histories, and long advertisements of machines, well cultivated farms, cheese houses, factories, and social chats, for the sake of obtaining a potato at the bottom of the barrel. I think sometimes I would like to write a short sketch of the Lord's doings in the highways and hedges with which I am personally acquainted; but then I am ashamed to undertake the job, for the reasons already given.

Come, brethren, let us have the bread of life; but first have your meal all bolted, and sift out all the chaff of worldly matter, that we may know what the Lord is doing instead of those virgins who are fast asleep in spiritual matters, but alive to the world's goods only. Tell us whether sinners are converted where you go. Do the churches prosper? Are they growing in grace and increasing in knowledge and love? In a word, tell us what the Lord is doing, instead of yourselves and rich backslidden professors, and we will read your narratives with interest. May the Lord bless. Amen. H. K. Flagg.

VOICES FROM THE POOR.

From an Invalid.

I have been an invalid for thirteen years, with an incurable disease, much of the time confined to my bed. None of that time have I been able to get a living, but have had to be dependent on my friends, as I had no means except such as I received from my heavenly Father. Thus far my wants have been supplied, and I trust they will be till Jesus comes and takes me to my heavenly home, where sickness and sorrow will be known no more. With all my heart I can say, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!"

The perusal of the Crisis has been a great comfort to me in my moments of loneliness and suffering, while reading its Bible arguments and warm-hearted letters from those of like precious faith, many of them from the sick and suffering, who are my companions in tribulation. Harriet.

——, N. H.

From the Aged and Infirm.

An Orthodox Sister, who has had the paper free some four or five years, writes:—"I take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks to you for so valuable a paper. I should feel loth to do without it, but am not able to pay for it. I am a member of the Orthodox church, and am supported mostly by charity, being aged and infirm. I love the doctrine your paper advocates with all my heart, and have tried to scatter the light by lending the papers after reading them myself. I hope to be prepared for the coming of the Savior and to meet all those who have been so kind to me here. If you feel that you can continue the paper, I shall be very thankful.

THE BANK OF THE LORD'S POOR.

RESPONSES FROM SHAREHOLDERS.

A minister in Indiana writes:—"As a steward of the Lord, I feel it duty to assist in furnishing the Lord's poor children with the Crisis. You will please find five dollars enclosed with this design. I want it appropriated to pay for the paper for those who are poor indeed. Send two copies to some such ones as have written to you in their poverty and distress. I believe there are some on your poor list who, with some economy and effort, might pay for their own papers. Let all such consider that the "poor indeed" are only furnished at the expense of brethren who could use all the means they send advantageously in their own behalf, but who choose to forego some things, rather than have the destitute children deprived of a good religious paper in these days of trial. Credit this to "Steward," and give no hint of my name or place of residence in the Crisis.

O, righteous Father, be pleased to take this thine own into thine own care and keeping. Grant that some of thy poor children may be benefitted and furthered on in the divine life as a result of this, for Christ's sake."

A brother writes from Moline, Ill.:—When I read the letter from my poorer brethren and sisters in the Lord, and hear them say,—'My father is dead,'—'My husband is dead,'—'I am poor,'—my heart is moved with sympathy for them, and I feel that they ought to be aided by their abler brethren and sisters, and more deposits made in the Bank of the Lord's Poor for their benefit. Within you will find $1.00 for my Father's children. The Lord bless it to their good. W. K.

For the World's Crisis.

GENERAL WESTERN CONFERENCE.

It is now among the things that were. But its influence is not obsolete. The west is roused to engage in the Master's work more heartily than formerly, in view of our proximity to the great day of redemption. All will soon be over. The slumbering world will soon be roused by the Jubilee trumpet, which will proclaim deliverance to God's people, but seal the doom of the impenitent. The new time question was up for discussion excepting while business meetings were in session, and evenings which were devoted to religious services of a devotional character. No valid arguments were presented against the time computation. Every attempt to overthrow our position tended to strengthen it and make the matter still plainer. Not the first cloud of obscurity rested upon it. Those who opposed it at first were not fully conversant with our points of argument, and subsequently saw that we had stronger grounds for our argument than they supposed. Truth will prevail. God is in this time proclamation. It will have its opponents, without doubt, but their efforts will prove like a feeble attempt to blow against a tornado. Bro. Thurman was with us to impart instruction to all anxious inquirers. His efforts were highly appreciated. He will give due attention to the criticisms on his Chronology.

In connection with the conference we had preaching and prayer meetings. A deep interest was inaugurated among the impenitent. Several were converted, and the work is going onward. Some thirty-three have been forward for prayers at a time. May scores yet obtain pardon. Four were baptized on Lord's day, and a goodly number are waiting for the next opportunity to obey the Lord.

A Western Publishing Association was formed, which is to publish the "Voice of the West." The Voice will act in harmony with the Crisis, and help build up the cause of the Master. It will candidly examine the time question, and carefully consider the difficulties which may arise in inquiring minds, and also review arguments published against this question in other sheets. Eld. Thurman has accepted the offer made him to speak often through this organ.

I would here caution all against deciding against the correctness of Thurman's Chronology on the strength of a few feeble objections, till they see those objections thoroughly examined. If it will not stand the test, let it be exploded. But let no one regard a mere attack equivalent to an explosion. So far Thurman's Chronology, though assailed, stands the test, as all will see after reading the forthcoming replies. W. Sheldon.

For the World's Crisis.

THINGS WE DO KNOW.

There are many things that people guess at, and there is much more that men suppose to be true, because individuals of trust have told them so, but don't know it for themselves. Inspiration says, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, or maketh flesh his arm." (Jer. 17: 5.) Now let us testify to things that we do know. "We do know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." (1 John 3: 14). "And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us." (1 John 3: 24). And, "Hereby we know that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." (1 John 4: 13). "By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 2). "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us; and if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions we desire of him. (1 John 5: 14–15.

"And we know (also) that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.) "Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now there are many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time." (1 John 2: 18.) "Knowing (also) this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Peter 3: 3–4.) "For we know" (saith Paul) "that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." (2 Cor. 5: 1.) "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but, we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as He is pure." (1 John 3: 2.) Lord, help us to be pure. P. Tandy.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—Not having said any thing through our papers for six months, I write to let brethren and friends know where I am, and that through the mercy of God, I am yet able, and am permitted to be at work in my Master's vineyard. I have been west this year five and a half months, and when travelling I get no time to write for papers, as I not only preach and visit, but also sell books, give out many tracts, get subscriptions for the tract fund, signers for our papers, and collections for the same. Besides these cares, I have (as most ministers do in the West) no little perplexity in obtaining means to pay travelling expenses, and something to live on in these dear times. Many brethren seem to forget that ministers and their families need coats, boots, meat, flour and wood, as well as R. R. tickets; and add to their other cares the necessity of reminding them of thes facts.

I spent the season in Central Illinois, except three Sabbaths in Mich., and Ohio. I gave out about $50, in tracts and pamphlets, spread them over a large territory, and sold some $150, in our books and pamphlets. Owing to special efforts being made to establish Bro. Himes' paper in the West, and pay for a large tent, less donations for the Tract Fund could be obtained; yet by much effort I collected about $30, which has been sent in, and the names of the donors noticed in the Crisis.

Notwithstanding money was very plenty West, I received less for my own support than two years ago in the same time and State, when corn was 15 cts. per bushel; contributions only amounted to $5, over car fare; and that I lost by pick-pockets on the cars. One reason for this small compensation as to worldly pay, was my spending about one half my time in new places, where there were but one or two, and sometimes no advent brethren to contribute. I also spent three Sabbaths at conference and our campmeeting, where only aid for the Tract Fund could be obtained. My labors were on or near the Chicago and Burlington, and Dixon Airline R. Roads, within eighty miles of Chicago. My purpose was to spend part of the season in Wisconsin and Iowa; but the drouth being bad in Wisconsin, I feared the expenses of travelling so far could not be obtained. This must serve as my excuse to brethren who requested me to visit them that way.

The truth is spreading in the region where I traveled, as some devoted and laborious ministers are settled there. Their calls are many more than they can attend to, and more from the East should move there, who are willing to farm it for part of their living. It costs too much to travel so far and then labor in new fields. Brethren living there are enlarging their borders with small expense for traveling. Wishing to feel as Job did when he said, "my record is on high," I generally omit to give detailed accounts of places visited, trials, success, etc.; yet I love to see it done by traveling brethren, who have time to do so. The war feeling, drafting, and election, I conclude, has everywhere checked success the past years, especially as to conversions. The head, however, may be informed, the heart is not moved, and we may see the fruit in a future day. For encouragement of brethren who are making sacrifices for truth, I will say that I see more and more that "Our labor is not in vain in the Lord." The remarks are fast increasing, that endless torment is now but little preached in any denomination; and many are being convinced that the coming of Christ is "at the door." Books and tracts are doing much in the Great West where comparatively but few can hear all the truth preached; and to this work I yet pay special attention, though it adds much to the toils and expenses of traveling.

I purpose being at home this winter, and make special efforts to collect in accounts. My health and strength give me hope of traveling a few years yet, but we are liable to be laid by, or sleep; and I feel it duty to settle up worldly affairs so as to pay all debts, and, if possible, have a little laid by against a sick day, for myself and wife. Having lost much by giving out works to sell, I find it necessary to about cease to do so in future. I do not regret my course in thus trusting out works, for truth has been spread by so doing; and if I do not get pay for all, the Lord will make good his promise—My bread and water will be sure. He has already moved the hearts of some beloved brethren to unexpectedly send me means, or the losses I have sustained would have left me in debt without means to pay. I feel to record the loving kindness of my heavenly Father in his providence in this matter, and to express my gratitude to the brethren and sisters, some of whose faces I have never seen, for their aid, which has enabled me to devote my whole time for fifteen years in writing, printing, traveling, preaching, and spreading works to advance our blessed cause, and cheer the hearts of lonely pilgrims in eighteen States and C. W., in which I have been in the past fifteen years. The hope of soon meeting such brethren in the kingdom of our dear Redeemer, cheers me in my labors and persecutions. Brethren, the cups "of cold water" will be "rewarded" as our Master has said. Yes, and our troubles and trials here will only make us richer there, when we arrive at home.

God grant all his blood-bought people grace and faith to know by happy experience the reality of the good old hymn,

"I am passing on, I am happy now,
I am happy on my journey home."

Brethren who have had works and owe me for them, know the fact, and I trust will not wait to be written to; and I should have to travel in fifteen States to see them all. The Lord bless us all with means and hearts to obey God's command, "Owe no man anything." Many of my accounts are in small amounts, but being many, they would help me much if all were paid. J. Blain.

[Voice of the West please copy]

From Bro. D. R. & Sr. M. S. Mansfield.

Our friends east are inquiring of us how we got home? how we are as to health? and what we are doing? In answer to the above, we would say, we left Boston,—nine of us in all, on a very pleasant morning, and arrived home on the 3d day, all well, and in good cheer. We enjoyed the ride very much. It was not too warm nor too cold for comfort. The letters in the office waiting our arrival were soon brought to hand, which contained earnest solicitations for us to visit other parts. Having been absent about four months, it seemed duty to spend the most of our time with the church here, and arrange for the general conference to come off here on the 8th of December.

We came home with a mind to work more earnestly for God than ever before. The church also see the necessity of waking up. God has indeed smiled upon us. Last evening, Dec. 16, twenty-four seeking Christ came forward, after which we bowed in solemn prayer; then followed singing and exhortation. We have not witnessed such a season in a long time. For several evenings great interest has been manifest, and it is spreading fast over the community.

The general conference closed up business yesterday. We will answer private letters as soon as time and opportunity will admit. Yours seeking the salvation of poor sinners,

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Buchanan, Mich., Dec. 17th, 1864.

From Bro. P. A. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—The work of the Lord still continues in the country where I am laboring. Sinners continue to be convicted, and converted to God, and are made to rejoice that they ever heard the glorious gospel of the Son of God. They keep up their prayer meetings, and have glorious times in striving to induce their neighbors and friends to go along with them to the kingdom. Some new ones are coming out every little while. The opposition they receive is from the church; and those that once professed to be christians. Satan knows his time is short, and is doing his best to blind the eyes of those that think more of this world than of the world to come, whose feet are "swift to shed blood." May the Lord have mercy on the poor deluded creatures.

If a man should happen to compare the glorious kingdom, we are looking for, with this miserable sin-cursed earth; they at once accuse him of speaking against the government. He must be a traitor, a "copperhead." We have fallen in perilous times indeed; but glory to God, Jesus will soon come and take away the rebuke of his people. Yours in hope, P. A. Smith.

Rochester, N. Y.

From Bro. J. T. Dixon.

Bro. Grant:—I came here day before yesterday, from DeKalb, (54 miles west on Dixon air line R. R.) where I obtained one subscriber. This is a new place, having a large brick Congregational church, and a large school house where the Baptists hold meetings. I preached in the latter place last evening. There was a fair attendance. The Congregational minister did not attend, but some Baptists and Methodists were present. At the close, I was questioned quite sharply by a Baptist, whom they told me was better posted in the Scriptures than any other in town, not excepting the preachers. (The Baptist finally admitted that the Bible did not teach man had immortality.) The Lord helped me answer all, to the satisfaction of the audience. All passed very pleasantly. A Methodist exhorter and preacher subscribed for the Crisis. I made him promise to lend it to the Congregational minister. Gave away some tracts. Gave him your two on "Soul and Spirit." Obtained another subscriber. The two names I send enclosed.

I leave this P. M. for Amboy, Ill., which is some fifteen miles from here. Would like to stop here longer, as the friends seem much interested in the strange things brought to their ears. I was assured that I would have crowded houses if I stayed. I promised, if I could not visit them, to send Eld. D. Clark from Amboy, or some one else. They are starving for the word, as is the case in numberless places in this great west, where our views have never yet been presented.

Are there not some preachers in the East, that can be spared to help cultivate this immense field, who are willing to work hard, deny self, get small pay in this life, yet do it cheerfully, knowing that they will be amply compensated in the "Beyond State?"

Como, Ill. J. T. Dixon.

From Sr. O. N. Morse.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say through your much loved paper, the Crisis, that there are a few here in this place who believe that the same Jesus that went into heaven shall come in like manner. Twenty years have passed since I believed this glorious truth. I am still hoping and praying that I may be among that number who will have their robes washed in the blood of the Lamb. We have no preacher, only the Crisis. We would be glad to hear God's faithful watchmen sound the cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh." Why none of God's servants come here, we know not. The time has been when we had a preacher; but we are poor as to this world's goods; yet the poor must have the gospel preached to them.

Some are inquiring where is brother George Turner? We would like to hear him tell us of the blessed hope. If this should meet his eye, will he find his way to Springville, Vernon Co., Wis.? Inquire for William A. Morse. We wish to know where he is, that we may write to him. I long to be where I can hear the gospel of the kingdom sounded once more. But I have the blessed Bible to lead me into all truth, and I love to peruse its pages. It tells me "Jesus died and rose again," and all them that "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Our Savior said, "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be." Your sister in Christ,

Springville, Wis. C. N. Morse.

From Bro. A. Smith.

As I promised the friends at Wilbraham campmeeting that they should hear from me through the Crisis, I will just say to them, that I am at work in the vineyard, and the Lord is blessing my labors. I am still preaching Jesus and his soon coming. I have been laboring in protracted meetings, in the highways and hedges for weeks. We have meetings every day at 3 o'clock for mourners who are anxious to have their sins pardoned, and the Lord is with us. There are from one to four converted every day; and some of the worst characters that ever lived. O how the Lord is working. I know he is coming soon. This is surely the last call to this wicked and adulterous generation. If I get time, I will send you one of my monthly reports soon, that my friends of the Crisis may see how God is blessing us. I feel to praise him that the time is coming so soon, that we shall go from labor to reward. O you scattered people of Jesus, pray for me, as I go telling the poor and needy that Jesus is coming. Pray that my faith fail not, and that I may be kept by power divine, and at last meet you on the new earth, when we shall all be gathered home. A. Smith.

Bro. D. Kinney writes from Norwichville, C. W.:—"Things look dark and gloomy with us here. I expect, by next spring, that Canada will receive the blood of her slain. We have not only the prospect of war nationally, but internally. That affair in Toronto will not be got over very soon. That bitter hatred of by-gone days is being greatly revived. It may be the grand rally, or last death-throe of Papacy. We may differ in opinion in this matter, but depend upon it, hard times are ahead. My principles are peace. If I undertake to kill an enemy, I hope to do it with a loaf of bread."

Bro John C. Shorey writes from East Rochester, N. H.:—"We have a place for meetings, a large convenient school-house, which we can occupy once in four weeks, and should be glad to have it occupied by any of God's servants. We seldom have any preaching, and hobby-riders do not visit us."

Obituaries.

Dea. R. A. Thompson.

Died of typhoid fever, and congestion of the lungs, at Bolton, C. E., Nov. 18th, 1864, Deacon Richard Adams Thompson, aged fifty-three years, seven months, and twenty-three days.

During nearly thirty-three of the last years of his life he had "kept the faith" of God's elect, and patiently endured hardness as a good soldier of Jesus. The first part of that time he was an efficient member of the Methodist church, and for upwards of twenty years, as an Adventist, firm and decided. At the organization of the Christian Church of Adventists, in Bolton, he was chosen as one of its deacons, as well qualified for that office; and in his death the church has sustained a great loss. But the loss of the widowed companion and the bereaved children, who can tell it? Only those who have thus known the sad reality of sorrow. May our kind heavenly Father sustain them, and they be prepared to meet him with eternal gladness on a deathless shore.

A large and sympathizing audience were present at his funeral to testify their esteem for the dead, and sympathy for the bereaved family; and to listen with candor to the presentation of the "blessed hope" of life by the resurrection of the dead saints from the death sleep, at Jesus' coming, now so near. The writer addressed the people from Job 19: 23–27, in which faith our brother and his household were happily united, and firmly established, believing in the entire mortality of man, and regarding death as an enemy, and the resurrection as "the gate to endless joy." Elder D. W. Sorenberger, long known and highly esteemed by our brother and his family, was by by their request, and much to their satisfaction, present, and participated in the services of the mournful occasion. Chas. P. Dow.

C. B. Horne.

Died in Farmington, N. H., Nov. 10th, 1864, Charles Bradley Horne, aged seventeen years, three months and six days.

Bradley was a steady and truthful boy from childhood, one whose word was always reliable. When consumption laid its blighting hand upon him, he found he needed a Savior. He had promised a young schoolmate, before he was taken violently sick, that he would seek the Lord. He kept his promise, and on the day he was taken sick, he knelt and prayed with us, and found peace. The blessed evidence that our beloved son sleeps in Jesus is heart-cheering and soul-comforting to us. But watchman what of the night? Is not the bright morn of eternal day about to dawn?

Martha S. Horne.

Sarah Churchill.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Brookfield, N. H., Nov. 8th, 1864, of consumption, Sr. Sarah, wife of Bro. T. Lindsey Churchill, aged thirty-seven years, and three days.

Sr. Churchill's sickness was long and distressing, but she bore it with christian fortitude and patience. While our Bro.'s heart was bleeding with anguish at the severing of these earthly ties, he had the inexpressible joy of seeing his oldest daughter, a lovely girl of sixteen, give her heart to God. H. R. Johnson.

Louis Morin.

Killed in the battle of Cedar Creek, Va., Oct. 19th, 1864, Bro. Louis Morin, of New Lebanon, N. Y.

Bro. Morin was converted under the labors of Bro. Grant, while in that place, in 1854. He leaves a wife and one child to weep for him. We pray that they may lean upon the arm of the Lord, and that they may be sustained by his grace in this hour of their trial.

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

We pray that it may not be long before the Prince of peace shall come and set up his reign on the new earth. Then shall wars and commotions cease, and the saints take the kingdom, and possess it forever. May we all be there is my prayer.

N. McCulloch, Jun.

L. E. Sanders.

Sr. Luna Ellen Sanders died at her residence near Versailles, after a painful illness of about three months, which she bore with much patience and fortitude.

Sr. Sanders often spoke of her readiness to meet her Savior. The funeral sermon was preached by Eld. A. N. Bowers, from Rom. 6: 8,—"Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, Dec. 10th, Queenstown 11th.

Political news unimportant.

A violent gale on the east coast of India caused great inundations, and thousands of lives are reported lost.

TURKEY.

Disturbances are reported in Albania. Six hundred Albanians took up arms and murdered a number of Turkish officials. Turkish troops were proceeding to the scene of insurrection. It was feared that the movement would extend.

A convention has been signed between the Porte and Persia for the India telegraph line via Panukean, pending the completion of the line to Dwanich. The service will soon open.

The Italian Capital will be removed to Florence as soon as Parliament disposes of the bills relating to organic laws.

Liverpool, Dec. 15th, Londonderry 16th.

The news from all parts of Europe is uninteresting.

DOMESTIC.

Nashville, Sunday, Dec. 18—Midnight. Gen. Thomas' victory over Hood magnifies as the details are received. We have now nearly six thousand rebel prisoners. Our wounded in the two days' fight number about fifteen hundred, killed about two hundred.

Gen. Thomas is now south of Franklin, pursuing the retreating rebels.

There was an attack on Murfreesboro' on Thursday by Forrest and Bain, but the rebels were badly beaten, and it is believed that Forrest was killed. Their loss was fifteen hundred, all of whom are in our hands.

New York, Dec. 20. The Herald's Fort McAllister correspondence says when Gen. Sherman arrived in front of Savannah he had a drove of 1200 head of cattle, though he started with only 200 and had fed his army on full rations on a march of 300 miles. He also gathered on the way over 7000 able-bodied negroes and so many horses, mules and wagons as to embarrass him. His army during a considerable portion of the march extended over a breadth of country 60 miles wide and 40 miles at times intervening between the right and left wings. The whole loss of men from wounds, sickness, captures, straggling and all other causes up to the time of arriving in front of Savannah, was only about 1000. The average daily march was 12 miles.

New York, Dec. 21. Savannah was still in the hands of the rebels. Its surrender had not been demanded by Gen. Sherman up to the time of the sailing of the Fulton.

Montreal, C. E., Dec. 20. The reported number of raiders, who went East have been arrested.

A proclamation has been issued offering a reward for the arrest of the remainder. There is much excitement in reference to calling out the militia. A large number have volunteered. Reports are afloat of intended outrages by the Fenians.

Cincinnati, Dec. 22. The Commercial has a special dispatch from Nashville, Tenn., dated yesterday, which says the headquarters of Gen. Thomas are near Columbia. Gen. Hood is across Duck river. His loss since coming into the State is 20,000. His force is now believed to be 12,000 infantry and 8000 cavalry. The woods are full of deserters. The roads are in a bad condition.

Quebec, C. E., Dec. 21. Young and two others of the St. Albans raiders were recaptured to-day at St. Francis, 16 miles from Riviere Du Loup, on their way East. It is thought all will be arrested.

New York, Dec. 22. The Herald has details of Sherman's grand march through Georgia. His army moved 300 miles, devastating 42 counties, and capturing 4000 prisoners, 10,000 negroes, 15,000 horses and 30 pieces of artillery. He lost not a gun, and his entire casualties are only 1500 men. Kilpatrick defeated Wheeler in a skirmish near Macon, and says he could have easily taken that city had Sherman desired it. At Griswoldville Walcott's corps defeated three rebel brigades under Gen. Philipps, we losing only 37 men and the rebels nearly 400.

The spoils of Sherman's campaign are 4000 prisoners, 15,000 horses, 10,000 negroes, 30 pieces of artillery, and a million dollars worth of cotton burnt. The people of Savannah are reported to have mutinied and are willing to give up the city.

New York, Dec. 23. The Times has a special dispatch from Franklin, Tenn., 22d, which says the rebel retreat from Franklin to Duck river beggars description. Hood told his corps commanders to get off the best way they could with their commands. The rebel army is now beyond Columbia. The railroad is but little injured, and trains run to Spring Hill. Telegraphic communication is all right in all directions. The rebel loss during the campaign is 17,000 men, 21 cannon and 18 general officers killed. At Franklin 1400 killed, 3800 wounded, and 1000 prisoners. Before Nashville and their retreat to Columbia 3000 killled and wounded and 8000 prisoners. Union loss at Franklin 2000. Before Nashville less than 4000. Total Union loss will not exceed 7000, with two Generals slightly wounded.

Hood has a pontoon above the Shoals in the Tennessee river, where our gunboats cannot reach them. Hood marched on Franklin with 40,000 men and 65 pieces of artillery. He will have lost nearly half his men.

What the Negroes Think.—An army correspondent of the New York Post, in a graphic description of Sherman's victorious march through Georgia, speaks thus of the expectations of the negroes:—

"General Sherman invites all able-bodied negroes (others could not make the march) to join the column, and he takes especial pleasure when they join the procession, on some occasions telling them they are free; that Massa Lincoln has given them their liberty, and that they can go where they please; that if they earn their freedom they should have it—but that Massa Lincoln had given it to them any how. They all seem to understand that the proclamation of freedom had made them free, and I have met but few instances where they did not say they expected the Yankees were coming down sometime or other; and very generally they are possessed with the idea that we are fighting for them and that their freedom is the object of the war. This notion they got from hearing the talk of their masters.

The majority accept the advent of the Yankees as the fulfillment of the millennial prophecies. The "day of jubilee," the hope and prayer of a lifetime has come. They cannot be made to understand that they must remain behind, and they are satisfied only when Gen. Sherman tells them—as he does every day—that we shall come back for them some time, and that they must be patient until the proper hour of deliverance comes."

By the President of the United States,

A PROCLAMATION.

Washington, Dec. 20. Whereas, by the Act approved July 4, 1864, entitled an act further to regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out of the national forces, and for other purposes, it is provided that the President of the United States may, at his discretion, at any time hereafter, call for any number of men as volunteers for the respective terms of one, two or three years, for military service, and that in case the quota, or any part thereof of any town, township, ward of a city, precinct or election district, or of a county not so subdivided, shall not be filled within the space of fifty days after such call, then the President shall immediately order a draft for one year to fill such quota, or any part thereof, which may be unfilled; and

Whereas, by the credits allowed in accordance with the act of Congress on the call for 500,000 men, made July 18, 1864, the number of men to be obtained under that call was reduced to 280,000; and

Whereas the operations of the enemy in certain States have rendered it impracticable to procure from them their full quotas of troops under the said call; and

Whereas, from the foregoing causes but 250,000 men have been put into the army, navy and marine corps under the said call of July 18, 1864, leaving a deficiency on that call of 260,000; now

Therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America, in order to supply the aforesaid deficiency, and to provide for casualties in the military and naval service of the United States, do issue this, my call, for 300,000 volunteers to serve for one, two or three years.

The quotas of the States, districts and sub-districts under this call will be assigned by the War Department through the bureau of the Provost Marshal General of the United States, and in case the quota, or any part thereof, of any town, township, ward of a city, precinct, or election district, or of a county not so sub-divided, shall not be filled before the 15th day of February, 1865, then a draft shall be made to fill such quota, or any part thereof, on said 15th day of February, 1865.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 19th day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-ninth.

L. S.

(Signed) ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President,
Secretary of State, W. H. Seward.

War Department,
Washington, Dec. 25—8 P. M.

To Major Gen. Dix, New York:

A dispatch has been received by the President this evening from Gen. Sherman. It is dated at Savannah, on Thursday, the 22d inst., and announces his occupation of the city of Savannah and the capture of 150 heavy guns, plenty of ammunition, and about 25,000 bales of cotton. No other particulars are given.

An official dispatch from Gen. Foster to Gen. Grant, dated on the 22d inst. at 7 P. M., states that the city of Savannah was occupied by Gen. Sherman on the morning of the 21st, and that, on the preceding afternoon and night, Hardee escaped with the main body of his infantry and artillery, blowing up the iron-clads and navy yard. He enumerates as captured 800 prisoners, 150 guns, 13 locomotives in good order, 190 cars, a large supply of ammunition and material of war, 3 steamers and 33,000 bales of cotton. No mention is made of the present position of Hardee's forces, which had been estimated at about 15,000.

The dispatches of Gen. Sherman and Gen. Foster are as follows:

"Savannah, Georgia, Dec. 22, '64.

To His Excellency President Lincoln:

I beg to present you as a Christmas gift the city of Savannah, with one hundred and fifty heavy guns and plenty of ammunition, and also about twenty-five thousand bales of cotton.

(Signed) W. T. Sherman,
Major General."

☞ There is talk in Paris of establishing a Biblical theatre, where will be played only pieces dramatized from the incidents of the Old Testament.

☞ Savannah papers of Nov. 30 announce that the entire male population of that city has been called to arms, to resist our forces.

The Maine Ministerial Conference.

It ought to be borne in mind by all our Advent ministers in Maine, that their conference was adjourned at the Oct. session, to meet in Richmond, Read meeting-house, the first Tuesday in January, 1865, and continue as long as then thought best. It is probable that the Secretary considered the notice of such an adjournment sufficient. But we thought best to call the attention of all the ministering brethren to it especially, hoping to see them interested to be present, to study, investigate, and also preach the word, as also to confer in reference to a united and vigorous prosecution of the war unto the end, in the spirit of Christ, and with the armor of God.

I. C. Wellcome,
R. R. York.

Easterly Maine Conference.

Our Easterly Maine Conference appointed at Frankfort Mills, will commence Thursday evening, January 12th, 1865, at six o'clock. I am requested to say that there are warm hearts and comfortable homes for all that will come to worship with us. Strangers may call on Wm. York, J. Woodman, J. Rogers, Rufus West, and F. A. Baker. Dear brethren, keep in mind the resolve of the North Searsport conference of last August,—and come to the meeting purposely to worship the Lord of hosts.

M. Young, Clerk.

Meetings in Dansville, N. Y.

Elder Edwin Burnham will commence laboring with the church of God in Dansville, N. Y., on the second Sunday in January, 1865, if the Lord will, to continue for a length of time, according to the will of God. The object of the meetings will be to convict sinners of the truth that they may be converted, whether in the professed church or out of it. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to visit us during these meetings, who will make it their sole purpose in visiting us to help on in this work. We believe in prayer; therefore, brethren, pray for us. F. Burr.

Notice.

Having felt for years a call to publish the glad tidings to perishing mortals, but being unwilling to obey, the Lord has had to punish me till I will now go and do his bidding. Persons knowing of fields where there is hope of good being accomplished by missionary labor, will please address, until April 1st, D. Edson Smith, Vesper, Onondaga Co., N. Y.

Advent papers please copy.

Conference.

The brethren at Bryant's Pond, Woodstock, Me., have arranged to hold a conference in the Universalist Chapel, commencing on the evening of Jan. 12th, and continue over Sunday. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Eld. W. H. Mitchell and the writer have engaged to be there to preach the word. J. A. Libby.

Notice.

I propose to visit Philadelphia about the first of January, 1865, and remain a few days doing what my hands may find to do, if the Lord will. My address will be 420 Walnut Street, care of A. F. Porter. H. L. Hastings.

Quarterly Meeting.

The first quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held on the 13th of Jan., at Floyed, Floyed Co., Iowa.

Peter S. W. Deyo, Clerk.

Notice.

The next session of the Maine Second Advent Ministerial Conference will be held in the Reed M. H., Richmond Me., Tuesday, Jan. 3d., at ten o'clock.

L. L. Howard, Pres.
C. H. Leverton, Sec.

Discussion Resumed.

The discussion between Eld. S. W. Bishop and myself, (which was broken off after the second evening, on account of the sickness and death of my little girl), will be resumed Jan. 4th, 1865, at New Market Hall, Providence, R. I. A. Durfee.

Notice.

The notice for a quarterly meeting to be held in Cornville, Me., Jan. 5th, is a mistake, and is therefore withdrawn. By order of Chas. Stratton.

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session with the church in Danielsonville, Conn., commencing the first Wednesday in January. The friends of Jesus and others are invited to attend. A. C. Greene, Sec'y.

Notice.

On account of the burning of the hall at Amboy, Ill., Sr. Henry's appointment is withdrawn.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co., now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. As the new hymn book is not to be published at present, we have contracted with Bro. Himes for the "Christian Lyre," so that we can supply those who want them in Maine at wholesale and retail. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. Wellcome & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $3.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

The Church in Springfield.

The Second Advent Society worshiping at No. 5 Oak Street, Springfield, Mass., have hired a new hall near the corner of Walnut and State streets, where they will hold meetings every Sabbath. They desire the help and co-operation of all of God's servants who love to preach the truth. All such are invited to visit them, and sound the note of warning to a perishing world.

P. S. Butler, for the Church.

Notice.

Preaching brethren who wish to send appointments to Northfield, Mass., can correspond with A. Gage, or Edwin Lyman. J. K. Bellows.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press early noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

THE JUBILEE IS COMING!

TUNE.—"Battle cry of Freedom."

The glorious day is coming! O, hear creation's call,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
Come, rally now to greet it, come rally one and all,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!

CHORUS.
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! awake ye! awake!
Jesus is coming his kingdom to take!
Then rally round his banner, ye soldiers of the cross,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!

In trials and afflictions the christian can rejoice,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
Though passing down the valley, you hear his dying voice,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

What though we fall asleep? there'll be voices o'er the sod,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
And we shall rise together with all the saints of God,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

O! what a joyful morning! what millions then will be
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
With prophets and with martyrs from death's dominion free,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

And when the morn is breaking, sweet voices we shall hear,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
And we shall know and join them, the dear ones we loved here,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

Our sorrows will be over—we 're longing for the day;
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
And we will keep on shouting till tears are wiped away,—
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

Then let the trumpet voices resound from pole to pole,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
Till o'er the land and ocean the pealing echoes roll,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

King Jesus soon is coming! awake, ye saints, and sing,
Hosanna! oh, hosanna! let hills and vallies ring,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

'Tis coming! 'tis coming! awake ye! awake!
Jesus is coming his kingdom to take!
Then rally round his banner, ye soldiers of the cross,
Shouting the jubilee is coming!
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! etc.

For the World's Crisis.

"WHICH DIES? THE LAW, OR THE SINNER?"

The Sabbatarian takes the ground that it is the sinner that dies, and much stress is laid on the marginal rendering of Rom. 7: 6, which would make the text read thus:—"But now, . . . being dead to that wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." The position taken from this is, that the law is still unchanged, still in full force, still obligatory upon the believer in Christ; but the sinner is dead! Yes, we admit that the sinner is dead; some of them are "TWICE dead, plucked up by the roots"; yet they live nevertheless.

But to the question. Is the sinner meant by the pronoun "we"? "Yes," says the Sabbatarian; no, say we. But let us try the text with this admission. "But now, . . . being dead to that wherein sinners were held; that sinners should serve in newness of spirit," etc. How does that sound? What, we here inquire, is meant by that wherein sinners were once held? Something did formerly hold them fast in its grasp; when, and what? Was it before they became sinners they were in this bondage, but now by being sinners they are delivered?

Other versions are thought to clearly establish the fact that it is the sinner that dies. Let us bring these to the test. First we will notice Wesley's version:

"But now we are freed from the law, being dead unto that whereby we were held." We will introduce the "sinner" here, instead of "we," and see if it reads right. "But now sinners are freed from the law, being dead unto that whereby sinners were held." What! sinners freed from the law? sinners dead unto that law whereby they were once held? Then it can have no further claim upon them, of course. It is upon righteous persons alone it can lay hold,—they only are held fast by its claims!!

Let us next give the Syriac version:—"But now we are absolved from the law, and are dead to that which held us in its grasp."

Macknight's version:—"But now we are loosed from the law, having died in that by which we were tied." "But now 'sinners' are loosed from the law."

Wakefield:—"But now we have been released by death from that law by which we were holden." "But now 'sinners' have been released by death from that law by which they were holden."

Sawyer's Translation:—"But now are we released from the law by which we were held having died."

Whiting:—"But now we are separated from the law, being dead to that by which we were held." "But now 'sinners' are separated from the law," etc.

Emphatic Diaglott:—"But now having died we are released from the law.

Bloomfield's Greek Testament:—"But now we are freed from the law, being dead to that law in which we are bound." "But now 'sinners' are freed from the law, being dead to that law," etc. There are doubtless multitudes in our day who would gladly become "sinners" against every law of the land, if they thereby could be "freed," "absolved," or "delivered" from that law.

Now, in contradistinction to the view we have examined, we will admit that of the Anti-Sabbatarian, and see how that will bear the test. By the "we" of the text, is meant righteous persons, true believers in Christ, saints; and the "death" is not that of the sinner who is "dead in trespasses and sins," but the death spoken of in the preceding chapter. The second verse gives the pronoun "we," and the "death." "How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" The "we" here refers to persons "dead to sin," not dead in sin; therefore must mean righteous ones. They are dead now for the burial, ver. 4;—"Therefore we are buried with him (Christ) by baptism into death." They die, are buried, yet they live; "that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, . . . even so we also should walk in newness of life." He that is thus dead, buried, yet resurrected and alive, "is freed from sin." It is very evident here who are meant by "we." Now look a little further, ver. 14;—"For sin shall not have dominion over you." Why, Paul, shall sin not have dominion over those who "are alive from the dead"? Ver. 14;—"FOR YE ARE NOT UNDER THE LAW, but UNDER GRACE"! Is that so, Paul? Then we can sin without restraint, if we are not under the law? Paul: "GOD FORBID!" "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." But God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered to you."

The apostle hereby teaches important facts. 1st. Although their relation is changed, as it respects the old law, so that they are no longer under that "schoolmaster," but are "under grace," i. e., as elsewhere expressed, are "under the law to Christ,"—he has become their teacher and lawgiver; and as they formerly were servants to the law, which could neither justify nor give life,—so now, having yielded themselves servants to Christ, they must be obedient unto righteousness. As the doctrine of Christ was in opposition to sin of every description, in order for them to obey "from the heart that form of doctrine whereto [they] were delivered" (margin), they must necessarily abstain from sin. The first clause of this verse, according to able critics, should read: "Though ye were the servants of sin, ye have obeyed," etc. We see by the references given that the "we" of the 6th chapter refers to holy persons, the true believer, and that we "are not under the law," vers. 14, 15, but that they have been delivered therefrom, for the express purpose of being brought under a new "form of doctrine," unto which they were now to be subservient. See ver. 17, with marginal reading.

This very argument is carried out in the seventh chapter under the figure of the woman which hath a husband. By law she is bound to that husband as "long as he liveth"; but if he "be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband." If married while her husband lives, she becomes an adulteress; but if he dies, "she is free from that law," and may marry another, and be no adulteress. "Wherefore, my brethren," i. e., for which reason; showing that this is a parallel case; "ye also," likewise, or, in like manner, "are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be MARRIED TO ANOTHER, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." As it respects the obligation of the marriage law, it matters not whether the husband be actually dead, or the law which binds the wife to that husband be abrogated; she is not bound in either case; but, as touching marriage with another, it does make a difference. To illustrate: The laws of the land allow of a disannulling of the marriage covenant for various causes beside fornication, and the party freed by law is permitted to marry again. The Bible, however, releases from the marriage covenant only on the ground of adultery, or death. If a divorce be granted on any other ground, the parties cannot lawfully be married to another; but if they marry they are accounted adulterers. Matt. 5: 31, 32.

Now in the case before us, the marriage is a lawful one between Christ and the church. On what ground does it become so? by divorce, or death? Is the former husband still living, while the church is united with the new Bridegroom—Christ? That the law is represented by the figure of the husband who by death releases the wife, is evident from the language of the 4th verse: "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law." Just as the wife is released by death from her husband, and may lawfully marry again; so ye also are released from the law, that ye may "be married to another," even Christ, and the fruit of such an alliance will be legitimate. "For when we were in the flesh," in an unrenewed state, "the motions of sin, which were by the law," excited even by its very prohibition, and made apparent, "did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death." "But now we are delivered from the law," just as represented by the illustration and application of ver. 4, "that being dead wherein we were held," etc.

Having, as we opine, clearly shown from the apostle's previous argument that the pronoun we represents "saints" instead of "sinners," those who have been married to Christ, by submitting to "that form of doctrine" he delivers to them, not the Sinaic, but the New Jerusalem Covenant; we will now proceed in our examination of this noted text, "one of the strong forts" of the Sabbatarian. We will examine it in the light of the various renderings given by able Bible critics. From these it must be clearly evident to the unprejudiced mind, that the persons represented by the pronoun are by some death process "freed," "absolved," "released," "separated," and become "dead unto" "law," by which they "were bound," in the grasp of which they were once "held;" and now, in view of such evidence, can any one say that those persons are not "freed," "released," and "separated from that law"? Just as consistently argue that the contraband, once in the bondage of slavery, under a slave law, but now released by the emancipation act, is still bound to his master, still under the laws that held him in servitude. Those who prefer bondage to liberty, can remain under the yoke; but vain would be their attempt to persuade those who have been made free, that they are not released, but are still bound by that law under which they were once slaves. President Lincoln, to whom belonged the authority, has proclaimed them free, and we think they will quite generally choose to stand fast in that liberty wherewith he hath made them free, and not seek to be again entangled in the yoke of bondage.

That we do not misapply this figure, we have evidence from Paul's argument, Gal. 4: 21–31. Here the apostle teaches that the first covenant, which was from Sinai, was one of bondage. Hagar, the bond-woman of Abraham, was its representative, and she "gendereth to bondage." Her children are bond slaves. This Hagar also represents "Jerusalem, which is in bondage with her children." Hagar, Sinai, Jerusalem, are representatives of bondage. They are allegories of what? The old covenant, "from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage. Whom does Sarah, the married wife of Abraham, the free-woman, represent? The new covenant. Paul says that Sarah and Hagar are, allegorically, "the two covenants." "The first covenant" was written on two tables of stone, and "had ordinances of divine service." That the law of God, the ten commandments, were "the covenant," see Ex. 34: 28; Deut. 9: 9, 11, 15.

Sarah, the free-woman, is a representative of the new covenant emanating from the New "Jerusalem, which is above," which "is free," "the mother of us all," i. e., of the children of promise, as was Isaac. Well, now, shall Abraham marry the bond-woman and adopt Ishmael to joint heirship with Isaac? Not so. "Cast out the bond-woman and her son, for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free." What does this casting out, or rejection of the bond-woman and her child shadow forth? What [illegible] the abolishment of the covenant symbolized, with its children? Let us then not seek to wed what God has divorced, and amalgamate what he has rejected; but let us be the children of the free-woman. M. D. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Since my last way sketch, I have journeyed and labored in the State of Maine among the scattered flock, and I trust my feeble efforts have not been in vain in the Lord. As I am now about to leave for the old Bay State, and the granite hills of my own dear native home, I sit down to sketch a word by the way.

From Etna campmeeting, I journeyed toward the east, and held two evening meetings in the town of Levant, in a school house. Had a good hearing, and sowed good seed in tears, with the aid of the Spirit. Hope the seed sown may not be lost. Next to Hermon Chapel, Sunday, Sept. 18th. Here God has had a faithful, humble people, that were not ashamed to step out on his word and warn the worldly men of their approaching doom. Only a remnant are now left to watch for the morning. Those were comforted with the words of cheer I brought them. The house was filled with attentive listeners, and some soldiers wiped the falling tear. One of them was a christian, and was reclaimed from a backslidden state while in the hospital.

Bangor, Sunday, Sept. 25th. Meeting in the school-house. A faithful few are still pressing onward through the storm, making for the harbor, expecting soon to land "safe on the evergreen shore." God watered my poor heart, while I tried to comfort others with the faithful word. In compliance with an invitation from a sister in North Bangor, where there were no Adventists, I cheerfully went, and held a meeting in the school-house. It was well filled with attentive listeners, while I preached Christ and his second coming. I find myself with Free-will Babtists, Methodists, C. Baptists, and Christians. All were attentive, and treated me kindly. They took a collection, and invited me to come again, which I did some weeks after. Left my testimony with them, and faithfully warned the wicked and the cold-hearted professor of the coming day of wrath, and I trust in the judgment none will rise up against me and say I did not warn them of their coming doom. After holding four meetings in Bangor, I left for Brewer. Had the privilege of speaking in the Methodist meeting-house, in Eddington, two evenings, from 1 Thess. 5: 4;—"But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." God gave me perfect victory in speaking. May he seal the truth to some poor unbelieving heart. I held some evening meetings in Brewer, and the scattered children were blest in coming together. I felt the assurance that some good was accomplished. To God be all the glory.

From Bangor, I took the Steamer and went to Searsport. Friends met me at the wharf and took me to a good shelter from the rain, and gave me a nice dinner, which was thankfully enjoyed.

Went to North Searsport, to attend my appointment on Sunday, Oct. 2nd. Met quite a company of attentive listeners, in a school-house, and had good freedom in dispensing the word of life. The scattered flock who love the appearing of Jesus were encouraged to persevere in the narrow way to the kingdom, believing it not far in the future. Held some evening meetings through the week, which were duly appreciated by those who are looking for Jesus, and are hoping the resurrection is near.

Attended a funeral in the meeting-house. Sermon preached by a Methodist. The house was crowded, and ere I was hardly aware, I found myself in the singers' seats. I got along very well in singing the first hymn; but when the second was read, I thought it would be a hard one to sing; however, I thought I could not back out, and with others arose and sang,—

"Why should we start and fear to die?
What tim'rous worms we mortals are?"

I got along very well with the first two lines, but when the other part of the verse appeared before me,—

"Death is the gate to endless joy,
And yet we dread to enter there,"—

it looked so much like one of Satan's lies, that I got stuck, stopped short off, and let those who believed that doctrine sing it, while I rested a moment, and then chimed in my voice again, and sung the remainder of the hymn.

Sunday, Oct. 9th, I attended my appointment at Searsport Village. Meeting in a hall. Quite a gathering through the day and evening. Here we met Bro. Reed, a faithful preacher of the glad tidings of the coming kingdom, who had come to worship God, and to aid us in our services. There are but few in this place and No. Searsport that are looking for the Master, and they prize a visit from those of like precious faith very highly; and they are hoping and praying Bro. Grant will visit them again; and no doubt much good would be the result. We held meetings with them Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. Some were very happy in prospect of our soon coming Lord.

Sunday, Oct. 16th, attended my appointment at Frankfort. Our meetings were held through the week. Here, God has a faithful, humble company of loving believers, that are growing in grace and in knowledge. They have a faithful pastor there, who is able to rightly divide the word of truth, and give to each a portion of meat in due season. The house was well filled each evening through the week.

Being invited by a friend to our views to go to the town of Jackson, where the Advent doctrine had never been preached, I thought my Master would have me go; and accordingly went Sunday morning, Oct. 23d. After arriving, we rested awhile with a Free-will Baptist family, who kindly received us, and were very favorable to the doctrine of the near coming of Jesus. The school-house being near, we soon commenced our Sunday's labor. An intelligent looking company gathered together. Here I met Bro. Reed again, who had come to help us in the hedge. God gave me great liberty in speaking in the afternoon, and some witnessed to the truth. One prominent Free-will brother arose, and said he believed the doctrine I had preached. I had preached the coming of Jesus as plain (and the signs betokening its nearness) as in any other place. Only the day previous, this good man had made up his mind he should not come to the meeting; but had finally concluded to come, and the result was glorious. So that hedge was removed, thank the Lord. I was invited to tarry and hold meetings through the week, but having other engagements, I felt I must fulfill them; but they were so urgent that we should stay in the evening, we consented to do so. The servants of the Lord lent a helping hand. God bless the friends who fed us, and all others who so kindly received us; and have mercy on poor careless sinners, who have no hope in Jesus. We left for North Searsport at ten o'clock, and arrived at Bro. Walter Nichols' at the midnight hour.

Tuesday morning, bade the friends farewell in that region, returned to Bangor, and took the cars for Kendall's Mills. Visited with the two families that are looking for redemption, tarried two nights, had one meeting, was helped on my way by those brethren after a godly sort, and then left in the cars for Augusta. Met Sister Lovejoy at the depot, who conducted me to her pilgrim home.

Sunday, Oct. 30th, I spoke three times in the Advent hall, and by the help of God I was enabled to speak with great freedom; and the result was some eight or ten arose for prayers, mostly soldiers; a class surely which deserves our sympathy. Some of them spoke in our evening meetings, and manifested a desire to be christians. We tried to point them to Christ, and prayed for them; but alas! a call to the army, and they are gone; and the influence which will surround them will soon drown all their serious impressions, I fear. Our brethren and sisters were somewhat scattered, and in a low state. Some had wandered from the Lord, and lost their enjoyment, but God was merciful and brought back some of his wandering children. Praise his name. I tarried with them three Sabbaths, and held meetings every evening in the week. I truly felt my Master had called me to Augusta, and was loth to leave them; but I felt it duty to go to other places, and try to reach some poor sinner's heart. Lord help me.

Went to Lewiston, and had two evening meetings. Found a few hungry children, that were glad to feed upon the good crumbs which fall from the Master's table. God bless them and keep them to the end.

Next to Yarmouth, over the Sabbath and Thanksgiving day, and then to Biddeford. I have tarried here two weeks, and three Sundays. Meetings every evening, which were interesting, and I trust profitable to us all.

We have heard the sound for some years in the past, that Jesus was coming in 1868; but it has affected us as a people but very little. Now, as we are just coming into the morning watch, the cry grows louder, nearer, and still nearer it comes. Praise the Lord. I am glad some are not afraid of the definite time; and if the church moves out, I am going, too, for "I will be in this band, Hallelujah." Amen.

SUPPLICATION.

On time's dark wave I doubting stand,
And look to yon bright peaceful shore;
I long to reach that happy land,
Where doubts and sorrows are no more.

But ah! between that shore and me,
The waves are rolling mountain high;
And if thou dost not save, I see
That I must surely fall and die.

O save me, Lord, in this dark hour,
The tempest now is gathering fast;
O lead me onward by thy power,
That I may reach the shore at last.

In my own strength I cannot go,
I trust in thee, oh Lord, for aid;
Oh help me now the way to know,
And may I never be afraid.

And may this dark and stormy way,
Where doubts and cares and fears molest,
Grow brighter to the perfect day,
When thou shalt give thy people rest.

HINTS TO PARENTS.—BAD FOLKS.

CHILDREN AT HOME, CHILDREN ABROAD.

Teach your children to behave well at home, politely, modestly, obediently—to know when to speak and how to speak—ere you take them abroad.

Never, dear parents, impose upon your neighbors or friends with your unruly, self-willed, disobedient children, as you value your reputation, the peace, safety, good wishes and happiness of those around you, and the best interests of the community. What imposition greater could you possibly inflict on your friends? It's a bare-faced, outstanding violation of the golden rule principle! It's trampling, ungenerously, on good feeling, friendship, hospitality, and kindred affection.

We have known some parents make a long visit to the house of some friend or relative, with rude, ill-mannered, impudent, boisterous, outlandish urchins, disturbing the peace, quietness, aud happiness of every one in their reach, ransacking every nook and corner of the house, turning and overturning! A bear robbed of her whelps could scarcely be more dreadful or annoying. Children are imitative beings, and good children are frequently spoiled or greatly injured by the society of wicked associations. "Evil communications corrupt good manners," "One sinner," though a little sinner, "destroyeth much good."

Parents that have any just or due appreciation of the importance of training their offspring for God, in the way they should go, would rather see a serpent, a stinging adder, yes, the plague itself, enter their dwelling than these reckless, idolized, disobedient intruders.

Parent, we beseech you, as you value friendship, kindness, hospitality, brotherly love, peace, harmony, good will, eternal life, not to impose on good sense and good nature. How glad soever your friends may be to see you and entertain you hospitably, yet their rejoicing will be tenfold when you depart. Be wise to-day. Be wise for yourself, your children, your friends, for time, for eternity.

Train up your little ones early for God, in the way they should go, in strict obedience, in the path of duty, sobriety, in all that is lovely and praiseworthy. Make them polished stones, living examples of loveliness, purity, and consistency, olive plants around your table. Then their appearance every where will be hailed gladly, thankfully, joyfully. Otherwise, keep them at home till they learn good manners.

"O it is a sad'ning sight,
When children go astray,
Forsaking what is good and right,
To walk in Satan's way."

D. F. NEWTON, Author of Home Thrusts.

THE WARFARE OF SECTS.—Though we all profess to own one Lord, one faith, one baptism; though Jesus Christ never was, and never will be, divided in himself; yet the followers of Jesus Christ have in all ages been sadly divided among themselves; and what has rendered the case the more to be pitied is, that they have generally been divided about the circumstantials of religion; they have generally received one another to doubtful disputation, and embittered one another's hearts, by talking about those things which they might either do or not do, either know or not know, and yet at the same time be the true followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. I am verily persuaded that this is the great artifice and engine of the devil.—Whitfield.

FASHION AND WOMEN.

The laws of fashion are as inexorable as the laws of the Bible, and, unlike the latter, in keeping of them there is little reward. It is hard service and small pay. An exchange gives the following view of the matter:

"Fashion kills more women than toil and sorrow. Obedience to fashion is a transgression of the laws of woman's nature; is a greater injury to her physical and mental constitution than the hardships of poverty and neglect. The slavewoman will live and grow old, and see two or three generations of her mistresses fade and pass away. The washerwoman, with scarcely a ray of hope to cheer her in her toils, will live to see her fashionable sisters all die around her. The kitchen-maid is hearty and strong, when her mistress has to be nursed like a sick baby.

It is a melancholy truth, that fashion-pampered women are almost worthless for all the great ends of human life. They have but little force of human character; they have still less power of moral will, and quite as little physical energy. They live for no great purpose through life; they accomplish no worthy ends. They are doll-forms in the hands of milliners and servants, to be dressed and fed to order. They dress nobody; they feed nobody; they instruct nobody; they bless nobody and they save nobody. They write no books, they set no rich example of virtue and woman life. If they rear children, servants and nurses do all save to conceive and give them birth. And when reared, what are they? What do they ever amount to, but weaker scions of the stock? Who ever heard of a fashionable woman's child exhibiting any virtue or power of mind for which it became eminent? Read the biographies of our great and good men and women. Not one of them had a fashionable mother. They nearly all sprung from strong-minded women, who had about as much to do with fashion as the changing clouds.—Ex.

THE DECAY OF CONVERSATION.

The ancient art of talking is falling into decay. It is an ascertainable fact that, in proportion to an increased amount of population, the aggregate bulk of conversation is lessening. People now-a-days have something else to do than talk; not only do they live in such hurry that there is only leisure for just comparing ideas as to the weather, but they have each and all a gross quantity to do, which puts talking out of the question. If persons remain at home, they read; if they journey by rail, they read; if they go to the seaside, they read; we have met misguided individuals out in the open fields with books in hand; young folks have been seen stretched underneath trees, and upon the banks of rivers, pouring over pages; on the tops of mountains, in the desert, or within forests—everywhere men pull printed sheets from their pockets, and in the earliest, latest, highest occupations of life, they read. The fact is incontestibly true, that modern men and women are reading themselves into a comparatively silent race. Reading is the great delusion of the present time; it has become a sort of lay piety; according to which, the perusal of volumes reckons as good works; it is, in a word, the superstition of the nineteenth century.—Chambers' Journal.

WHO IS OUR NEIGHBOR?

I stepped into the library one day to exchange a book, and had been there but a few moments when a colored man came in. He removed his hat at the door, and stood looking at the librarian, who sat writing at a table. As soon as the latter raised his eyes, the negro bowed respectfully, and said,—

"Are you busy, sir?"

"Yes, I am," was the reply; and I was surprised to hear so petulant a tone from one who had always been so pleasant and obliging to me.

"Then, sir, I will call at another time;" and the man was going, when the librarian called out in a crosser tone than before,—

"I'm always busy; Iv'e no time to attend to you: if you've any bnsiness with me, the sooner it's over with the better."

The business occupied about five minutes, and certainly was not troublesome enough to call forth so much bitterness. I had, before this time, thought the librarian a gentleman; but my opinion changed at that time; and I felt, that you need to see how people treat the down-trodden, in order to know their real character. It does not follow, because a man uses you politely, that he has that genuine kindness of heart that constitutes true politeness.

How long will it be before the black man will receive that respect which is his due? Is he not our brother, made in the image of God?

Let us all rejoice, that God is releasing this oppressed race from the cruel bondage in which they have been so long held; but we have many duties to perform towards them. They are without the means of obtaining that education which we prize so much. Ought we not to give them freely such privileges as God has bestowed on us?—Well Spring.

GARIBALDI.

It is not easy to conceive anything finer, simpler, more thoroughly unaffected, or more truly dignified than the man himself. His noble head; his clear, honest, brown eye; his finely traced mouth, beautiful as a woman's, and only strung up to sternness when anything ignoble or mean had outraged him; and last of all, his voice contains a fascination perfectly irresistible—allied, as you know and felt these graces were, with a thoroughly pure, untarnished nature. The true measure of the man lies in the fact that, though his life has been a series of the boldest and most daring achievements, his courage is about the very last quality uppermost in your mind when you meet him. It is the winning softness of his look and manner, his kind thoughtfulness for others, his sincere pity for all suffering, his gentleness, his modesty, his manly sense of brotherhood with the very humblest of the men who have loved him, that you may think: these are the traits that throw all his heroism into shadow; and all the glory of the conqueror pales before the simple virtues of the man.—Blackwood.

THE GENTLEMAN.—No man is a gentleman who, without provocation, would treat with incivility the humblest of his species. It is a vulgarity for which no accomplishment of dress or address can ever atone. Show us the man who desires to make every one happy around him, and whose greatest solicitude is never to give just cause of offence to any one, and we will show you a gentleman by nature and by practice, though he may never have worn a suit of broadcloth, nor even heard of a lexicon.

POTATO PUDDING.—Bruise with a wooden spoon, through a colander, twelve middle-sized boiled potatoes; beat up four eggs, and mix these with a pint of good milk; then stir in the potatoes, add sugar and seasoning to your taste, butter the dish and bake half an hour. This recipe is simple and economical, as it is made of what is wasted in most families, viz., cold potatoes, which may be kept two or three days, till a sufficient quantity is collected. A tea-spoonful of Scotch marmalade makes a delicious seasoning.—American Artisan.

To thaw out frozen Pumps.—A pint of salt has been found generally sufficient. Two pints have been found enough to thaw through three feet deep. An hour's time suffices in ordinary cases.—Vermont Phenix.

HYGIENE.—NO. I.

BY IRA A. THAYER, M. D.

In my article on the importance of self-knowledge, I attempted to show, in a brief manner, that it was absolutely necessary in order to the enjoyment of a clear, strong mind, and a well-developed moral nature, that the physical man must first be developed; and, in order to the proper cultivation of the animal economy, it is necessary that the individual should possess a knowledge of the laws which govern his organism. That if you would become great, mentally, first become strong cerebraly. Would you become great men, first become powerful animals? Not that all great animals are powerful men, but all great men are necessarily powerful animals.

Health is the absence of disease. To prevent or remove diseases, then, insures health. Disease is the effect of a cause. To remove the cause, must prevent disease and secure health.

DISEASE

is "a derivation from the natural physiological condition of the entire system, constituting general disease." We will now notice the forces which act on the materials of which the body is composed, producing all the varied actions of the system, both in health and disease. In the human body, as well as in all living organisms, we find two separate and distinct kinds of force, which are antagonistic to each other. These have been termed the vital and the chemical forces.

The vital force is that power, which from a single cell, builds up the entire organism; separates from the nutritious materials furnished it, those portions which form the different organs of secretion, excretion, and innervation; supplies the waste of the tissues, and tends to keep the body intact. But in the chemical force we recognize the cause of the waste of the body, the disintegration of the tissues, the change of matter from a higher to a lower grade of organization, [illegible] all the retrograde tendencies in the body, from a state of health, to disease and death. Health, then, consists in the maintenance of the proper equilibrium between the vital force which builds up the system, and the chemical force which causes disorganization. Life itself is a forced state of being, caused by a preponderance of the vital force; every atom of the body having a constant tendency to revert back into its original elements. This change taking place in the entire body produces death; but in portions of the body, it produces disease.

Then any cause which diminishes the vital force, thereby giving preponderance to the chemical, becomes a cause of disease; or any cause which increases, or gives greater intensity to the chemical changes going on in the body, also becomes a cause of disease—providing the changes are not antagonized by the vital force.

I come now to speak of the causes which disturb these two great forces, and give a preponderance to the chemical force. The first, and probably the most prolific which we will consider, is improper food and food improperly taken. When we consider that our bodies are composed of what we eat and drink, it would seem quite necessary that we look into the character of our food. The food taken into the stomach is digested and absorbed into the circulation, and when it contains a deleterious substance, it tends to disorganize the blood, and gives a balance of power to the chemical force. And food, otherwise wholesome, when poorly prepared, or when improperly taken, impares digestion, and thus tends to diminish vital force.

Pork is one of the most common articles of diet, and also one of the most injurious. It has been said that all things were created for some wise purpose. Very true. We read that Christ used the hogs to drown devils. They certainly can never be used for a better purpose. The effect of pork upon the blood is to overload it with carbonic acid gas, and fill it with scrofula. The hog is an unhealthy animal. He is an inveterate gormandizer. He lives on filth, he wallows in filth, and is himself a living mass of filth. I remarked that we were composed of the food we eat. How felicitating to the pork-eater the reflection that he is physically and mentally part hog! Says Dr. Foot: "The humeral properties and inflammatory effects which imparts to the blood, actually tends to generate vermin in the system. Grub in the liver, kidneys, lungs, and other organs, not unfrequently have their origin in the use of this filthy article of food." The "Gazette Medicale" asserts that the tape-worm only troubles those who eat pork; that the Hebrews are never troubled with it; that pork-butchers are particularly liable to it; that dogs fed on pork are universally so affected; in fact it turns out that a small parasite worm, called crysticerous which affects pork, no sooner reaches the stomach than from the change of diet and position, it is metamorphosed into the well-known tape-worm; and the experiments of M. Kuchenineister of Zittaria, made with great professional care and minuteness of detail upon a condemned criminal, have established the fact beyond contradiction. (See also my article on Scrofula in Crisis of July 5th, '64.)

OTHER PERNICIOUS

articles of food in popular use are pickles, jams, jellies, apple-butter, pies, condiments, such as spice, pepper, cinnamon, nutmeg, etc. These articles furnish but little or no nourishment, while they irritate the alimentary canal, poison the blood, excite a morbid appetite, and produce indigestion. They are generally used as "digesters," thinking that they aid the stomach in digestion; but this is a mistake; they tend directly to weaken digestion, and injure the taste. Many persons seem to think that a sick person, unable to eat bread or potato, must certainly be allowed a little "jell," or "jam." They would think you crazy, or ignorant of medicine, if you would proscribe jam, and prescribe potato. Many a case of malignant disease owe their fatal termination to the use of such articles during the sickness. They are highly injurious to the healthy, much more so to the sick.

The custom of using warm bread, in the form of biscuit, pan-cakes, etc., is another great cause of dyspepsia. Warm bread, when introduced into the stomach, is rolled up in a tough, doughy mass, and is very difficult to digest, and produces oppression in the stomach.

The manner of cooking many kinds of food, otherwise nutritious, renders them indigestible and inert. The habit of burning meat, instead of frying it properly, destroys it as an article of nourishment. Meat should n[illegible] be more than "rare done." Potatoes sh[illegible] be boiled dry, roasted, or baked, never fried. Bread should be raised with yeast and eaten cold. Eggs should never be cooked hard. Fruits should be used in as natural a state as possible—never should be concentrated. Ripe, unconcentrated fruit should enter largely in the diet; especially of the weak and sedentary. When meat is required, use beef, mutton, fish or fowl. The flesh of wild animals is easier of digestion than that of domesticated animals. The flesh of very young animals should never be used.

Students, literary men, and all persons of sedentary habits, should seldom, or never use meat; especially the dark, stimulating meats. No one should use much meat in warm weather. Meat is stimulating, heating, and when introduced into the system in large quantities, overloads it with carbonaceous matter which, with the increased heat externally, tends to prostrate the excretory organs, and bring on fevers, cholera, dysentery, liver complaints, etc. I would especially warn mothers against feeding their children the products of meat; such as rich gravies, etc. Milk is the natural food for infants, and when they become older, and require more food than their mother's afford, good cow's milk with light bread, fruit, etc., is their natural diet. But the common custom is to set their blood on fire by the use of a stimulating animal diet, and then when their little systems are borne down with disease, the doctors bring them to death with poison and unnatural medicine. Then "its the Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away," and the doctor is a fine man. No, mothers, the Lord never takes an infant from your arms, or a blooming youth from your family circle. If such an one dies, rest assured that the fault lies either with the person deceased, the parents, or nurses, or the doctor; more frequently the latter two. Don't charge the Deity with killing your children. It is blasphemous. Mothers, in your hands lies the fate of future generations. Sister, THINK, ACT.

With reference to the number of meals per day, there is a great diversity of opinion among medical men. Some advise but two meals under any circumstances; others three, and some advise to eat four or five times per day, and but a small quantity to a meal. But as regards the quantity of food taken, and the number of meals, in twenty-four hours, no definite rule can be laid down. Much depends upon the occupation of the individual, upon the weather, upon the strength of the digestives, upon the kind of food used, etc. The laboring class, working out of doors ten or twelve hours a day, should certainly eat oftener than the sedentary. There should always be about six hours between meals, and there should never be more than three meals during the twenty-four hours. And for students, and men of sedentary habits, especially in winter, two meals is probably sufficient. Where three meals are taken, the supper should be very light, and should be taken at least three hours before retiring. When food is taken just before going to sleep, it remains in the stomach very imperfectly digested, ferments, disturbs the rest, produces night-mare, and frightful dreams, and destroys the appetite for breakfast.

A patient once presented himself to Dr. Cutter, complaining of disturbed rest, and of dreaming of seeing his dead father very frequently. The doctor, upon inquiry into the patient's habits, found that he was accustomed to eating a quarter of mince pie every night on retiring. The doctor remarked that if he would eat a half of a pie, he would probably see his grand-father.

A person should be nearly an hour in masticating an ordinary meal, that it may become thoroughly insalivated, or mixed with the juice of the mouth; should take but little fluid with the food, or for some time afterward. When fluid is taken into the stomach, digestion is suspended until the fluid is absorbed; besides the fluid dilutes the gastric juice,—the great agent in stomachic digestion. For half an hour before the meal, and an hour after, the person should rest. If food is introduced into the stomach when the system is exhausted, when the nervous energy is attracted from the stomach, or where labor is resumed immediately after eating a meal, the stomach is weakened, and indigestion is the consequence. What is true of physical labor in this respect, is true of mental. Rest before eating prepares the stomach for the reception of the food, by loosing the nervous powers from other organs; and after the meal it attains the nervous forces to operate in digestion.

Thus, briefly, I close this article on improper food as a cause of disease. I am necessarily brief in the consideration of the causes of disease; to enumerate them all, would require more time and labor than I can devote to the subject, and more patience than the general reader possesses.
